THE TWENTY-THIRD VOLUME.

The Cynosure opens another year with a discussion which promises to be of vast importance to American colleges, and thus to the country at large. If it be true that a very large proportion of college-bred men are called by their fellow citizens to fill places of public trust and influence, then it must be a matter of infinite concern that in the institutions where these leaders in society, politics and the church are trained there should be no organizations injecting lodge-poisoned blood into their veins. The college fraternity has had little effectual opposition, except of a local nature. It flourishes in most of our larger institutions. But it is vulnerable, and a fair and general discussion and united action is only needed to overthrow it. The discussion begun in the present number with the remarks of Rev. Dr. Goodwin of the First Congregational Church, Chicago, promises to be of general interest, and, under God, may lead to a concerted and influential movement for reform in our colleges.

We have now ready the views of Horace Mann, Miss F. E. Willard, Pres. A. A. Smith, Pres. J. A. McFarland and others, which will appear in early numbers, and make way for a large number of contributions from students, professors and others on this topic.

The passage of the tariff bill by the Senate with the reciprocity amendments for which Mr. Blaine contended so earnestly, is a victory for free trade as well as for that gentleman. Among the Republican leaders, Senator Sherman like Secretary Blaine has always advocated a high protective policy. Free trade in the estimation of these gentlemen was a gross political heresy. But reciprocity, which is free trade modified, or by another name, is now the wisest and best policy for the nation. Mr. Sherman has a bill providing for free trade in coal with Canada on similar reciprocal principles. We congratulate these distinguished men on their adoption of common sense views of international commerce. Reciprocal free trade among all nations will as a rule secure to each the best possible development of their natural resources and will relieve the laboring classes from the vast tax "protection" imposes on them.

A much-needed work is being undertaken by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of this city against vicious literature. Copies of the law of Illinois prohibiting such infectious trash are put in all places of business where it is generally found. This law is very strict. Not only is the sale of obscene literature and pictures forbidden, but their exhibition "within the view of any minor child." This law covers such papers as the Police Gazette, and persons violating it are liable to a fine of from $100 to $1,000, or to be confined in jail six months. We hope the W. C. T. U. will be able to cauterize this cancer, which not even the society which Anthony Comstock represents is able to reach.

REV. E. P. GOODWIN, D. D.

The corner-stone of the Temperance Temple, whose strong foundations are being prepared near the Board of Trade building in this city, will be laid November 1st. The site had several years ago been prepared for the finest office building in the city and country by the owner, Marshal Field. The foundations were of immense strength and encroached on adjacent property. Litigation followed and Mr. Field had to change his plan. On leasing the site to Mrs. Carse the old foundation had to be partly removed for the Temple plan, and this labor postpones the corner-stone laying which was expected early this month. The plan now outlined is a procession of temperance children with banners, and addresses by Miss Frances E. Willard and Senator T. W. Palmer of Detroit, Mich., who is president of the World's Columbian Exposition. It is also expected that Senator H. W. Blair of New Hampshire, Senator A. H. Colquitt of Georgia, and Joseph Cook of Boston will be among the invited guests and make short addresses.

The death of the Roman Catholic Cardinal Newman of England has been noticed by many religious papers in a manner to mislead the ordinary reader who may be unacquainted with his life. His hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light," is called immortal and given a place with "Rock of Ages," "My Faith looks up to thee," and similar devotional hymns. These notices whether so intended or not have the effect of giving the credit of Newman's life to the Roman church. But the fact is that he was reared in the English state church, and was a companion and friend of the eminent Dr. Whately. He was an earnest antagonist of the Roman church for years during the most vigorous part of his life, and his earnest controversial spirit led him into the "tractarian" movement with Dr. Pusey, and the opposition which was aroused finally turned him about and pushed him into Romanism in 1845. The single poem for which he will be best remembered was written twelve years before this time, and in comparison with the hymns of Toplady, Cowper, Wesley, and Watts, can never be compared in respect to its religious sentiment, of which it is nearly barren. As a piece of composition it is remarkably beautiful.

One of the daughters of the late William H. Vanderbilt, Mrs. Elliott Shepard, and her relative, the present Mrs. W. H. Vanderbilt, are founding institutions for the comfort and help of the working men and women of New York. Mrs. Shepard is building at her own expense a lodging house for self-supporting women, which it is hoped will be a practical help for this large and deserving class. Mrs. Vanderbilt is erecting an institution for the popular entertainment and instruction of the poorer classes of New York on the plan of similar institutions in London which have proved immensely beneficial in that city. These are commendable movements and ought to help open yet more widely the hearts and purses of these wealthy women for the benefit of their suffering fellow-men. A well-known Chicago millionaire who has invested a large fortune in a missionary and educational establishment in this city is said to highly enjoy the pleasure his efforts have given to multitudes of the poor, and many hope he will continue to give and enjoy his wealth more and more in this way.

A COLLEGE FRATERNITY LESSON.

BY REV. E. P. GOODWIN, D. D., CHICAGO.

The whole drift and tendency of secret societies, so far as I have observed, has been, and is, thoroughly selfish. If that is true, then it is in antagonism squarely with the doctrine of the Word of God. In all these lodges, in every one of these different orders, whatever benevolence is proposed is simply and purely for the benefits of the particular order or circle concerned. That is not the Bible; that is not the Gospel of Jesus Christ, by any manner of means. The Gospel does not know any Jew, nor Gentile, nor barbarian. It goes down alongside of every man and woman and child and throws its arm around them and says: You are invited to be an heir with us in the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ. You are to share all we receive, and you are to labor with us in the spreading of this Gospel that seeks to make every man, black or white, rich or poor, a prince and a ruler in the kingdom.

When I was in college, it was my experience, like many poor boys, to have to fight my way alone. The consequence was that when I got to college I knew very little Latin and still less Greek; but I got in through the skin of my teeth because I knew a little about mathematics. I did not know anything about college life or about societies, did not even know there was such a thing as a secret society. After I had been a few weeks at college, the representative of a society came to me and said that they belonged to such a secret society, and invited me to join. I made inquiries and found that that society was the one that stood lowest in respect of scholarship. They did not make any point of that. I said, "That is a compliment to my stupidity." I don't mean I was quite at the foot of the class, though pretty low down; but I was climbing slowly.

And then I said: Why don't the other societies want me to join? They were waiting to see whether I could prove myself a fit fellow.

Well, by and by I got up a little further, and there came another delegation from another society and urged me to join. I found that society No. 2 had a sprinkling of pretty fair scholars, but they were not distinguished. Said I, that is a proof I am getting on. I am glad of that: I will write it home to my mother and tell her not to be discouraged about her son. Well, some time after, delegates came to me from another society—there were not so many of them as now—and they were very polite and complimentary, and quite urgent that I should join their society. They said, "You know we always have the good scholars; we never have any of those fellows down there (meaning the other societies) with us. We are the most distinguished fellows around here; we take the honors. There is our catalogue, so and so, these with titles, high up in public life; these are our men. That is the sort of fellowship you want to be in, and more than that, if you come in with us, we will help you whenever you come to the tough places in any of your mathematical problems. We have got them all worked out." We were reading Greek tragedy, and they said, "We will do your 'ponying,' help you write your essays, put you through in everything, and make you an honor man." Now, says I, I am really getting up. I felt very comfortable. I really began to think I might come to something. I was unfortunate like a number of men in my class. We had not wealthy parents to help us on our way. We had to fight our way; to teach school and take care of horses and cows and work at our trades, and get our Greek and Latin by hard digging. Such an offer was therefore very tempting; but somehow it did not strike me that way. It stirred my blood, and made me very indignant, and I said to these fellows, "You come to me, not because there is any good fellowship about me, not because you have any respect for my manhood, not because you think there is anything good in me, but because you think I can be of some value to you; that through you I may be able to secure some college honor; become a Phi Beta Kappa man,—the college honor society—and so reflect credit on you. I despise that sort of thing! A man is a man, no matter what may be his lack of accomplishments, and I will have nothing to do with your society!"

Then I cast about and saw that there was an anti-secret society, and I said, that is the place for me, and I joined that. It had for its motto, "Nothing Secret," and we wore those words in Greek on the key which was our badge.

What did I see in college as to these societies? This: That when we came to the elections, society men were invariably put forward, and that irrespective of their ability or character. They were the men they proposed to push; and not only would that particular society of which they were members push them, but in order to beat us, the outside fellows, all the societies would combine together. Three years of that sort of thing made me a pretty thorough anti-secrecy man, and ever since I have been moving along on those lines, insisting anywhere and everywhere that merit should be put forward in the forum, in the church, in the state, everywhere, as the test of men; not membership in some lodge or secret club or political ring.

We unite with the Congregationalist and other influential religious journals in deprecating the increase and the dominating influence of secret societies. We recognize the evil especially among the colored people of the South, to whom the tinsel, the parades, the ceremonies and the secrecy of these orders are very attractive. In most cases these people spend time and money that are needed for their families and for the support of their churches; and the danger is that the lodge usurp the place in their confidence that is due to God and his ordinances. The evil grows, and where is the remedy? This Association uses all the legitimate influence it can exert to discourage secret societies in its schools and churches in the South.—American Missionary for September.

THE BLAST OF THE MOUNTAIN.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

Wind of the mountain! that blows o'er the billow,
Sweeping in transport o'er forest and plain;
King of the hills! o'er the pine and the willow
Chant thy sweet anthems of freedom again.
The wild harp of Morven on Scotia's high mountains
Hath not such sweet musical numbers as thou;
Nor stream of the lowland, nor-bright warbling fountains
Can thrill like thy breath o'er the traveler's brow.

Come from the glen where the robin is singing;
Come from the haunts of the heather and bee;
Come from the hills where the chamois is springing;
Come where thy bells ring afar on the sea.
O, thou art strong! when aroused from thy slumbers,
Thy voice peals aloud through the pines of Braemar,
O, how my heart leaps to join in thy numbers,
Free as thy breath on thy highlands afar!

Blast of the hills! in the days of my childhood,
The while I roamed far o'er the valley and plain,
With spirit as free as the leaves of the wildwood,—
How like those glad days would I greet you again!
Like the blue-bell of Scotland, and bright as its heather
Ye bring to my heart all those days that are past;
Not the hot breath of sorrow, nor winter's wild weather
Can woo from the love that is born with thy blast.

Thou Light of the East! when the wind is the loudest
I think of those days when, by Galilee's sea,
Thy weary feet roamed with the meekest or proudest
Till all, e'en the humblest, gave homage to thee.
O, teach me to look where thy mountains are brightest,
To those sun-gilded hills where my fathers have trod,
And sweep the soul's harp-strings with spirit the lightest,
Singing of glory and heaven and God!

THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF SACRED LITERATURE.

BY EDGAR WYLIE.

In 1881 a summer school for the study of Hebrew was held at Morgan Park, Ill., with an attendance of twenty-three students. During the past ten years thirty-six schools of three weeks each have been held in different parts of the land. The work of the Institute has gradually broadened and now includes not only Hebrew but the various cognate languages,—the versions, Old Testament interpretation and Old Testament theology. The attendance at the schools during the past season has been as follows: At New Haven, 250; at Philadelphia, 100; at Chautauqua, 344; at Lake Bluff, 91. The single purpose of this institute is to furnish aid toward a greater knowledge of the sacred Scriptures.

Dr. William R. Harper is the ruling spirit in this great and important movement. Although but thirty-four years of age, his text books on Hebrew are used in a large part of the theological seminaries of America, and he has held the professorship of the Semitic languages at Yale University for four years. He is a man of Napoleonic appearance. He possesses great natural vitality, and his eight hours of daily class-room work for fifteen weeks is proof of it. At the age of nineteen Dr. Harper received his degree, Doctor of Philosophy, from Yale and for the last fourteen years he has devoted himself to the study of those languages that throw light upon the sacred Book.

His methods of teaching are not an entire novelty. There are, however, two factors seldom found in others' teaching: (1) a clear conception of what he wishes to convey; and (2) a tremendous energy in imparting it. The dullest man in the class must see the point before it is passed. No slip-shod work will answer. There must be a constant review of past lessons. All unimportant matter is suppressed and the salient points are made clear. As much work is done in three weeks at the summer institute as is done in half a year at the average seminary. Dr. Harper allows no mere listeners in his classes. Each man must have his crayon in hand and take his place at the blackboard. The hand and eye and ear work together. In the English Bible classes each member must have his Bible open and see for himself.

The Institute of Sacred Literature will be still more comprehensive in the future. Plans are making for a more thorough organization in States and counties of Bible institutes which shall be conducted by the best talent to be secured. The spirit of Bible study is abroad and is not peculiar to this Institute. The Methodists have formed during the summer a church and camp meeting Bible reading association of above one thousand members. There is a demand for Bible knowledge which is promising. A leading Methodist minister remarked to the writer recently, "There are three things that I hope to see accomplished at once, viz., to have the Bible used as a text book in our conference course of study; 2. To have the Bible in the Chautauqua course of reading; and 3. To have far more attention given to it in our seminaries.

Dr. Harper addressed audiences at Lake Bluff on the subject, "The Bible in our Colleges and Seminaries." He predicts that the time is not far distant when the Bible will have its legitimate place in the institutions of learning.

Dr. Harper has been criticized sharply, especially by the Methodist Review, as the mouthpiece of the rationalists. He has been charged with holding the divine and superhuman element of the Bible in the background, while emphasizing the human in the book. It was thought he had rationalistic tendencies and was inclined to discard all in the Bible that did not square with "reason." However true that may have been in the past, I am convinced that Dr. Harper holds no such position to-day; and I further believe he has been misunderstood by his critics. Having had a recent interview with Dr. Harper, I am happy to state some facts of importance as a result of that conference.

George Rawlinson, the great oriental scholar, in the first of his Bampton Lectures says: "Let it be once allowed that we may declare any part of the Scripture which seems to us improbable, or which does not approve itself to our notions of what revelation should be, a poem and nothing more, and what security is there against the extremest conclusions of the mythologists? One book will naturally be surrendered after another and the final result will not be distinguishable from that at which the school of De Wette and Strauss professedly aims—the destruction of all trust in the historical veracity of the Scripture narrative."

Dr. Harper stands upon like solid ground. In answer to the question: Is it true, as the Methodist Review of Nov., 1889, states, that you have taught that one must trust his reason when a Scripture statement is or seems to be at variance with it? Dr. Harper replied in substance, "That is a mistake. I hold that we have a clearer conception of the truth to-day than was enjoyed by our fathers, and I teach that all should look for progression in the discovery of the meaning of truth, though not of new truth. Truth has been revealed, and we are to use our reason in its interpretation. We can't hope to explain all Bible questions. The mysteries of God begin where reason fails."

"Would you discard any book of the Bible?"

"I would not," he replied, "though Luther would have done so."

"Nor any portion of any book?"

"No. I regard the Bible as a divine book from beginning to end."

Dr. Harper holds that the Bible has facts as its basis and that it is true history; and, like Ezra and his co-adjutors, he reads before his classes in the Book, in the Law of God, distinctly; and gives the sense, so that they understand the reading.

In referring to the reform against secret societies, Dr. Harper said his father has long been a reader of the Cynosure, and is in full accord with its principles. As for himself he has never seen his way clear to affiliate with any secret society, and it is his judgment that lodges and clubs are a damage to the cause of Christ.

As true as is the law of cause and effect, so true is this, that as the American workingman makes the Sabbath a day of amusement, the American workingman is making the Sabbath a day of work. By these silken cords of Sabbath amusement he is binding himself to the wheels of toil, to turn without ceasing from Sunday to Sunday, to turn with rapidity, the swifter as its motion is more constant. We would say to every workingman who is looking for the interests of himself and of his country, that as he devotes his Sabbath to mere pleasure he is causing a tide to rise which will sweep away the Sabbath as a day of rest. He is riveting the fetters which he claims that the soft hand of capital has locked upon his begrimed wrists.—The Advance.

THE ODD-FELLOW ORDER AND THE WORD OF GOD.

BY ELZA OSBORN.

Review of an address delivered by Dr. J. J. Stafford at Davis City, Iowa, on Odd-fellowship, on the 66th anniversary of that order in America.

It is my object in this review to show wherein some of the practices and teachings of the order differ from the Word of God, and why the order is compelled to accept some of the teachings of the Word of God; also to show in what institution the mysteries of the kingdom of God are revealed on earth, by whom revealed, and that the secrets of the lodge are inferior to the mysteries of the Christian religion.

It seems to be the object of the doctor to defend the immense system of secret lodges, upon the ground that there are mysteries in the kingdom of God, and that man is justifiable in joining a secret lodge if its object be "the one central idea of self-preservation." Every system of sin has its mysteries, and the one central idea of them all is the self-preservation of adherents by taking advantage of those who do not understand these mysteries, as, for instance, gambling. But there may be various constructions put upon the word self-preservation. The Saviour says, "He that would save his life shall lose it, and he that would lose his life for my sake and the Gospel's shall save it." So, we see, it is this higher view of self-preservation that sometimes causes men to denounce and reveal things that they were sworn to keep from the uninitiated, simply because God tells them to do so, and they choose to obey God rather than man.

The doctor, in speaking of the early days of the order, says, "It also attracted attention, so that the poor among men began to look into it, and finding its teachings were in complete accord with those of the philosopher of Nazareth, 'Peace on earth, good will to men,' joined the order."

There is a difference between the teachings of the order and the teachings of Christ. "The poor among men," must pay their way into the lodge—unless they are preachers, who are sometimes initiated free, in order to get their congregation into the lodge. Jesus gives his blessings unto the poor without money and without price. The lodge demands an obligation of its members to never reveal the secrets of the order. Jesus says, "In secret have I said nothing."

The doctor says, "The order admits the followers of Confucius, Mohammed and Zoroaster, and all who worship the Great Father, realizing that those whom the Son esteemed worthy of dying for it dares not close its portals against." Christ dying for all saves only those who believe in him. Christ says, "He that denies the Son hath not the Father." Then all the followers of Confucius, Mohammed and Zoroaster do not worship the Great Father.

The doctor says, "Yet, while not claiming to be a religious institution, and leaving each one to worship Deity according to the dictates of his own conscience, provided the laws of social order and purity are not offended, saying to all we have nothing to do with your church or creed, it most earnestly claims to be a moral institution." If not a religious institution, why does it have any religious test of membership? As the religious test of membership consists only in the belief in a God, it gives men the privilege of saying with their mouths that they believe in a God, and then saying by their works that they do not believe in the only true and living God. And in this way the order encourages and supports infidelity.

But the order is compelled to accept some of the teachings of the Word of God, to get Christians to join it, so that it can control the churches.

Why does the order wish to control the churches? Because the churches have great power over the people, and it wishes to turn this power to its favor, and receive the approbation of the millions of church members and through the churches to have an influence over the world, which is beholding with wonder and admiration the great work that is being done by the churches.

Surely all Christians ought to see that the order which Dr. Stafford says is not a religious institution, is not the organization through which God is to reveal the mysteries of his kingdom to man. The church, the only institution which Christ established, is the institution through which, by his Word and by his Spirit, he is revealing all the mysteries of his kingdom which he intends man to know in this life.

The doctor says, "The mysteries of the kingdom spoken of by the Saviour consisted and consists still in a perfect knowledge of the symbolisms of the tabernacle of Moses, and the temple of Solomon, and the different parts and accompaniments of the same; and, above all, the pyramid from whence Moses, learned in all the wisdom of Egypt, derived his ideas."

Does the Saviour's preaching, as given in the Word of God, support this declaration of the doctor? If the mysteries of his kingdom had consisted in these things, his preaching would have consisted of descriptions of the above-named buildings and their accompaniments. Nowhere in the Bible do we find that he preached or lectured on the importance of these structures. On the contrary we find that when some, like the Odd-fellows and Masons of this age, called his attention to the building and great stones of the temple, his only reply was a prophecy of its destruction, saying, "There shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down." He did not fly off into an elaborate description of these things as an Odd-fellow or Mason would have done.

We do not doubt but that the tabernacle of Moses and the temple of Solomon were built for a glorious purpose, and we believe that God commanded that they be built. But the Bible contains all that is essential for us to know of these things. How absurd the idea that God would lock up superior knowledge of his kingdom and deliver it into the hands of a worldly institution like the order of Odd-fellows of our day to be sold by the degree to those who would obligate themselves to tell nobody else anything about it! This is not God's way of imparting knowledge to the people. And any lodge which claims to have such knowledge is a deceiver and an anti-Christ. The great mystery of the kingdom of God is the salvation of a people ruined by sin. It is said of this mystery, that the angels of heaven desired to look into it. The mission of Christ was to present this salvation and to explain its mysteries, and not to lecture to the people about the tabernacle of Moses, the temple of Solomon and the pyramids of Egypt.

The doctor makes a drive at the anti-secretists by speaking of the name in the white stone in heaven, and the singing of the song by the one hundred and forty-four thousand in the unknown language, as if these things were the exclusive property of the lodge, saying that these things will be "a sticker to the anti-secret gents."

Heaven is a holy place, and the church is a religious institution following the Saviour's plan for the salvation of the world; therefore these things of heaven are given to those who are of the church, for the Scripture says, "They were redeemed from the earth," showing they were not of a worldly institution like the lodge. We do not object to God having secrets. Our objection is made against the lodge claiming to have useful knowledge in its possession which it has not.

The doctor says, "The Talmud tells us that Satan became angry at not being permitted to join the secret councils of the Most High and rebelled against him and was flung over the battlements of heaven." If this be so, it is positive evidence that the tests of membership in the secret councils of the Most High are entirely different from those of the order which the doctor is trying to praise. If the religious test had been the same, all that Satan would have been asked to do would have been to say that he believed in the existence of a God. Of course Satan knew before he was cast out of heaven that there was a God. And many of his servants on earth have said that they believe in a God. The Odd-fellows must believe more than Satan does, or they too will be shut out from the secret councils of the Most High. They, with all other formalists, need to be alarmed and turn to the worship of God in spirit and in truth.

CHRISTIAN CIVILIZATION.—The Rev. James Chalmers, one of the most honored of the missionaries of the London Missionary Society, speaking of the Gospel as a civilizer, says: "I have had twenty-one years' experience amongst natives. I have seen the semi-civilized and the uncivilized. I have lived, dined, and slept with the cannibal. I have lived with the Christian native, and I have visited the islands of the New Hebrides, which I sincerely trust will not be handed over to the tender mercies of France; I have visited the Loyalty Group, I have seen the work of missions in the Samoan Group, I know all the islands of the Society Group, I have lived for ten years in the Hervey Group, I know a few of the groups close on the line, and for at least nine years of my life I have lived with the savages at New Guinea; but I have never yet met with a single man or woman, or with a single people, that your civilization without Christianity has civilized."

WHO ARE "SCABS"?

The mob and its friends may be doing more wisely than they think. It may be that "scab" is soon to become a title of honor. Like things have happened. Names given in vulgar derision to honorable people have been accepted and worn, and at last universally recognized as the styles and titles of bodies that are great motive forces. "Methodist" was once a term of reproach; no one is ashamed of being called a Methodist to-day. Who are they that the mob and its friends denounce as "scabs"? In the first place, they are four-fifths of all the wage-earners of the country. Including clerks, preachers, school teachers, newspaper writers and other members of the educated professions who work for wages, they are much more than four-fifths of the workmen of the country. In the second place, they are all those who prefer to manage their own business to intrusting its management to a committee or to a walking delegate. In the third place, they are the brave and trustworthy men who take places voluntarily vacated by others, preferring danger to idleness, employment to subsistence on the alms doled out by a union, food and clothes and household comforts for their families to the beggarly pride of mobs. They are those who endure the hootings of dirty children, frenzied women, and depraved men, and who—to the disgrace of Chicago—have been granted scant protection while risking their lives in efforts to convey citizens to and from their homes.

Neither the mob, nor the penny newspaper of the mob, can bring these men into contempt. They have gained no man's place by stealth or intrigue. They have taken that which was left, preferring industry with risk to pauperism with ease. They are the brave few of the timorous many, the handful of that four-fifths of non-union men which has dared assert the rights of the American man to make his own bargains, and to feed his own family. The real scabs and cowards are throwing stones and shrieking out oaths from the midst of the mob. The only scabs on the persons of the derided and assaulted men are those which temporarily cover the healing wounds which the missiles of cowards have inflicted upon them.

Talk about the rights of man, indeed! What right does the man possess whom a walking delegate or a committee may command that he shall cease from labor which is profitable to him, or abstain from accepting an offer which he deems advantageous to him? It would be less offensive to the instincts of justice if the walking delegate or the committee were representative of the majority of workmen, or of the workmen engaged in any particular trade. But they are representative of a very small minority. Of the workmen at large, they do not represent a fifth, probably not an eighth. Of the workmen of a special trade, they represent but a fraction. The Typographical Union is a combination of some of the most intelligent workmen of the country; its constitution is both liberal and conservative; and yet even it embraces no more than 30,000 of the 125,000 printers of the country. It is doubtful if any union, other than that of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, represents even a bare majority of the skilled craftsmen whose cause it espouses. It is unjust that the multitude of non-union men should be classed as outcasts and pariahs by the minority of unionists. When the minority is permitted to use violence against the majority then are the pillars of the commonwealth shaken.—Inter-Ocean.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The age of electricity—Why are our country towns decaying—The lodge octopus—Elevating the theatre—The opening at Wellesley—Some thoughts from Prof. Drummond.

We are now living in the age of steam and electricity, with a fair prospect that the latter may supersede the former, as the iron age crowded out the stone age. How Benjamin Franklin would open his eyes if he could come back to the scene of his kite performance, and witness "the broom-stick train" carrying daily its load of passengers to and fro. But the Salem witches, who, according to Dr. Holmes' witty and quaint conceit, have come back to work their wicked will in a new form, must have vastly increased in malignancy during their two centuries of absence. The law-suits which the West End Company now has on its hands entered against it by various individuals for injuries to life and limb sustained from the electric cars are said to reach into the million. This new mode of rapid transit calls for employes of a higher grade of intelligence than the old-fashioned horse-car drivers, and this is partly where the trouble lies. They need not only to be cool, cautious and quick-sighted, but to have some knowledge of the mysterious force they are operating. The West End would do better to employ only such men, even if they double their present rate of wages than to pay the enormous amount for accidents caused for the most part by careless or ignorant drivers. But great corporations often show a curious shortness of vision. All these various agencies for helping man in his struggle against Nature tend more and more to drive the unintelligent wage-earner to the rear and put a premium on skilled labor. The culminating point seems to be reached now that he has yoked to his chariot wheels the mightiest of all natural forces, and the one he knows least about;—of which indeed only one thing can be said to be known with positiveness by the average unscientific person—that to trifle with it is death. But it can amuse as well as kill, and one of the most entertaining of the electrical toys that have been lately devised is the invention of a Lowell man. It is an automaton operated by a six-horse battery whose office it is to push a perambulator. This electrical man is sufficiently powerful to propel a very stout person up a very steep incline; never gets drunk, and far surpasses in politeness most knights of the whip, as he always acknowledges a fare given to him by gracefully raising his arm and touching his hat. It has occurred to the writer that if its clever inventor would only devise an electrical housemaid, who could manipulate a carpet sweeper or wash dishes, and be equally free from those small weaknesses that make the ordinary Bridget a terror to prudent and careful housekeepers, he would soon make his fortune. The "servant girl problem" would be solved forever, and the millennium dawn for our long-suffering American housewives.

The decadence of our country towns has been brought out strikingly by the late census enumeration. The population, for instance of Ashfield, Mass., is 29 per cent less than it was in 1790, just after the Revolutionary War, and 43 per cent less than it was in 1810. This result seems to be due in part to an application of the Scripture rule, "From him that hath not shall be taken away." The process of decline once begun goes on at a continually increasing ratio, as shown by Prof. Charles Eliot Norton at the annual Ashfield dinner, which is an institution started twelve years ago to help the academy in that place and give it an endowment fund. It is to be hoped that before long the tide will turn, and these hill country villages with their lovely scenery, their wholesome atmosphere, their precious associations, be saved from the fate of semi-barbarism that seems to threaten them. Through the efforts of Rev. J. P. Stoddard, we now know the comparative strength of the church and the lodge in our leading cities, and I wish that similar statistics could be compiled in reference to New England's country towns. The Puritan church and the free public school are their safe-safeguard and shield; but the lodge is killing the one in its parasitic embrace, and Rome is trying hard to throttle the other. Prof. Norton, Geo. William Curtis and other able men discussed and deplored this slow decay of our agricultural towns, but in reading such a symposium of the opinions of eminent minds nothing strikes one more than the way they keep to safe generalities and avoid as they would a fallen trolley wire the touching of any vital question.

Westward, not the star of empire but the fruit crop, seems to be taking its way, as California, I see, is supplying our eastern markets. A New England orchard last spring was a thing "for glory and for beauty;" from the first suggestion of pink, delicate as that at the heart of a sea shell, and growing fainter and fainter, till the trees looked one mass of snow. But climatic conditions,—a heavy rain here, a biting frost there, and the serious drouth which prevailed in the beginning of the summer, has spoiled the crop. You pick up a crimson Williams or a golden Porter, but take your first bite gingerly, for the chances are that under and very near its smooth, unbroken skin, will be found a fine network of wormholes. I have often queried like poor, puzzled George III., not how the apple got into the dumpling, but how the worm ever got into the apple. It is as baffling as the doctrine of "original sin."

The Red Men reported at their late annual council in Boston that they have now over a million dollars in their treasury. Let some clever statistician count up the immense sums flowing daily into the coffers of these numberless secret orders, and then let Christian pastors and Christian laymen compute—if they can—how much of it might have gone to support our feeble and declining churches if so many of the male population did not consider the lodge as having the first claim on their pocket books. The cause of education and general intelligences suffer in like manner, though not equally. A man who has to keep up his dues in two or three lodges, has no money for books, magazines, or first-class papers; and no leisure time to read them even if he could spare the extra cash. The lodge is almost as great a foe to the intellectual life as to the spiritual.

The newspapers find in John L. Sullivan's new departure as a theatrical debutant, a great field for fun; but the moralist finds it much more a field for grave reflection. A leading daily remarks, "It is not the stage which needs to be elevated but the taste of those who support it." On the whole the doughty Sullivan may be congratulated on his change of employment. He had better be acting the bully and the ruffian on the stage boards than in real life, but what does it say for the moral and intellectual status of the theater, or of theater goers? The cry has been for years, "Elevate the stage!" And in a vain attempt to accomplish this more than Herculean task, Anna Dickinson lost the best years of her life. She might have easily stood to-day as the queen of the lecture platform in America, but she failed of being great because she turned aside to LIGHT IN THE EAST.

Pastors and churches reading and discussing the lodge—The secret assessment swindles nourished by the older orders.

BOSTON, Sept. 10, 1890.

The churches of this city were supplied yesterday by their own pastors, and things in church and mission work will soon wheel into their accustomed lines. At the Monday meeting of Baptist ministers about sixty were present, and I was glad to see the face of Bro. Waterman from Wheaton, who was introduced to the conference and spoke briefly of his work. I supplied each with a copy of Joseph Cook's Chicago address and a few tracts which were kindly received.

At the Congregationalist Book Rooms I found about twenty ministers who were supplied with the same documents, and I noticed Dr. A. H. Quint scanning his very carefully. I found the M. E. Book Room on Broomfield street packed full of preachers, and by permission of the proprietor I gave away over fifty copies.

I found one pastor who assures me that the few copies of the Cynosure recently sent to members of his church have created quite a stir already, especially among the young men. One young man who had just become a reader of the paper, declared that some statements in it were not true, but failed to specify what. He claimed to know Masonry, Odd-fellowship and Knights of Pythias by heart, and admitted that Christ's name was excluded from the two latter, but Masonry he claimed was more tolerant. In proof he referred to a statement of the Grand Master of New York. "The Grand Master of Freemasons of the State of New York lately reported that 703 'ministers of the Gospel' were members of the lodges in that State, viz., 288 Methodists, 149 Episcopalians, 112 Baptists, 59 Presbyterians, 11 Lutherans, and 8 Hebrews." And so the "Hebrews" have gone to preaching the "Gospel" according to Masonry, which means simply a gospel with Christ left out; and the Grand Master of New York, perhaps himself a "Hebrew" and one of THE 'ministers of the Gospel' enumerated, is so blinded "by the god of this world" that he can't see any difference between the Gospel with Christ and the atonement in it and a gospel with Christ left out; and the perceptions of my friend seem to be equally obtuse. But since he has become a reader of the Cynosure it is to be hoped that his obscuration will soon pass.

A gentleman called on Saturday for an expose of the Chapter degrees. His evident purpose was to know what he might about our work. I was glad to give him what light I could. Just before leaving he said, "You may or may not have belonged to the secret orders, but I have been through Odd-fellowship and Knights of Pythias, and what you say about the Christless religion of both is true. I have taken the Blue Lodge and two Chapter degrees in Masonry and intend to take the others soon."

I said, "Did you take the Amplified Rank and jump on the spikes?" "Yes," was the prompt reply; and then evidently catching the point of my question, he added, "I at least stood all the tests required."

He had paid $25 for his lodge degrees and $75 for the Chapter, and expected to invest as much more in his outfit, to do benevolent work, of course (?). I called his attention to the vault search and told him how Johnston was killed. He said, "You gave me that circular one day, and I am assured that it is false; that there is no such performance as the living arch and the rough and rugged road." I assured him that if he went on he would certainly find it, and he promised to return and report after he had proved the thing for himself.

If it were not so sad it would be amusing to note the actions and listen to the talk of some people. I distributed 3,000 tracts from our door step on the great day of the G. A. R. One man read No. 2, N. E. series; walked across the street where he watched me for a time, then returned in a perfect rage, not having "learned to subdue his passions." He said I was a marked man; that I ought to be tarred and feathered and rode out of town on a rail; that I was watched and would get what I deserved when I least expected it, etc. I simply replied, "Pass on, my friend, I am busy just now with other customers. Call, please, and bring your friends. You will find me here almost any time ready to do you any good in my power;" and he went on, swearing vengeance.

A sad case was that of a lady evidently in poor health, of limited means, and accustomed to service that taxed both mind and muscle. She wanted to know about the secret benefit orders. I gave her facts and tracts and received in return a few items in her experience. A few years ago she was induced to invest one hundred dollars of her hard-earned savings in some one of the secret insurance orders, with the promise of help in need and care in sickness. The time came when she needed help and the attention of a nurse in sickness; but instead she was notified all payments made and all benefits promised were forfeited by non-payment of dues, and she was left —after being robbed—to suffer on, live or die, as best she could. After a few years of economy she had laid by a little in store, and the "Tempter" had taken her up into the mount of anticipation, and told her that if she would invest a hundred dollars in some new insurance scheme, he would certainly give her back five hundred dollars at the end of five years. She was a little suspicious after her former experience, and seeing the sign came in for advice and information.

I told her of a woman who had called a short time before soliciting my patronage in the "Royal Ark," promising that if I would pay $5 for initiation, $1.50 for a medical examination, and make myself liable to assessments during the year not to exceed $33.50, I should receive one hundred dollars at the end of the year. When pressed to know where the other $60 dollars came from, she frankly acknowledged that it was from the men and women who became sick or in some way were too poor to pay their dues and so forfeited what they had paid. I said to the lady, "If you want to give another hundred dollars of your money to sustain such a fraud and swindle you can do it; but my advice is that you put your money in the savings bank, use economy and trust in the Lord." I reminded her of some of God's precious promises, and said, "Can't you trust in them?"

"Oh," said she, her eyes filling with tears, "how I wish I could!" I did not learn her name, but she promised to return when Mrs. Stoddard is here.

It is perfectly appalling to see how these human vampires are sucking the life-blood out of the working girls and women of this city; and why the civil authorities allow this robbery to proceed would be a mystery, if the rulers of the people had not sold themselves to the lying system of the lodge.

As prominent a minister as there is in this city said to me to-day, "Three or four of my young men have recently gone into the lodge. They can't give a dollar for church work and complain because pews are not free, yet they get money to pay initiation and lodge dues." Another called to have monthly installments of tracts sent to his young men during the year.

I might go on indefinitely, but I will close with the statement of one more fact and a suggestion or two. An active Christian worker handed his pastor a notice to read, requesting the young men of the congregation to meet him on a certain evening. The notice was given, the evening came and with it a number of young men. The brother opened up the Secret Empire and endeavored to show from the Word of God that the position taken by Joseph Cook in his Chicago address was the only sound and Scriptural ground to take. The interest was so great that it has been proposed to hold similar meetings monthly in this church to discuss the Secret Empire. This brother has taken and read the Christian Cynosure for at least ten years, and hence was fully armed and ready to meet and give much needed instruction to young or old on this subject. My suggestion is that other young men in other churches are going into captivity for want of knowledge, and that every reader take a hint from this good brother and "go and do likewise."

ODD-FELLOWSHIP AND CHRIST.

A NOTEWORTHY TESTIMONY FROM AN IOWA LODGE.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—While at the Birmingham meeting I was invited to come to Eldon, a division station on the Rock Island railroad in Wapello county, and lecture. As my effort was to be a defense of the Gospel, I chose the Sabbath at 3 P. M. as the time. The pastors of the Methodist and Christian churches cheerfully consented to read the notice of the meeting, but the pastor of the Congregational church said he did not wish to be discourteous, but as he was himself a Mason and a Knight of Pythias, he did not wish to give notice of such a meeting to his congregation. I remarked that ministers who were Knight Templar Masons had read such notices to their congregations when I had requested them to do so, giving as their reason that they believed in the right of free discussion, and that a Knight Templar Mason, and master of an Illinois lodge of Masons, said, "If Masonry cannot bear the light of free discussion, it ought to go to the wall." But I could not persuade the brother to read the notice.

I asked him if his Knight of Pythias lodge used the "amplified ritual." He said they did. So it seems that there are ministers of the Gospel who will submit to be sent to hell, to be examined by the devil, who, if he finds them worthy, graciously promises to give them a recommend to join the Knights of Pythias.

What! you say, do they go through such a ceremony as that when they are made Knights of Pythias? Yes, only Satan is called Pluto and hell is called the domain of Pluto. But Pluto identifies himself as the devil, or Satan, of the Bible, by referring the candidate to the time "when I tempted your first parents in the garden of Eden." What strong delusion the lodge votaries must be under. Charmed by Satan as birds are by snakes, they see no harm in that which horrifics and disgusts those who are truly in fellowship with our Lord Jesus Christ.

High School teachers, lawyers, doctors, bankers, Masons, Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias and the churches were represented in the audience when the hour for the lecture came. After the lecture, an Odd-fellow who was present came up to me and talked of the time when the Noble Grand of the Richland lodge declared that it was contrary to the constitution and ritual of Odd-fellowship to pray in the name of Jesus Christ in the lodge.

An Odd-fellow arose and told the Noble Grand he thought he was mistaken. He said he did not think it was contrary to the constitution and ritual of Odd-fellowship to pray in the name of Christ in the lodge.

Another Odd-fellow arose and said, "I sustain the Noble Grand. It is contrary to the constitution and ritual of Odd-fellowship to pray in the name of Christ in the lodge."

The question was debated. The Noble Grand was proven to be right. The objector was silenced. A Methodist minister, who had lately been made an Odd-fellow, sprang to his feet and exclaimed, "Gentlemen! then I am no longer an Odd-fellow!" and immediately withdrew. Following the resolute action of this minister there was a division in that lodge, and some, who were for Christ, saw that they were in a snare of Satan, and breaking the snare left the lodge.

In the evening I preached in the Free Methodist church of Eldon. On Monday I went to Fairfield and secured a subscription of $5 to the N. C. A. from Mrs. Dr. Smith. I then came to Libertyville and went four miles into the country and lectured that night in a German Baptist church.. Two of their ministers heard the lecture. One of them subscribed for two copies of the Cynosure for a year to be sent to himself, and his brother minister.

I then visited Washington, where I secured some help for the work, and had an interesting conversation on the lodge question with Rev. Mr. Davidson, the young pastor of the First U. P. church of Washington. From there I went to Rose Hill where the Iowa Conference of the Free Methodist church was in session. The conference passed anti-secret society resolutions, and appointed delegates to attend the next annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Association, and also recommended that each pastoral charge of the conference should do the same.

The preaching on the Sabbath was by Rev. Mr. Coleman, the General Superintendent, in the morning, in the afternoon, by the Western Agent of the N. C. A., and in the evening Bro. Coleman preached again.

Bro. Coleman is a good presiding officer, a sound adviser, an able minister, and a genial Christian gentleman. To-day, Monday, I am on my way to Monroe to work up a meeting for the discussion of the lodge system there.

Let every child of God pray that the snare of the lodge may be broken, and that the people may be gathered to Christ. C. F. HAWLEY.

FROM NEW ENGLAND TO WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 8, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Again at home I recount the blessings of the recent past and plan for the future. While in New England it was my privilege to address eight congregations and secure seventy-six new readers to the Cynosure. With a representative of experience at the "Hub," and the grand men and women I found standing nobly for the truth there, I shall expect to hear of great advances.

My lectures given in a Lutheran church of East Boston, of which Rev. Wurl is pastor, though not so largely attended as some, awakened no little enthusiasm. The truth of my exposition of the Masonic order was there testified to, as is the case nearly everywhere I go.

Many who have felt the galling yoke of lodge bondage are strengthened to boldly proclaim against it by association with others doing the same.

One day was spent very pleasantly at an Adventist camp meeting near Plainville, Conn. As they chanced to be short of speakers, after some examination on theological points, the committee of arrangements concluded to risk me for an address. I spoke for about an hour and a half to some three hundred people. Some tracts were given, many inquires answered about our work, and an invitation extended to come again. By special invitation of Bro. Hezekiah Davis, of the People's church, New Britain, Conn., I supplied his pulpit Sabbath before last, that he might help a brother who was wanted to preach at the camp meeting. I asked Bro. Davis if I could present the anti-Christian character of the lodge to his people. He replied, "Follow the leading of the Spirit." I answered, probably the Spirit would lead me to do that very thing, and it did. I announced in the morning my theme for the evening. It created the warmth of feeling controverted questions usually do, especially where it is imagined money is at stake. Some did not stay to hear the benediction. They were probably not members of the church, as they have heard their pastor speak fearlessly against the lodge. I felt that I was on a rock bottom foundation and gave them the truth as I understood it. We shall probably hear from New Britain again. While there I had the pleasure of being the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Elijah Church. Some of the Cynosure friends will remember Mrs. Church as Miss Baker, for years an instructor in Wheaton College.

My stops at Willimantic and Putnam were made very pleasant by brethren Conant, Buck, Morse and others. As their days of labor diminish, their zeal in reforms increases. Bro. Buck expressed some anxiety for the future of our work as the old leaders are passing so rapidly away. God's work will go forward. He will raise up men and women to forward his cause in the earth.

The union meeting in the Swedish Congregational church, Worcester, was a success. There were present between two and three hundred thoughtful Christian people. The Swedish Methodist church had arranged for special services, so the pastor could not come, but he voluntarily offered to announce my meeting to his people and urge them to be present. He said he knew of but one Swedish Methodist minister who was a Mason, and he died. In Sweden it is taken for granted that a man is bad when he joins the Masons.

At the close of my address an interesting discussion was opened by a question asked by Bro. Samuel A. Pratt. Two honest-appearing Masons in attempting a defence of the lodge helped along very nicely. The first thought he found as good company in the lodge as in the church. When I asked if he did not feel degraded by the preparation and process of initiation, "No," said he, "not any more than being born without clothing." He then proceeded to explain the meaning of the ceremony more fully than I had done. The divesting of clothing was to teach a lesson of humility, etc. Another secret society to which he belonged, he said, met the candidate with a great axe, as though they were going to cut off his head; but they did not intend to cut off his head, that was only part of the ceremony.

The second Mason knew that Christ was rejected from the lodge, but wanted to ask the speaker if he knew why that was done. I asked him to explain why. He said, "Masonry is older than Christ." Said I, "Supposing that to be true, now that Christ has come, has it any right to reject him?" No reply.

Bro. Pratt made some remarks, in which he spoke of a pastor in Worcester, who was led into the lodge and was now willing to testify against them. I called the audience's attention to the fact that we had abundance of testimony from the Masons present. One testifying to the correctness of our exposition, and the other to the Christ-excluding character. Rev. Larson, pastor of the Swedish Lutheran church, made the opening prayer, and the Congregational pastor, Rev. Ohlson, pronounced the benediction. Several earnest requests were made to hear further of this matter.

Rev. Holm, pastor of the Swedish Congregational church, Philadelphia, desires me to address his people the third Sabbath of this month. Rev. T. Stiemke, pastor of a Baltimore Lutheran church (Missouri Synod) writes that his young men's association invites me to address them on the evening of the 25th of September. Both these invitations I hope to accept. A plan has been suggested to aid the Southern circulation of our paper among those it may profit, by a payment on the part of friends of part of the price of the paper, requesting the recipient to pay the other part. The following contributions and pledges have been received by myself to this co-operative fund:

Cash: Caleb Lyon, Thos. M. Chalmers, A Friend, William Gay and J. S. Smedly, $5 each. W. C. Wilson, A Friend, C. H. Watson, I. Gable, Hiram Erb, H. L. Erb and J. S. Yaukey, $1 each.

Pledges: Caleb Lyon, $2 per month for one year; R. Johnston, $1; Rev. J. S. Thompson and W. A. Harvey, $5 each. W. B. STODDARD.

CINCINNATI NOTES.

CINCINNATI, O.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Rev. M. C. Lockwood, pastor of the First Baptist church of this city, was nominated by the Prohibitionists to head their ticket in this fall's campaign in Ohio. The disaffectionists in his congregation have made this the occasion for a church broil. This congregation has been known to push its pastor in former time; and it is not likely that the outcome will be different from the termination of such cases in general—"the pastor's usefulness is at an end and he must go." Hard work, good preaching, and public usefulness have little weight in the balance when a few men who hold purse-strings set themselves against the preacher. But if the preacher has a rough road to travel, the promise is that his "shoes shall be iron and brass," and as his day is, so shall his strength be.

Last Sabbath I preached in the Mt. Auburn Presbyterian church. They are just completing a new house of worship (the old one being destroyed by fire) at a cost of some $80,000. Dr. Hamlin of Washington, D. C., was pastor of this church for several years. It is one of the strong churches of the city.

At 2 P. M. the funeral of Gen. Noyes took place here. The remnant of his regiment, the 39th Ohio, the municipal officers and members of the bar, ex-Governor Foraker, ex-President Hayes were among those present. Not half the people could gain admission. His old chaplain, Rev. Chidlaw, conducted the services. Rev. Rhodes of the Episcopal church and Bishop Walden of the M. E. church, assisted. He was born in a New England home. For several years he edited a Free Methodist paper. In 1861 he entered the service as major. Soon he became colonel. Later he was promoted to the rank of general. Before Atlanta he lost a leg. He was Governer of this State for one term. President Hayes sent him as minister to France. His address on the occasion of dedicating the new Chamber of Commerce in Jan. 30, 1889, was the greatest effort of his life. Our city, our State, our country and the world were taken in order, and the resources of each exhibited as the means of preparing the way for the reign of the King of kings. That speech secured his election to the judgeship, which position he occupied at the time of his death. His wife and son were members of this church. He attended services with them. He often delivered lectures for the young people and was recognized a valuable helper. "His demise is a great loss to the congregation," remarked an elder to me yesterday. J. M. FOSTER.

COME OUT OF BABYLON.

GALVA, Ill.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It would have given me great pleasure to have listened to the sermon preached in Wheaton College church on the "Perils of the Last Days;" but as I could not, I am very thankful for the privilege of reading it in the Cynosure. Oh, that people had ears to hear, and would heed such words of truth and admonition! This sentence, "And Babylon means and includes all false worships," struck me as being of great weight, especially to those who would obey the command, "Come out of her." "All false worships" includes every religious rite, ceremony or worship not in accordance with the Spirit and Word of God—all that is the production of human folly. Such is the worship of all the false systems which deny or ignore the one great Mediator, Christ, as also those systems that retain the name of Christ but set aside the spirit and power of his worship, that have some of the form without the power. And is not this the case with sect churches and sectism generally? But sectism is of God, or it is not. If not (and no lover of the Bible and true follower of Jesus dare say it is), then its worship must be a mixed worship, partly of God's appointment (and that borrowed), and partly of men's invention and appointment. Is God well pleased with such worship? If not, then such worship must be included with false worships. Let every child of God come out of Babylon, and no more worship at the altar of secretism and lodgery, and no more practice and uphold sect worship which divides Christ and sets aside the new commandment. R. CANNING.

OUT OF THE LAST DITCH.

ST. PAUL, Minn.

A well known whisky distiller was converted to God. He abandoned his still, lost a fortune, and became a zealous laborer in the vineyard of the Lord, contributing to one city mission one hundred dollars a month; he was also an active member of the Presbyterian church. But he constantly advertised the devil's kingdom by wearing a Masonic badge.

I observed to him, "You are a Freemason."

"Yes," he replied; "that is all right. If I could only live up to Masonry and be true to it, I should be all right."

"Freemasonry," said I, "is sun-worship." He denied my assertion. I then recited to him from Masonry six pagan rites of sun-worship, taken from the ancient mysteries of Egyptian sun-worship, and performed upon him in the first degree that he took in Masonry.

It was fifteen years since he joined the Masons,—I say joined the Masons, for he never became one in heart. He had scarcely been in a lodge since he joined more than was sufficient to take the degrees. But he remembered sufficiently to recognize the truth of what I had said. I then called his attention to his horrid obligations, imprecations of divine vengeance upon his soul and death penalties he had sworn to in the lodge.

In God's mercy his eyes were opened, and he asked why these things were not published to the world. I handed him a catalogue of books exposing the blasphemous character of Masonry. He selected three dollars and seventy-five cents worth from the list, and requested me to deliver them at his office next day, which I gladly did, when he said, "I am going to the jeweler's to have this Masonic badge cut off my watch chain." Satan's hoodwink is now removed from his soul and he sees Masonry as it is—a venomous beast of hell, an enemy of God and all that is made in God's image. I presume that he would not object to the mention of his name, but I do not feel at liberty, without his consent, to expose him to the sworn vengeance of the lodge.

Take courage, brethren, and be not turned from the truth by jack-Masons who work and pray in pulpit and pew in the interests of the devil's kingdom—their pet "hobby," Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship, etc. WILLIAM FENTON.

PITH AND POINT.

NOT A WAR OF DEFENSE.

Righteousness is aggressive in regard to wrong. If one profess temperance principles and does nothing to advance her cause, his theory is right but his example is wrong. He who professes to be a Christian and does not pray without ceasing is like the non-aggressive temperance and anti-secret man. The more good men and women are like what they profess to be, the more righteous they are, especially if they rely upon God for his aggressive leading. We are to be aggressive, and will be if we place ourselves in his hands, because we are to be "workers together with him." God is opposed to all wrong; we cannot be at peace with him and with sin, too, at the same time. He will do all he can to destroy the lodge and saloon through human instrumentality.—CYRUS SMITH, Dekalb, Iowa.

GIVE THE WICKED ORDERS NO REST.

I am back at Carthage, Mo., and I find that the "Widows' Son" has not prospered much during my absence, and I will distribute the Cynosure and fire a few shots into the ranks of the enemy. There is "no help for the Widow's Son." I still pray "Thy kingdom come" and God bless the Cynosure and its readers, for we must overcome, and our enemies will be put to shame. —J. K. GLASSFORD, Carthage, Mo.

MASONS AND A COLLEGE CORNER-STONE.

Enclosed find an account of the laying of the corner stone of a college at Hoopeston. The Masons did the fooling and monkeying in the matter, and a more sickening performance never came off here. They seemed to be ashamed of the thing itself, as I had ventilated the affair in the Daily Chronicle, and had scattered 100 copies among the people. The hardest looking set of fellows I ever saw seemed to me were those A. F. and A. M. boys who were monkeying around in that corner-stone business. There was a liberal U. B. preacher that did the praying for the craft, leaving off all reference to a Mediator.—J. S. HICKMAN.

FROM THE VANGUARD OFFICE.

We are interested in the war against secretism, and willingly will aid so far as we can in circulating the Cynosure.—C. W. SHERMAN, St. Louis, Mo.

I do not want the Cynosure discontinued, as I have been taking it for many years, and consider it one of the best reformatory papers in the land.—AARON SULLIVAN, Masonville, Iowa.

LITERATURE.

ECCLESIASTICAL POLITICS in the Methodist Episcopal Church. A Symposium. Pp. 95. Price, 50 cents. Patriotic Publishing Company, Chicago.

Zion's Herald of Boston is one of the oldest of the Methodist publications in the country, and not being controlled by the Book Rooms, is in a measure independent in its utterances. A while since Dr. Parkhurst, the editor, solicited opinions from representative Methodists in different parts of the country upon "Ecclesiastical Politics," the practice of the wiles and artifices of partisan politics in the church conferences. This is an admitted, and for years a growing, evil as the Cynosure has at times pointed out, and attributed justly to the prevalence of Masonry among the Methodist ministers. It is in the school of the lodge that these tricks are begotten and nourished. The Herald published the responses which received much attention from the parties hurt by the plain statement of facts, and they are republished in this volume. Only one of the writers refers to "secret combinations," although all must have had them in mind, especially when they remembered Bishop Charles H. Fowler of San Francisco and his Masonic career while in this city as pastor and president of Northwestern University. Bishop Walden is also said to be a Freemason. But we have on the other hand the assurance that several of the bishops are opposed to the lodge; and we believe that the evil discussed is abating; that the older Methodist ministers are withdrawing from the lodge and the younger are not going in, while many are earnestly favoring the prohibition and Sabbath reforms.

Alden's Manifold Cyclopedia has reached the twenty-third volume, which includes the titles from McCook to Memorial. The volume treats very satisfactorily three States, Maine, Maryland and Massachusetts; and of foreign countries there are Madagascar, Madeira, Malta, and Manitoba. Interesting subjects in other lines are: Machine Gun; Magic; Magna Charta; Magnetism, 19 pages; Mammalia, 10 pages; Man, 6 pages; Mangel Wurzel; Manure, 4 pages; Marble; Marriage, 6 pages; and Masons (Free), about 5 pages. The latter is a colorless account of the old building associations which died out and were revived in 1717 in the modern system of secret lodges. The real object of the Masonic order, as given, very inadequately explains the facts respecting the power and universality of the system. It is difficult to comprehend how so valuable a work can be supplied at so low a price. For the great mass of general readers, the Manifold is superior to many other cyclopedias. Garretson, Cox & Co., Publishers, New York, Chicago, and Atlanta.

Biblia is the only publication in this country devoted to Biblical Archæology. Each number contains the latest information in regard to the work of the Egypt Exploration Fund, of the Palestine Exploration Fund, and of the French and German Explorers. Some of the articles in the September number are: Sculptural Slabs from Mesopotamia found in Egypt; Egyptian Jottings by Miss Amelia B. Edwards; Explorations in Palestine by W. Flinders Petrie; The Work at Tell El Hesy; How the Tombs of some of thePharaohs were Discovered, and Egyptology and the Pentateuch.

Mr. Spurgeon has been greatly impressed by the religious tone of Stanley's new book. "Faith has grown scarce on the earth," he says, "but if divines become doubters, the Lord will find believers among explorers. In bearing his testimony to God and prayer, Stanley has done more good to the world than could have been wrought by a thousand down-grade discourses."

Stanley, the explorer, has donated the profits of the sale of the first edition of his book to the society for the abolition of the African slave trade. This generous and appropriate act will place Mr. Stanley high in the esteem of humanitarians all over the world.

LODGE NOTES.

A dispatch to the Chicago Tribune says: "On the principle that what is one man's loss is another man's gain, the prospects are that the failure of the Knights of Labor in the New York Central strike and the refusal of the United Order of Railway Societies to co-operate with them will result in materially strengthening the National Federation of Labor, of which Samuel Gompers is president, and which has its headquarters in New York. Advices received here go to show that there is intense dissatisfaction among the Knights in widely scattered portions of the country over the manner in which the present difficulty has been conducted, and unless all signs point to opposites the death knell of Mr. Powderly's once powerful organization has already been sounded."

At the opening of the Trades Unions Congress in Liverpool, England, President William Watkins delivered an address. He said the time had undoubtedly arrived when an energetic attempt should be made to secure eight hours as a day's work. He did not advocate that a measure should be forced through the House of Commons immediately, irrespective of the wish and desires of the industries affected, making eight hours a day's work, but he saw no reason why such a concession should not be made immediately to the occupations which unmistakably wanted it. He advocated a direct representation of labor in Parliament, the control of the railways by the state and the solution of the land question by nationalization. The London Times, commenting upon the Trades Unions Congress at Liverpool, doubts whether the public at large or even the mass of employers have yet realized the nature and scope of the assault that is preparing upon industrial property. It says that unless timely methods are employed to check the violence that it now openly advocates the awakening will be rude indeed.

Allen O. Myers, the Grand Secretary of the order of Elks, says of the order to the press: "When the order was formed in 1869, it was composed of actors who agreed to meet for a social hour or two every Sunday and take their glass of beer or wine. The organization was then known as 'The Jolly Corks.' 'The Corks' changed that name to 'Elks,' and lodges were formed all over the country. The Grand Lodge has always been in New York City, but in 1880 'Joe' Mackin, of Chicago, who was dropped from the order after his conviction of ballot-box stuffing, proposed that the Grand Lodge should meet elsewhere than in New York. He wished to have it in Chicago, but his plans were defeated and the matter dropped. In 1887 the proposition to hold the Grand Lodge in a Western city was renewed. We of the West were tired of being domineered by a little clique in the East. We had no voice in its councils, and when we came on here we found everything cut and dried and a path at our feet along which we were expected to allow ourselves to be led. So we began by suggesting a few improvements, such as abolishing gambling, for which the rooms at No. 113 East Fourteenth street had become notorious."

Few cases in recent years have attracted such interest in Indiana as the trial of Mrs. Elma C. Whitehead, a widow of 35 years of age, who is jointly indicted with the Rev. William F. Pettitt, a prominent Methodist minister, for the murder by poison of Mrs. Hattie Pettitt, wife of the latter. Mrs. Pettitt died July 17, 1889, at Shawnee Mound, Ind., under suspicious circumstances. July 14, after having partaken of a cup of tea that her husband had made for her, she complained of pains in her stomach. It was then ascertained that the cup in which the tea was steeped had previously contained mixed strychnine for rats. Mrs. Pettitt gradually grew worse and died on the 17th. She was buried at West Monroe, N. Y. Immediately upon the return of Mr. Pettitt from the burial of his wife he visited Mrs. Whitehead, and the two returned to Shawnee Mound. It was not long before rumors were put in circulation as to the cause of Mrs. Pettitt's death. The body was exhumed and strychnine was found. Pettitt was arrested in Columbus, O., and his trial is set for Oct. 8th. Pettitt is a man of marked ability, is prominent in Masonic bodies, and at the time of his arrest was the Grand Prelate of the Grand Commandery of Indiana. The State claims strong evidence of an attachment between Pettitt and Mrs. Whitehead and a conspiracy to remove Mrs. Pettitt that their marriage might be legally accomplished.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

James G. Birney, candidate of the Liberty party for President, was a Freemason, "but never entered a lodge after he joined the church, and, as his sons grew up, he cautioned them against joining any secret order."—Gen. Wm. Birney.

Hon. Ezra Butler, ex-Governor of Vermont:—One Masonic obligation requires that a Mason shall vote for a brother in preference to any other person of equal qualifications. Is not this political Masonry? The Masons in Vermont are about one-twentieth part of the freemen, and they hold about three-fourths of all the important offices in the State. Is this owing to their superior fitness, or to political Masonry?

Gerrit Smith, in an address, 1870:—Masonry murdered Morgan. If it could not conceal his murderers, it nevertheless protected them. It overrode the laws of the land and ruled the courts and the ballot-boxes. Moreover, it is capable of repeating the crimes. Why then should we not dread secret societies, and do what we can to bring them to an end?

William Wirt: "If this be Masonry, as according to uncontradicted evidence it seems to be, I have no hesitation in saying that I consider it at war with the fundamental principles of the social compact, and a wicked conspiracy against the laws of God and man, that ought to be put down.

Joseph Ritner, governor of Pennsylvania, 1837:—"If it be true as the lamented Colden (himself one of the initiated) declared that many a Mason became a great man but no great man ever became a Mason, how nearly does it concern the youth of our country to pause and reflect before they commit their present standing and future reputation to the keeping of a society, which for its cold-hearted and selfish purposes could immolate even the fame of Washington at the shrine of its abominations."

Lewis Tappan, private journal, 1814:—"Dr. Dixwell gave me lectures on Masonry at his house." "In September left the lodge." Letter, Jan. 21, 1829:—"I am free to say that I henceforth renounce Freemasonry, considering it a useless and profane institution."

George Washington, to friends in 1794, quoted by Myron Holley:—"The real people occasionally assembled in order to express their sentiments on political sentiments, ought never to be confounded with permanent, self-appointed societies, usurping the right to control constituted authorities, and to dictate to public opinion. While the former was entitled to respect, the latter was incompatible with all government, and must either sink into general dis-esteem, or finally overturn the established order of things."

Hon. Heman Lincoln, ex-Governor, Mass.:—Freemasonry, as a distinct, independent government within our own government, and beyond the control of the laws of the land, by means of its secrecy and the oaths and regulations which its subjects are bound to obey under penalties of death, has occupied much of the attention of the committee. . . . We believe, in the language of the Edinburgh Review, that all secret societies are justly deemed odious, wherever the government is tolerably free, and can only be excused where the existence of arbitrary power, foreign or domestic, leaves no other means of escaping from hopeless slavery.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1890.

The number of friends who are sending lists of names for sample papers is increasing daily. It greatly cheers us to know that an earnest prayer goes up for some of these lists as the writers assure us. Let it be so for all; that a blessing may come to every friend who shall thus receive a single number of the paper for examination. To each one of these there is sent also from this office a letter, inviting an examination of the work we are doing, and an investment in so good a cause by way of a subscription. Other matter is also enclosed.

MORE ABOUT THE SCANDINAVIANS.

(Personal.)

The writer was licensed to preach by the Piscataqua Association (Congregational), was ordained by the Presbytery of Cincinnati, from which I took letters and united with the Central Congregational Association, and am now a member of Elgin (local) Association and the General Congregational Association in Illinois. During my ministry I have received several hundreds of converts to Presbyterian, and more hundreds to Congregational churches.

These two bodies of Christians have been repeatedly rent asunder by controversies. A "Plan of Union" in 1801 united the Presbyterians and Congregationalists; but this "Plan of Union" was rescinded in 1837; and by a single act 500 ministers, and 50,000 people, whom the Plan of Union had brought into the Presbyterian church, were "excinded" or cut off! Rev. Dr. Wm. S. Plummer, of Richmond, Va., gave among the reasons for excinding the objectionable synods, that their ministers had been Anti-masons, and were now Abolitionists.

In 1871, eight years after the fall of slavery in 1863, the Old and New School Presbyterians reunited, neither party being required to recant any errors.

As an editor of the Cynosure, instructed by the schisms and re-unions of the American churches for over a century, I venture to make some suggestions to our Scandinavian brethren, and hope they will "suffer the word of exhortation."

The Cynosure has not advocated the union of the Swedes and Norwegians with our Congregational bodies, giving up their church names and organizations. While Dr. Peters was pastor of the large Lutheran (Swedish) church in Rockford, Ill., some forty members of his church joined secret lodges, and many of them sold liquor. They seceded from the Lutheran church, which disallowed such practices, and the Rockford Congregational Association received them. And there are now Freemasons and Odd-fellows in most of the Congregational associations; and, as the discussions in the last April Conference abundantly show, there can be no peace to the churches till these vicious elements are cast out.

The apostle and founder of the Free Churches, Rosenius, lived and died a Lutheran. So have a multitude of his followers. But now the separation has taken place, there is no hope of their reuniting under one organization.

But if the Augustana Synod and the Free Mission Bund could co-operate on a large scale in a joint conference against the secret lodges, it would take away all motive to rivalship between their churches; and if Western Congregational Associations could unite with them in such a measure, the three elements would form one consolidated mass of enlightened Christian sentiment which would make all minor differences appear insignificant, and save our country from the grasp of priestcraft and popery, which are the chief dangers we now have to apprehend. J. B.

—"An Old Mason" writes to the India Methodist Watchman of Bombay, after reading the report of the Huntington, West Virginia, tragedy, where Rev. Mr. Johnston lost his life in taking the Royal Arch degree, and the remarks of Enoch T. Carson of Cincinnati:

"How very mysteriously Col. E. T. Carson writes about Masonry. What is in it? Nothing but a parcel of childish antics, and a parodying of the 'Word of God.' I wonder Mr. Johnston would have allowed himself to be carried so far as the Royal Arch degree. It took several lawyers two months to prevail on me to pass the M. M. degree, but they prevailed, and I am here the greater fool. Mr. Johnston's death is a warning to other ministers not to do likewise."

THE DEVICES OF SATAN.

It is now forty-two years since an obscure family named Fox, in Hydeville, Wayne Co., N. Y., March 31, 1848, discovered intelligence in certain rappings which had disturbed the house for some months. Kate Fox, a girl of twelve years, snapped her fingers at the noise, saying, "Do that, old split-foot." And "old split-foot," or whatever made the noises, such as haunted the house of the Wesleys at Epworth, England, for a time, accepted Kate's challenge, and reproduced the noise by an exact imitation. A series of experiments followed which made the family famous; and one of the daughters, Margaretta, was married to Kane, the explorer, secretly; but proved her marriage after Dr. Kane's death, and inherited her share of his estate.

This was the rise of modern spiritualism.

From the response by raps, other modes of manifestation appeared, and seances were held in all parts of the United States, and in Europe. The writer has seen Mrs. Gerrit Smith, in their parlor at Whitesboro, N. Y., sit at a $2,000 piano, and sing hymns to the spirits; and Judge Edmunds, of the State Supreme bench, and N. P. Tallmadge, United States Senator from New York, were among the converts to and open advocates of spiritualism. The question, "What produced the phenomena?"—spirits, trick or science?—is as far from being settled now as when the epidemic began. Facts, evidently supernatural, were abundantly proved by the testimony of witnesses whose oath was good in all courts. They were affirmed on one hand and denied on the other; and those who believed the facts became spiritualists; and if their origin was Satanic, this was what Satan desired. The devil raised the dust of doubt and disputation, and hid under it.

The only issue discussed with spiritualism should have been, whether consulting familiar spirits is worshiping them, and so forbidden of God. As the discussion was managed, it inured to the gain of infidelity, and injury of the Christian religion.

Robert Dale Owen, spiritualist, socialist, founder of New Harmony, Ind., Democrat, member of Congress, minister to Naples, and leading writer on Spiritualism,—while he denied the existence of a personal devil, heaven or hell—affirmed the existence of "spirits of a low order," whose influence "might be readily mistaken for what has been called possession."

When the moral meanness of the movement, as tested by its fruits, began to lead the public to the belief that mediumship was indeed demoniacal possession, two of the "Fox girls," now become old women, appeared in public and offered to prove the whole movement was a fraud; and that the rappings were produced by a joint of one of their toes. These false women were followed by lecturers, who had been Spiritualists, offering to prove the phenomena were produced by jugglery and sleight of hand. Little is now said of the grand discovery that communications can be had by spirits between this world and the next. But the movement, after tracking its way by ruined families, free-love, infidel clubs, and vice-breeding associations, is now sinking into corners with Sunday lectures, and out-door camp meetings, the modern "groves" and "high places," the national brothels and mills of idolatry which have turned Palestine from "a land flowing with milk and honey," the home of God's chosen people, over to owls, hyenas and Turks.

MASONIC SCOFFERS.

Can it be possible that Freemasons can mistake scoffing for refutation? The following is from the Voice of Masonry, Sept., 1890:

"CYNOSURE" FALSEHOODS REFUTED.

The Christian (?) Cynosure asks, "How shall the Masons be Christianized?" They are already Christianized. Far more justly it should ask, How shall Cynosureans be Christianized?

The Christian (?) Cynosure falsely asserts that the Christian religion and Freemasonry are diverse, and in the very strictest antagonism. The great light of Freemasonry and of Christianity is the Holy Bible, and the essence and spirit of both are the essence and spirit of that divinely given book. How then is it possible for them to be diverse, and in the very strictest antagonism?

The Christian (?) Cynosure advises its patrons to "buy the truth and sell it not." Well, if they do they will cease buying that paper and purchase a Bible, a work very few of them are acquainted with.

The Christian (?) Cynosure constantly charges others with leprosy, but never conceives that the leprosy is in itself.

The Christian (?) Cynosure asserts that "the scheme of secrecy is devil-born." Then let it answer this: Why are so many of the mysteries of earth and heaven yet unrevealed to man? Does God err in withholding from him full knowledge of what has been, of what is, and of what shall be? Also, is it not true that Cynosureanism is devil-born? Are not its falseness, its malice, its deceptions, its libelings and its persecutions, all devil-born and devil-enacted? Where has it ever shown any of the spirit of the Divine Lord and Master?

"In the last days there shall come scoffers." 2 Pet. 3:3. The above from the leading Masonic paper in the United States, calls the above mere scoffing a "refutation of Cynosure falsehoods;" while it neither specifies, or attempts to point out a single falsehood to refute. If this brief notice comes to the eye of a Freemason possessed of candor (and there are such), we beg him to notice the fearful falsehood of the above article, which asserts:

1. "The great light of Freemasonry is the Holy Bible." The falsehood of the above is proved by Chase's "Digest of Masonic Law; being a complete code of regulations, decisions and opinions." This widely-sold Masonic authority says on page 208: "Blue Lodge Masonry has nothing whatever to do with the Bible. It is not founded on the Bible. If it was it would not be Masonry; it would be something else." "Blue Lodge Masonry," we must remember, is fundamental Masonry,—the basis of all Masonic systems and rites.

2. Then it calls Jesus Christ the "Divine Lord and Master." Yet the lodge raps down a brother who attemps to pray to our "Divine Lord." Is that not fearful falsehood?

The Voice asks, if the scheme of Masonry is "devil-born," why are so many of the mysteries of heaven and earth unrevealed to man?" We answer, because they are above our comprehension. That is not "secrecy."

THE FARMERS' ALLIANCE.

Two weeks ago we described briefly the original organization bearing this name, and established by farmers in the vicinity of Chicago and gentlemen associated with them in agricultural interests. While intended to use political measures to secure benefits to the farmers of America, it purposely avoided the secret society features which made the grange odious, and was established as an open, free, American society. Its principles were approved by farmers everywhere, and the organization spread to north, west and south. In the States where a black skin was still regarded as a bar to social and political privileges, or rights even, the admission of Negro farmers was unendurable. But the founders were too firm in their belief of the equal rights of man to yield to the sentiment of caste and the body of the Alliance stood by them. The Southerners, however, would not endure the black man and split off into an alliance of their own, which they hedged about with secretism, and the religious rites peculiar to ordinary paganizing lodges. A ritual of initiation was adopted, with grips, passwords and an obligation, which, without the form of an ordinary oath, is intended to have the force of a lodge oath at least. This obligation to secrecy is for the pretended purpose of keeping the business counsels of the order to itself. It has a sort of confession of faith, for no infidel is supposed to be a member. Among its principles is this, that "neither politics (party) nor religion (sectarian) can be injected into the Alliance." It professes to educate the farmer in political science; to promote unity and charity; to produce a better state of society; to "create a better understanding for sustaining civil officers in maintaining law and order," whatever that may be; to promote harmony, good will and brotherly love; to "suppress personal, local, sectional and national prejudices," "unhealthful rivalries" and "selfish ambition;" and finally:

Seventh—The brightest jewels which it garners are the tears of widows and orphans, and its imperative commands are to visit the homes where lacerated hearts are bleeding; to assuage the sufferings of a brother or a sister; bury the dead; care for the widows and educate the orphans; to exercise charity towards all offenders; to construe words and deeds in their most favorable light, granting honesty of purpose and good intentions to others, and to protect the principles of the Alliance unto death. Its laws are reason and equity, its cardinal doctrines inspire purity of thought and life, and its intentions are "peace on earth and good will towards men."

Such a declaration of principles condemns this organization at first sight. It is in the lodge rut. No secret society ever formed but was to rejuvenate the earth with all the graces and virtues of religion, and make a paradise where moral deserts had before existed. And all this moral and spiritual regeneration was to come about by this lodge machinery, whether with or without the help of God who in Christ has declared himself to be the only door to this perfect state of society.

The first national convention of this secret alliance took place in Shreveport, La., October 12, 1887. In December of last year the organization absorbed several similar bodies, and a coalition was made of the National Farmers' Alliance, the Co-operative Union of America, and the National Agricultural Wheel. The new body is known as the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union. A membership of some 2,000,000 is claimed. A great literary bureau is maintained at Washington in an old dismantled church at No. 511 Ninth street, where the official organ, the National Economist, is printed. This paper has reached number 26 of its third volume and, it is said, issues more than 100,000 copies weekly at $1.00 a year. The several leaders of the order receive large salaries varying from $2,500 to $25,000 per year.

Although widely organized even in the Northern States the largest membership of the order is in the South, where it has thrown down its non-political barriers, and is threatening the seats of numerous Southern Congressmen. Some of these disturbed Democrats are anxious and angry and declare that the movement is nothing more or less than a huge money-making scheme run by a set of adventurers; that the leader is a Dr. C. W. Macune, who is chairman of the Executive Board, an Illinois man who drifted around by California into Texas. Though quarrelling at first over the Negro, the order has found a place for him in some side-show place, and Gen. Humphreys, an ex-confederate, is busy getting them to take one more secret society and so gain at a bound the prosperity, comfort and ease which are promised in the constitutional provisions of the order.

—Pres. C. J. Kephart, formerly of Avalon College, Mo., but now at the institution at Annville, Pa., has written a pamphlet on Romanism, which is regarded by some as among the ablest documents of its class.

—Bro. Stoddard in Boston is having the assistance of some of the leading pastors of the city in reaching members of their congregations, and he hopes to secure a large list of readers for the Cynosure among them.

—Any facts bearing on the evils of Mormonism will be thankfully received by Rev. A. Sims of Otterville, Ont., from any of the Cynosure readers. He is preparing a book which will treat of this among other evils that threaten our nation.

—It would puzzle an anatomist, or a gymnast even, to tell why it is necessary to fill a page or two of a religious paper with pictures of nude men in order to show how to take the measurements of arms and legs; therefore we must expect nothing of the kind from the editor of the Y. M. C. A. paper of Chicago for such a collection of fascinating engravings.

—Bro. C. S. Bullock, late of the Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill., one of the participants in the College contest at the last Illinois State Convention at Elgin and president of the Students Bureau of Correspondence, returns from the Missionary Conference at Indianapolis with the determination to go as missionary to Jamaica. He expects soon to go to his new work.

—The American Sabbath Union is represented in this city by Rev. James B. Mills, late of Berea, O., a very able advocate of the Sabbath cause. His field is the district comprising the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin, and he is now securing a district meeting in connection with the annual convention of the State Association in November. He spoke last Sabbath in the College Church, Wheaton.

—Upon the general subject of advertisements, it might be said that many are caught by the low prices offered for commodities. It is safe to say the rule will always be that you pay for all the article is worth. You will not get an organ worth $100 for $35, but a cheap instrument in cost will be fully as cheap in real value. We lately saw an advertisement of a Mammoth Encyclopedia in four volumes for 50 cents—amazingly cheap. But the books were worth about 50 cents and no more.

—The article in last number on the investigation of the New York Central strike by the State authorities and its terrible reaction upon Powderly and his lodge methods should have been credited to the Chicago Tribune. Another blow for the hopes of the lodge is the entire approval of Mr. Depew of the action of the subordinate managers of the road. Powderly presumed much upon his influence as president of the road to secure a possible victory for his men. Depew crushes such expectations with a word.

—We have lately answered several inquiries about a silver-plating advertisement recently in the Cynosure. Every reasonable effort was made to know if the firm advertising was genuine, but no information could be got until the advertisement had run out. We learn very much to our regret that the offer made was a dishonest one. Instead of $3 or $4 for the needed apparatus and instruction, a second call for $5 is made upon all applicants. We endeavor to guard against fraud and our readers may rely upon our making every effort to prevent imposition.

—Mrs. Laura S. Haviland, the great-souled Quakeress of this city, bears lightly the weight of her 82 years. Her visit with a daughter to our office last Saturday was like a burst of sunshine. The Friends meeting of which she is a member sends her this year as their representative to the yearly meeting at Plainfield, Ind. She has also prepared an article for the Cynosure giving her opinion of the secret society system, which we shall shortly have the pleasure of giving to our readers. A new edition of the volume telling the story of her remarkable life is now on sale at $1.50 and $2.25 per volume according to binding. It is a book worth reading again and again. It may be had at this office.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. W. F. Crafts is in Iowa aiding in the preparatory work for the State Sabbath convention.

—Rev. A. B. Curtis, one of our valued contributors, has lately removed from Michigan to Branchport, N. Y.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman returned to Berea, Kentucky, from the Indianapolis Missionary Conference quite unwell, and is not able to write a further account of that remarkable meeting as we were expecting.

—Elder Rufus Smith, who lately removed from Maryville, Mo., to Wisconsin, called Monday morning to tell us of his plans for city mission work. He has lately visited Minneapolis, and finds there much work to do. During a few days he has been with Col. Clarke in the Pacific Garden Mission in this city.

—Dr. J. Blount, a beloved and constant friend of our reform, died at his home in Byron, Ill., last week. His daughter has been a member of the Wheaton College faculty since her graduation in 1886. Dr. Blount was a valued member of the church of which Rev. J. P. Stoddard was pastor for some years before entering the N. C. A. work in 1871.

—Mr. J. S. Hickman, whose name was among the first to be enlisted in our reform, has been putting in a good testimony against the late Masonic corner-stone laying at Hoopeston, Ill. The stone was laid to hold up a new college building in that town, which is being erected as a monument by an aged citizen who calls the institution after his own name. Though but a single protest seemed to be heard there was evident trepidation in the ranks of the lodge, for every man's common sense approved the testimony.

—Rev. Charles H. Hunt of the Presbyterian church, Colfax, Iowa, has been doing a noble work for the Sabbath cause in Iowa. He was instrumental in organizing the State Sabbath Association; and has written, traveled and spared no expense to make its work successful. A State convention is now in preparation for which with secretary help he is writing letters to all parts of the State to arouse the churches. Beside his pastoral work he also edits the Evangel of Rest, the State Sabbath paper. Bro. Hunt is true to his convictions on other reforms. The church at Guthrie Center declined some time since his services as pastor because of his opposition to secret societies frankly stated.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 10, 1890.

It cannot for a moment be doubted by any one who has given the subject even the slightest attention that the class of illustrated periodicals which make a specialty of printing revolting pictures of crime and vulgarity together with the most disgusting and revolting descriptions of them and their participants down to the minutest detail, do a great deal of harm, particularly to the young. Therefore the bill introduced by Representative Wickham, of Ohio, denying to such publications the use of the mails, was hailed with delight by the friends of moral reform. The bill is an excellent one and should become a law; but, will it? Not as long as the wealthy, widely circulated and influential (politically) metropolitan daily newspapers continue, as they do now, to violate good taste and morality to almost as great an extent as do the illustrated weeklies—about the only difference being in the pictures. If the bill became a law it would close the mails to a large number of the big dailies, and the growing generation of the country would thereby be largely benefited, for unfortunately many of them are entirely unfit for family reading.

Mr. Harrison's appointment of a new commissioner of the District of Columbia seems to be satisfactory to the temperance folk. The gentleman is not, as far as I know, connected with any temperance organization, but he has the reputation of being a friend of moral reformers of all kinds, and great things, particularly in the restriction of the liquor traffic, are expected, now that all three of our commissioners will be of the same mind on the subject. Mr. Harrison has endeared himself to all friends of the cause by publicly saying, "While not a fanatic on the subject; I desire to see a decrease of the liquor traffic in Washington, and will do all that lies within my power to bring about such a result. Knowing that they have the authorities, both local and national, behind them will nerve the temperance people to increase the vigor of their assaults upon the rum power, which has too long, by the connivance of those in authority, had practically its own way at the national capital.

The ridicule which the Senators who dared not openly antagonize the resolution of Senator Plumb prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor in the Senate restaurant, heaped upon that measure seems to have had the desired effect. The resolution was referred to the committee on rules and the impression is general here that it will never be reported from that committee. Perhaps if there was less liquor sold and drank in the Capitol there would be fewer of the disgraceful scenes which have been all too common in Congress of late.

The White House is now in the hands of painters, cleaners and decorators, undergoing its annual "house-cleaning" while Mr. Harrison and his family are away. The celebrated Blue room will be entirely re-decorated upon plans adopted upon the suggestions of Mrs. Harrison. Blue will still be its color, three shades being used by the artists.

The Senate having passed the tariff bill, after the longest similar debate in our history, the next business in order is the House bill prohibiting the use of the mails by lotteries and by newspapers that print lottery advertisements. Senator Sawyer, who is in charge of this bill, is in dead earnest, and there is no open opposition to it among the Senators so far as anyone knows; therefore it is extremely probable that the bill will have been passed by the Senate and sent to the President for his approval before this letter is printed. *

THE HOME.

THOU GOD OF BETHEL, LEAVE US NOT.

Thou God of Bethel, leave us not,
Though we so soon forget thee,
The sacred day, and hour, and spot,
Where in our need we met thee;
The angel ministries of youth,
Stern voices uttered later
To hold us steadfast to the truth,
To thee, our great Creator.

The vows we made thee in distress,
Vows of our need begotten,
Since lost in our unthankfulness,
Or in our joys forgotten;
The altar, in our straits we made,
And in our zeal anointed;
Thy house, where our warm vows we paid,
In sacred ways appointed.

Thou God of Bethel, here we kneel,
These broken vows renewing;
Us to a true repentance seal,
Our upward path pursuing.
Go thou before us, in the road,
All our sad past forgiven;
Make life itself the house of God,
The very gate of heaven.

THE CONDUCT OF CHURCH WORSHIP.

In some churches there is a spirit of worship that seems to pervade the very atmosphere. You feel it as you enter the doors. It is manifest in the appearance of the worshipers. It is very evident in their manner in the service. There is dignity, reverence, harmony, impressiveness, from the beginning to the end. You are taken possession of at once, and unconsciously are carried onward and upward. In other churches, on the contrary, one is impressed by characteristics which are the reverse of these. There is a lack of reverence in the congregation. The service is undignified and its conduct slovenly. It is without harmony and is constantly dropping. There is no uplift to it, either spiritual or mental, and one comes away wearied and disturbed instead of rested and stimulated.

We are increasingly convinced, after years of attentive consideration, that the responsibility of blame on one side, and of credit on the other, rests almost entirely with the minister. It is in this "like minister like people." In non-liturgical churches especially, the service is largely dependent on the leader. It matters not much, but everything, what kind of man he is. His spirit and manner are quickly contagious. Accessories cannot hide him. Form and ceremonies may aid him, but the nature and effectiveness of the service from the beginning to the end is dependent on him. His personality, his carriage, his tone, his ways, influence all. Let him appreciate the dignity and responsibility of his position, let him be reverent, dignified, calm, not only in spirit but in manner, let him look and act and speak appropriately to the place and the occasion, and the people will quickly respond in like spirit and manner. The most "barren service" can be made rich by such a man and method. The people will be unconsciously drawn and guided by him into devoutness. They will worship with him. They will listen in stillness. The hymns, the prayers, the Scripture readings, will be entered into with sympathetic interest and fervor.

But on the other hand, let the minister hurry into the church and the pulpit; let him be nervous and fussy, wanting in calmness and dignity; let him be glib and commonplace and colloquial in prayer; let him handle and read the Scriptures as he handles and reads any other book, as though it had no more sacredness attached to it or were worthy of no more reverence; let him sit, or fumble over his notices, or study his sermon in the singing of the hymns, as though he had no part with the people in them, and in large church or small church, with much service or meager service, there will be little real worship, and what there is will be broken and disfigured and weakened. From such churches people not only of good taste and intelligence, but people of worshipful spirits, will be likely to turn and find their way to those where in an orderly, reverent and worthy way they may render service unto God. —The Advance.

MR. SPURGEON ON PREACHING.

At the Metropolitan Tabernacle one Sabbath morning in 1888 there was a large muster of Pan-Presbyterian delegates and other divines, including one bishop. Mr. Spurgeon, being still in very feeble health, invited his "dear and honored friend," Rev. Dr. John Hall, of New York, whom he espied among the congregation, to ascend the platform and offer the general supplication. Dr. Hall, with his colossal figure, imposing presence and powerful voice, seemed quite at home as he rose to lead the devotions of a congregation of well-nigh six thousand people. The presence of a strong ministerial element had been anticipated by Mr. Spurgeon, for his sermon dealt specially with preaching. It was based on the angel's charge to the apostles after releasing them from prison: "Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life" (Acts 5:20). The agents of the Lord Jesus, said Mr. Spurgeon, for the spread of the Gospel are men. The angel who brought the apostles out of prison might have preached, but the celestial visitor's mission went no further than releasing the prisoners. It seemed almost with reluctance that the angel drew back, leaving the liberated captives to proclaim the Gospel. This put a great honor upon men, for by them the conquering of the world for God is to be achieved. Men should preach the Gospel whatever their vocation; but some had the greater privilege, for their vocation was to preach. And what a vocation it was! To rule empires was but a trifle compared with the preacher's mission. Mr. Spurgeon was glad this ministry was committed to men, because, imperfect as they were, they were better preachers to their fellows, knowing their sorrows and struggles, than angels could ever be. He supposed a seraph would command a very large congregation, for a time at least; but being so superior to them, ere long they might be led to exclaim, "Let me hear my old minister again, with his lips of clay and heart of love." The apostles glorified God the better coming as they did from their fishing boats. Somebody had said that it proved the divinity of our holy religion that it survived ministers. And there was a good deal of truth in it. It was wonderful that that congregation had survived him. "We ministers are poor tools," proceeded Mr. Spurgeon, adding, amid general laughter, "but I don't mean you brethren from America. I mean us English. We are poor tools, after all, and if God uses us it is greatly to his glory." He sometimes thought God must greatly delight in what was done by his weak people. The Lord liked to put some of his weak Black Princes in places of great peril that they might win their spurs, and that he might take pride in their courage. And did they not think the angels must often wonder at preachers and say, "I wish the great Lord would let us do it, we could do it better." "I charge you," Mr. Spurgeon went on, "by the angels of God who are not permitted to touch this work, to discharge it with a vigor worthy of the high calling." The manner of teaching was hinted at in the text. Men were to preach the first moment they could get anybody to listen to them. They might like to stop and study some particular point, but the angel says, "Go, get you to your teaching." And men are to preach boldly. Some thought they should preach only to the intellectual. But they were to reach the people somehow. In London to-day the busiest workers for Christ were to be found among the masses. If in that Tabernacle he could gather so many to hear, then that was the best place for him to preach in. They were chosen of God to bring the Gospel to the people, and they must do it; and if one style of speaking did not suit they must try another.—London Christian World.

Rev. Joseph Please-them-all fancies that he has discovered how to so present the Gospel and live it as to provoke no unfriendly criticism, and Rev. Joseph Please-them-all fancies that he has discovered how to so conduct revivals as to stir up no antagonism and to provoke no unfriendly criticisms. When he hears of others who have not learned this art, he congratulates himself on his superior grace and tact, and puts them down as on the "vinegar" line. While it is doubtless true that some are thus soured, yet he seems blind to the fact that a "whole Gospel" pressed with the energy and vehemence which the Holy Ghost imparts will everywhere awaken opposition, and that in boasting of his peculiar success he is but advertising the fact either he does not proclaim a whole Gospel, or else that he does not press home its claims upon the consciences of men so that they feel them. Jesus, the apostles, Wesley, Finney, Harrison, Weber, and the men who have had revivals that have rescued their thousands from lives of degradation and the pit of hell, were unable thus to win success. It is true that where pure Christianity is in the ascendancy, this opposition will be less open, but wherever carnality is, it exists.—Friends' Expositor.

HOW JARED SPARKS WENT TO SCHOOL.

"My vessel will sail in a few days now, so I shall start on my tramp to New London to-morrow, and I thought I would come to say good-bye and give Jared, here, this book to make him think of me once in a while," and the old sailor, Barzillai Waterman, took from the pocket of his heavy pea-jacket a thin, blue, paper-covered little book. "I bought it at a stall in Liverpool one day when the old 'Martha Taylor' put in there and we got leave to go on shore. I took the notion into my head I might study it some, but I couldn't make head or tail of the gibberish. I find it is easier for me to pick up what navigation I need as I sail along than it is to learn it out of a book."

A little black-eyed, curly-headed boy who was lying flat upon the white, sanded floor, working out problems in mathematics of his own improvising, with a bit of charcoal, on the smooth stone hearth, sprang to his feet, eagerly took the book from the old sailor's hand, and cried out, "Oh, thank you, thank you Uncle Barzil," and dropping down again in front of the firelight, was lost in the magical pages.

The old man laughed and nodded at the boy's mother. "Just like his grandmother, my sister Bertha, your mother," he said. "She used to read everything she could lay her eyes on, and she wrote some proper good verses, to my thinking. You like to read about places and things, but I would rather go and see them. I suspect Jared will do both, and write about what he has heard and seen as likely as not; but he has got something now to study on for one while. He won't conquer that book right away, if the schoolmaster does say he's got the better of every arithmetic book in town, so far."

If the bright boy did not conquer the science of navigation, he did its history from the days of Medina and Cortes, and from a supplementary nautical almanac he was able to understand how the science was made available to seamen. On clear nights he studied the heavens from the hill-tops, and the whole solar system seemed to be revolving in the boy's active brain. He drew maps, diagrams, and charts with a pointed stick in the hard-trodden earth in front of his mother's door, or bits of charcoal did duty on the sunny doorstep and the stone hearth.

When the pumpkins began to form on the sprawling vines that bordered the cornfields with their huge prickly leaves and flaunting yellow blossoms, he watched them with eager interest, and one after another was picked, not to be fashioned into that delight of most boys, a jack-o'lantern, but to be transfixed with a flax spindle and made to revolve inside his mother's three-legged iron pot.

But the vegetables withered and decayed, and the pot was brought into requisition for cooking the dinner, and Jared cast about in his mind how he was to procure a globe of less perishable material. There was a turning lathe at old Moses Slafter's, some two miles off, and up the valley the resolute youngster went with no loitering steps, and succeeded in procuring a wooden ball about as large as his black curly head. This was a treasure, indeed, and over the white, polished sphere he spent many a delightful hour in drawing in ink the meridian and parallel lines, the various divisions of land and water and all the minute geographical diagrams.

The old stone chimney and hearth, the only relics of his mother's humble dwelling on that lonely roadside, but a few minutes' walk from where I am now writing, now moss-grown and fern-embowered, might, could they talk, tell the story of the perfecting of this patient, skillful labor. I have the honor of its possession, the precious heirloom being frequently admired by visitors to my library. The parallels and meridians are drawn and numbered with a hot pointed iron, the grand divisions are traced in ink; the axis is a coarse knitting needle, and the pine frame upon which the ingeniously constructed globe is suspended is whittled out and carefully dovetailed together with a pocket-knife. A rather crude affair, taken altogether, but a wonderful piece of mechanism when we take into account that it was made nearly a century ago by a child of ten who had never seen any apparatus of the kind, and who had nothing to guide him in its construction except the ideas he had gained from that meagre and abstruse book "Uncle Barzil," the old sailor, had given him.

This wonderfully bright and studious boy, who afterwards became one of the most distinguished scholars of his day, was Jared Sparks. The place of his birth and boyhood was the picturesque town of Willington, Tolland county, Conn. Here he struggled on and on, doing the work and learning the lessons that lay nearest his hand. He worked on the rugged farm; he learned the carpenter's trade; he taught the district school winters, and, as such boys always do, gained many friends.

One of these was the village pastor, Rev. Hubbel Loomis, afterwards a college president, and the father of Elias Loomis, LL.D., the eminent professor of astronomy and mathematics of Yale College. One day the pastor said to the youth, "My barn needs shingling, and you ought now to begin Latin. Can we not strike up a bargain?" Jared was glad of the opportunity, and day by day he came across the fields to the parsonage, and alternated his favorite studies, mathematics and Latin, with laying shingles.

When the barn roof glistened in the sun with its new coat of hand-shaved chestnut, the clover was showing its pink blossoms in the field near by, and Jared stayed on to help in curing and storing the fragrant crop.

One day the Rev. Abial Abbott, the minister, of an adjoining town, drove up to make Parson Loomis a call, and that gentleman said, "I have a prodigy out there in the hay-field, a youth who has been studying Latin only eight weeks, and yet is reading two hundred lines of Virgil a day. Please go and call him, daughter Jerusha, I want him to recite to Bro. Abbott."

Presently the youth came, in his tow shirt and trousers and knit suspenders. His feet were bare, and in his hand he carried a coarse straw hat. Tall, thin, shy, but with an assertive manliness about him, the visitor took a quick and strong fancy for the boy. He received him cordially and critically listened to the recitation.

After it was completed, he said: "Jared, you must go away to some school. There is none better that I know of, where a boy can help himself, than that in Exeter. My cousin, Mr. Benjamin Abbott, is the principal, and I will send in your application at once. I am sure you will be received there. In the meantime you can be making your arrangements about undertaking the journey."

"I can walk," said the elated boy.

"Very well, my boy. My wife and I are to go there in our chaise early in September to visit our relatives and we will carry your trunk." And so that was the way it came about.

"Before Moses and Aaron lived, these same stars were testifying to the unspeakable power of the Almighty, and the faith that they inspire and strengthen draws the yearning soul onward and prompts it to do its best," said the youth to a friend who had met him to say good-bye in the gray of the September morning, as they stood gazing upward to watch the stars he loved go out before the light of the day that was to see him far beyond the farthest hills that had thus far bounded his line of vision.

He walked the one hundred and twenty miles to the academy in three days, and thereafter his life as a student went successfully forward. At no grade in his ascending course, as undergraduate, tutor, professor, president of Harvard University, brilliant preacher, Congressional chaplain, editor, historian, did he belittle his childhood training. He always honored the virtues of his mother and the painstaking of his early teachers. In his later life, as he graded and beautified his fine grounds opposite the College Memorial Hall in Cambridge, planting trees and shrubs, he recalled those early days on the old Willington farm and the pumpkins he used to make into "miniature worlds." As he planned his own spacious and elegant residence there, and overlooked the workmen, he said to them, "My own early training stands me in good stead, for I am a carpenter by trade."—Golden Rule.

TEMPERANCE.

THE WARNING BELL.

With lungs of fire and ribs of steel,
Low-whispering valve and humming wheel,
The iron horse the train is bringing.
Hear the loud scream and thunder stroke,
See showers of flame and clouds of smoke;
Look out, the warning bell is ringing.

Ye idle, gazing throngs, stand back,
There's danger on the smoking track,
And where the busy switch is swinging.
"Now all aboard," now off again;
No drones can reach the moving train;
Look out, the danger bell is ringing.

Take heed, the engine of reform
Halts not in sunshine nor in storm,
'Tis freedom's song the mass are singing.
Behind behold the tottering thrones
And a dazed multitude of drones;
The bell of progress now is ringing.

The slave has doffed his yoke and chain,
The drinker will not drink again,
Glad news the harnessed lightning's bringing;
Oppression casts his scourge away,
We see the dawn of a bright day,
The golden bells of heaven are ringing,

NEVERMORE.

If Edgar Allan Poe had been as level-headed as that Boston saloon-keeper, when the hideous, black "Raven" of remorse invaded the chamber of his soul, instead of cowering, beseeching and despairing at the appalling announcement that it would depart "nevermore," he would have summoned a policeman and had the "ominous bird" arrested on the spot. But the raven came to the saloon-keeper in the form of an innocent schoolgirl. By some accident he attended a school exhibition, during which a girl recited a poem portraying the ruin of the rum-seller's work, setting forth the woes and heartache of the drunkard's home. It made the saloonkeeper feel uncomfortable, as he said, "like a criminal," but he went straight to the authorities to have the beak taken from his heart, and the burning of the fiery eyes taken out of his soul. There was no sentimental nonsense about him, but plain "business." He laid complaint before the School Board, and demanded that impolite references to and criticisms on his trade should be stopped. The gentry which he represents cannot endure that their sensitive consciences and delicate sensibilities should be outraged in such fashion. Of course the Board which eliminated a history from the course because it told some truth regarding the sale of "indulgences" will attend to this case at once. By the way, does not Boston need a new crop of sturdy reformers, such as rose up some fifty years ago? Or is it, as the Chicago Tribune says, too late, seeing that Boston is in the hands of the un-American anti-temperance classes?—Christian Standard.

A SAD PICTURE.

The whisky element in this country has been rapidly ascending in power, and is the one great peril threatening our nation, but it is my opinion that neither Democrats nor Republicans can be preserved in whisky. In one section the liquor syndicates hold the Democrats by the beard, in another the Republicans by the beard. Unless checked the grasp will finally be upon the nation's throat. Before their power can reach so far let us take them by their throats and break their necks.

By acting together now it can be done without bloodshed, possibly only a few street riots. If delayed until the population grows it will become a monster too powerful to be put down.

High license entrenches itself behind the cupidity of taxpayers.

Driving along a street in New York I noticed an elegant building with a saloon below and brightly lighted rooms above. I asked the driver what the rooms above were used for. They were gambling rooms and apartments where the strange woman dwells.

Low license asks for your son; high license for your daughter. I will never vote to license grogshops or gilded saloons.—Joseph Cook.

DOES IT MEAN FREE WHISKY?

A dispatch from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, says: "Just after the act of Congress on original packages George Williams, a brewer of this city, was arrested for selling beer in original packages, he acting as agent for outside parties. To test the matter the case was contested. A writ of habeas corpus was applied for to Judge Stoneman of the Supreme Court here. The case has been continued several times at the request of the Prosecuting Attorney, and when it came up to-day County Attorney Smith asked that the case be dismissed, and it was done. No reason was given, but it is generally understood that the County Attorney had doubts about the matter. A large number of original-package cases have been stopped and it is becoming quite generally believed that the reign of free whisky is upon the State."

PROHIBITION IN INDIANA.

Jesse Aults' saloon at Greentown, ten miles east of Kokomo, Ind., was blown up by dynamite one morning lately. The cartridge was placed beneath the floor under the bar, and the entire front of the building was wrecked. Loss about $500. Greentown has steadily fought the licensing of a saloon, so far successfully, and it was a matter of surprise when Ault was granted, without a fight, a license last spring. But it now appears that dynamite instead of talk will be the program. The building is owned by Francis Stillwell, who was balked last winter in attempting to start a saloon. He says he will rebuild, and that two more saloons will be started on the grounds. The perpetrators are not known.

The following was published some years ago, and is no doubt as true to-day as it was then: "Most emphatically are we persuaded that drunkards can be saved only by coming to Christ and being soundly converted to God. The taste for strong drink once established can never be removed except by the all-powerful grace of God. Without this there is neither help nor hope for the drunkard. No legal remedies can meet his case. No social combinations can lift him from his degradation and ruin. No "mystic tie" or secret affinities and brotherhoods can rescue him. He must have strength put in him by the Almighty, or he is already lost and doomed. Gospel temperance is what he needs. He must be forgiven and renewed by the grace of God or perish.—Standard and Home Journal.

The presence of the Prohibition party in politics is a moral education. It is distinctly a good thing, a glorious thing, a hopeful thing, that men should be willing to work as the Prohibitionists are working, for a great moral principle. And their labors are, we think, destined to achieve a result nobler and more lasting by far than the mere passage of a sumptuary law. For the Prohibitionists are bringing men by thousands to see the evils of intemperance and to investigate its causes; they are forcing men to see that beneath the polished surface of our civilization lies a festering mass of misery and corruption. They are causing men to think.—Henry George.

In New York city war has been declared on the immature cigarette smoker. Policemen have been cautioned individually and collectively, to enforce the spirit of the law of which the following is the letter: "No child, actually or apparently under 16 years, shall smoke or in any way use any cigar, cigarette or tobacco, in any form whatsoever in any public street, place or resort." A violation of this provision will be a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $10 and not less than $2 for each offense.

It simply proves that when the constant tendency of a thing is to gravitate downward; the seal of the pit is on it.

The great army of summer tourists have returned, and as this has been an exceptionally favorable season, the hotel keepers and private boarding houses have reaped a proportionate gain. Maine alone, with her many sea-coast resorts, has been the goal of at least a hundred thousand weary seekers after rest and pleasure; and it is estimated have left not less, and probably more, than six million dollars behind them.

Wellesley College begins with a larger number of students than ever before, as evidenced by the numberless trunks that pile up with every newly-arrived train, waiting for the expressman to take them to their destination, and telling no tales of the home sacrifices and the loving hands that helped pack them. Surely this is Woman's Hour, and if anybody doubts it let them visit Wellesley just as the term opens and view the throngs of fair collegians pacing up and down its streets. Heaven be with them and make them worthy of the loving devotion which in so many cases has prayed and toiled to send them here; so that when they leave their beloved Alma Mater they may show the world a higher vision of cultured Christian womanhood than it has ever seen before.

Can I close better than with one or two choice thoughts from Prof. Henry Drummond's late address at Northfield, Mass.:

"There is no greatness in things. Things can not be great. The only greatness is unselfish love."

"To love abundantly is to live abundantly, and to love forever is to live forever."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The missionaries assembled at the recent Shanghai Conference sent out an urgent call for a reinforcement of 1,000 men to enter China within the next five years. Not ministers only are sought, but unordained men as well, evangelists, teachers and physicians.

—Rev. A. J. Diaz, who has been carrying on an important evangelical work in Cuba as a Baptist missionary, has been arrested and imprisoned. His case has been presented to the State Department as that of an American citizen who is a victim of religious persecution.

—An enthusiastic party of missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church South left St. Louis a few days ago for Shanghai, China. Three were unmarried ladies. They will be absent at least five years.

—At the anniversary meeting of the Church Missionary Society in London, a special telegram was received, calling for instant reinforcements for Africa, and four volunteers who responded were dispatched from the meeting itself. An anonymous gift of $25,000 was received "as a substitute for service," and a number of smaller gifts with a like purpose.

—It is understood that Dr. Arthur T. Pierson has consented to undertake a brief tour among American churches in behalf of the work of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. It is probable that he will enter upon this work in the early autumn—September or October. Dr. Pierson's success in arousing missionary interest among the churches of Great Britain, is pledged that he will do like valuable service here at home.

—A scheme for raising money for missions is that of the "extra-cent-a-day" band. Its plan was thus detailed at Northfield the other day: "It is estimated that there are in all lands 30,000,000 Protestant evangelical Christians. One cent a day, or its equivalent, from each one of that great host would amount in a single year to the enormous sum of $109,500,000. I believe, and I say it deliberately, that the 'extra-cent-a-day' band may be made the greatest missionary power, financially, that the world has ever known."

—The young people of Lincoln Park Congregational Church of this city, are raising money for a missionary wagon for Erzroom, Turkey. The wagon will soon be shipped.

—Advices just received in New York from Paris show marked progress in many parts of France in reference to Sunday observance. Committees are being formed in many towns, and it is now proposed to form a national organization, similar to the American Sabbath Union, to awaken public sentiment and assist in the work of organizing the entire nation for Sabbath reform.

—It is expected that a number of missionaries of the Reformed Presbyterian church will sail from New York about the middle of this month. The Board of Foreign Missions of that church have instructed a committee to make arrangements for a farewell meeting to be held in the Third Reformed Presbyterian Church, West Twenty third street, just prior to their sailing, the exact date not yet having been fixed. The missionaries returning are Dr. David Metheny, who addressed the April Conference in this city, with his wife and three children, and Miss Evadne M. Sterrett, these of the Tarsus Mission, headquarters at Mersine; Miss Mattie R. Wylie, of the Latakia Mission, and recent appointments of the board; Rev. Robert J. Dodds and wife and Mrs. Mary R. McCarroll, daughter of Rev. J. McCracken, of Southfield, Mich., for the Tarsus Mission, Mersine, Turkey.

—Colonel and Mrs. George R. Clarke, of the Pacific Garden Mission in this city, issued invitations last week to the thirteenth anniversary of the founding of the mission, which was held on Sabbath afternoon at the mission-rooms, corner of Van Buren street and Fourth avenue. This is one of the best-known of the city missions in the country, and most successful in reclaiming lost men and women to Christ. The devoted husband and wife who founded and yet manage it are among those who can say to the Lord, "None of self and all of thee."

—Rev. J. G. Waller and Mr. Kennedy, of Trinity College, Toronto, have offered themselves as missionaries to Japan. This is the first movement of the kind in the Canadian Episcopal church.

—Rev. Dr. Alfred Nevin, one of the most prominent divines and authors in the Presbyterian church, died at his residence in Lancaster, Penn., lately, aged seventy-five years. He had filled many of the prominent positions of the church, was editor for a time of several of the church papers, and was a very voluminous writer on religious topics.

—The fifth great annual re-union of the Lutherans of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia took place at Pen Mar, Md., September 3, on the Western Maryland railroad. Over 20,000 people were in attendance. It was the greatest re-union yet held, and the Lutherans were joyful over their success.

—Rev. C. B. Ward, the missionary worker of Secunderabad, India, and correspondent of the Cynosure, has been caring for a large company of orphans for some years some of whom have grown into manhood. Of his efforts in their behalf he writes in the last number of the Bombay Watchman: "Our readers know we have earnestly prayed for and sought a site for a little colony for our Telugu Mission Christians. After over ten years' waiting, learning and praying our readers have already learned that we succeeded a few months since in securing a good village of over 2,000 acres in lease for twenty-three years, at the fixed rental of H. S. reals 800 per year. Three years ago a Christian friend, whose gifts had aided the mission greatly in the last few years, promised the needed capital for the colony on certain conditions when we secured the village; all the conditions have been met and our capital is forthcoming for this good work. With full hearts we thank God and will publish further details later on."

NEW HAMPSHIRE CONVENTION.

The fourteenth annual meeting of the New Hampshire Christian Association will be held in Gilford Village, September 23 to 26, opening Tuesday evening. The time of the meeting is the most delightful of the year. The place is one of choice natural beauty, and centrally located for those who desire to attend the convention. The well-known hospitality of the Gilford people, and the excellent spiritual state of the church unite to favor a large and happy gathering. Charles Warren Ryder of Providence, Alonzo A. Hoyt of Cambridgeport, J. P. Stoddard of Boston, Charles L. Baker of Manchester, F. L. Piper of Melvin Village, Jonathan Leavitt of Chichester, Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason of Roslindale, Miss Isadore D. Haines of Maine, Mrs. A. A. P. Caverly of Strafford, and other consecrated laborers are expected to be present. It will be more convenient to meet friends at Gilford on the Lake Shore railroad. Friends can write to Rev. Isaac Hyatt, in regard to entertainment and transportation.

"The whole movement of Christianity, what is it? It is light against darkness. It is as the shining of the sun. That doesn't have lodges. That doesn't have little dark rooms into which it disburses its beams. The business of the sun is to scatter light, and the business of the church of Jesus Christ is to scatter the light of the Sun of Righteousness. He is to be the light of the world everywhere. He says, 'In secret have I said nothing.' Everything was open. There was never any little cabal, any little gathering with its secret passes and grips. The mere attempt to couple such a thing with the work of the Lord Jesus shows its folly."—From address of Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D. D., pastor First Congregational Church, Chicago, to Christian Conference, April, 1890.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

—Rev. Dr. Stewart, the new president of Berea College, has begun his work in the institution, and has removed his family to Berea.

—Rev. Dr. J. H. A. Bomberger, president and founder of Ursinus College, and for forty years a prominent man in the German Reformed church, died on the 23d ult.

—A plan is on foot to establish in New York City a national university, to be modeled after the great institutions of Europe, with an endowment at the outset of $20,000,000. Mr. John D. Rockefeller and Rev. R. S. MacArthur, of the Baptist church, are the promoters of the enterprise.

—The idea of erecting a monument to the memory of Dr. David A. Wallace, the first president of Monmouth College, is receiving much attention of late. The committee having this work in charge has not as yet attempted to make a canvass for funds for this purpose, still money is constantly being sent to them by those who are interested in this subject. The place where the monument will be erected has not been settled, but many seem to be of the opinion that the College Campus would be the most suitable place.

—Chester S. Lyman, professor of astronomy in the Sheffield Scientific School, whose death is announced, went in 1845 as a missionary to the Sandwich Islands, and Queen Emma was one of his pupils. When the queen visited this country a few years ago she made a point of calling on her old teacher.

—Seven Norwegian lady teachers at the national schools have obtained government grants varying from 1,000 kr. to 2,000 kr. in order to make studies in various countries—England, Germany and Sweden—in different matters of interest for the schools.

—Six students at the Agricultural College, Lansing, Michigan, were suspended for one year for hazing. They took a freshman from his bed and dragged him through the river, injuring him severely.

—The principal of the Normal School at New Britain, Conn., refused to employ a lady teacher from Youngstown, O., because she was "too homely." He gave her a month's salary and expenses back home.

—The Methodists of Spokane Falls are planning for a university. Building will commence this fall. The college grounds will embrace thirty acres, and be located on a bluff overlooking the falls and the cascades. Back of the movement is Rev. William Ward, recently elected president of Spokane College.

—Sixty-seven seniors and ninety-two juniors at Yale University elect Old Testament literature, two lessons a week, for next year, the Old Testament being the only text-book. Oriental history, with special reference to the Bible, will be a required study in the freshman class. Prof. W. R. Harper will teach these classes.

—Mr. Moody opened at Northfield, Mass., Aug. 1, the Betsey Moody Cottage, named for his mother. The building cost $15,000, and is designed for an infirmary for his schools. He also announces the establishment of a training school for ladies, with Bible study, drill, dressmaking, cooking and other branches in preparation for city Christian work. The first session will be held in October next, and there will be two terms of three months each.

—Sectarian instruction should be sedulously excluded from the public schools of the land. The Catholics, as they have a right to do, object even to the reading of the Protestant Bible in such schools; but now comes Rev. Charles O. Brown, of Dubuque, in a letter to the Des Moines Capital, saying there are "at least seven district schools in Dubuque county where the Catholic catechism is taught." A church so strenuous in preventing unwelcome reading in the presence of its children should not employ the public funds to promote their doctrines, nor expect that other people will be willing to have it done.—The Lyons, Iowa, Mirror.

—Henry Wade Rogers, the newly-elected president of Northwestern University (Evanston, Ill.), is said to be but thirty-six years old. He is a Democrat in politics, with a leaning toward prohibition. Mrs. Rogers is corresponding secretary of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Detroit Conference, a prominent Prohibitionist, white-ribboner, and woman suffragist.

—The inauguration of Prof. W. P. Johnston as president of Geneva College, succeeding Dr. H. H. George, took place on the third of September, at Beaver Falls. Rev. Dr. T. P. Stevenson, editor of the Christian Statesman, made an address on the occasion. Several additions and changes have been made in the faculty of the institution, and above forty new students will begin the year of study at Geneva.

—Dr. Harper, of Yale College, has definitely accepted the presidency of the new University of Chicago. His consent to accept the position has only been secured within the last few days, and although he will for the present remain at Yale College, he has signified his willingness to enter upon the preliminary work whenever his services are needed. Dr. Goodspeed, the secretary of the university, says that the college would not be open for active work inside of two years.

OBITUARY.

JOSEPHINE CONANT.

I was called by a dispatch to Willimantic, Conn., on the 30th ult., to sympathize with bereaved friends, and speak to them a word of comfort and of instruction, at the funeral of the widow of the late George Conant.

Death is always solemn, but when it is "light at eventide," and the sun below the horizon gilds the overhanging clouds with crimson and gold, the grave is robbed of its terrors, and involuntarily we repeat "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

The story of this brief and busy life is told in a few words. Josie was born January 9th, 1868; was married to George Conant June 13, 1888; buried her husband February 27, 1889; and, departing in the assurance of faith, her body was laid by his side August 30, 1890, by loving hands who had kindly ministered to her during her days of need. The presence of many friends was proof of the esteem in which she was held, and a fitting tribute to her memory. May the stricken household and all who came with sympathy and kindly offices to assist in "burying their dead out of their sight," be prepared when the "Bridegroom cometh" to go in to the "marriage supper of the Lamb." J.P.STODDARD.

SIMEON BADGELY, an aged and honored resident of Belleville, Ill., died in that place Monday morning, September 8th inst., aged 84 years, 6 months and 26 days.

There are about 6,000 varieties of postage stamps now in use by the different nations of the world. The museum of the Berlin postoffice alone contains a collection of between 4,000 and 5,000 specimens, half of which are European and the remainder divided between the Americas, Asia, Africa and Australia. The emblems upon the stamps of nations are legion, the earth, the sea, and the vaulted canopy above us have been ransacked for curious and meaningless devices and legends. The entire animal kingdom, the stars, and the moon in all its phases, besides legendary emblems by the thousand, are known to the collectors of stamps, who pride themselves upon being "philatelists." Upon the printed faces of these little squares of paper may be found the effigies of five emperors, eighteen kings, three queens, one grand duke, several inferior title rulers, and many presidents. M. Phillippe de Ferrari perhaps has the largest and most valuable collection of stamps in the world, amounting to something like 250,000, and within the present year he sold one single little stamp to a collector in Paris for $50,000.

Salt rheum, with its intense itching and burning, is cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Many who were formerly severe sufferers have reason to thank "the peculiar medicine" for cures effected.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE FORGOTTEN MILLIONS.

The cost of bringing up a family of five or six children comfortably in the town of Mount Desert does not exeeed $250 a year, if the house, a garden patch, and a cow-pasture be already provided from savings of the husband and wife before marriage, and if the family, as a whole, have normal health and strength. Very few heads of families earn more than that sum in a year; for, although a day's wages in summer is commonly $1.75, work is scarce, the winter is long, and few men can get more than five month's employment at these wages in a year. The man and boys of a amily can, however, do much for the common support, even when there is no work at wages to be had. They can catch and cure fish, dig clams, trap lobsters, pick the abundant blueberries on the rocky hills in August, and shoot ducks at the seasons of migration. Wild nature still yields to the skillful seeker a considerable quantity of food without price. Dwellers in a city may wonder how is it possible for a family to live so cheaply, but there is no mystery about it. There is no rent to pay; the schools are free; water costs nothing; the garden-patch yields potatoes and other vegetables, and the pasture milk and butter; two kerosene lamps and a lantern supply all the artificial light needed, at a cost not exceeding $2 a year; the family do all their own work without waste; there is but one fire except on rare occasions, and that single fire is in a stove which delivers all its heat into the house; the wife and daughters knit the family stockings, mittens, and mufflers, mend all the clothes, and for the most part make all their own. The ready-made clothing which the men buy at the stores is very cheap ($10 to $15 a suit), being made of cotton with but a small admixture of wool. The cloth is strong and warm, and looks fairly well when new, but soon fades and wears shabby. For children the old clothes of their elders are cut down, the wear being thus brought on new places. The Hessian country girl wears proudly her grandmother's woolen petticoats, and well she may, for they are just as good and handsome as they were sixty years ago. A Scotch shepherd's all-wool plaid withstands the wind and the rain for a lifetime. The old Swiss porter, who is carrying the mounted traveler's valise over the Gemmi, puts on a thick woolen jacket of a rich brown color when the shower begins, with the remark, "The rain won't wet me, sir; this coat has kept me dry for twenty-five years." The American farmer and laborer use no such good materials as these, and therefore they and their children look shabby most of the time; but their clothes are very cheap in first cost, and, like the cotton clothes of the Chinese, they answer the main purposes of all clothing. In a city the best clothes of the family must be often put on, in the country but seldom. Shoes and boots must be bought for the whole household, but these articles are also very cheap in New England, and the coarser sorts are durable in proportion to their price. For protection from rain the Mount Desert man who is obliged to be out-of-door in bad weather uses, in sailor-fashion, not rubber clothing, but suits of oiled cotton cloth, which keep out not only water but wind, last long, and cost little ($2 to $3 a suit). However hard it may be for city people to understand it, the fact remains that $250 a year is a sum adequate to the comfortable and wholesome support of a family of seven or eight persons in the town of Mount Desert, provided that a house, a garden, and a pasture are secured to them.—Pres. Charles W. Eliot in the Century for August.

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

REMARKABLE OFFER!

Nearly everyone is familiar with the name, but it has been estimated that only one in every two hundred and eighty persons in the United States is fortunate enough to have access to the valuable information contained within the covers of the grandest work ever written by mortal man,

Webster's

UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words, we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent.

Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and seventy-five cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

FARM NOTES.

A HORSE'S SENSE OF SMELL.

The horse will leave musty hay untouched in his bin, however hungry. He will not drink of water objectionable to his questioning sniff, or from a bucket which some odor makes offensive, however thirsty. His intelligent nostril will widen, quiver and query over the daintiest bit offered by the fairest of hands, with coaxings that would make a mortal shut his eyes and swallow a nauseous mouthful at a gulp. A mare is never satisfied by either sight or whinny that her colt is really her own until she has a certified nasal certificate to the fact. A blind horse, now living, will not allow the approach of any stranger without showing signs of anger not safely to be disregarded. The distinction is evidently made by his sense of smell, and at a considerable distance. Blind horses, as a rule, will gallop wildly about a pasture without striking the surrounding fence. The sense of smell informs them of its proximity. Others will, when loosened from the stable, go directly to the gate or bars opened to their accustomed feeding grounds, and when desiring to return, after hours of careless wandering, will distinguish one outlet and patiently await its opening. The odor of that particular part of the fence is their pilot to it. The horse in browsing, or while gathering herbage with its lips, is guided in its choice of proper food entirely by its nostrils. Blind horses do not make mistakes in their diet. In the Temple of Olympus a bronze horse was exhibited, at the sight of which six real horses experienced the most violent emotions. Ælian judiciously observes that the most perfect art could not imitate nature sufficiently well to produce so strong an illusion. Like Pliny and Pausanius, he consequently affirms that "in casting the statue a magician had thrown Hippomanes upon it," which, by the odor of the plant, deceived the horses, and therein we have the secret of the miracle. The scent alone of a Buffalo robe will cause many horses to evince lively terror, and the floating scent of a railroad train will frighten some long after the locomotive is out of sight and hearing.—Horse and Stable.

BERRY PLANTING IN THE FALL.

I shall try planting red raspberries and blackberries in October, protecting each hill with a forkful of manure as soon as the ground is frozen enough to drive upon. The raspberries I will plant in check rows, and put three plants in a hill to insure a perfect stand. The matter of having a full row with no vacancies I have twice before alluded to, and now do so again, as no large or extra large yield can be obtained if there are missing hills. An acquaintance, who is a large berry producer, is realizing this to his cost this year. The wet weather delayed him in the spring, and also delayed parties of whom he bought plants, and finally when he did plant in poorly prepared ground, many plants failed to grow. His strawberries have twenty-five per cent. of vacancies, and his blackberries have come to the extent of only thirty per cent., leaving seventy per cent. of the ground unoccupied, to hoe and cultivate not only a year, but for several years to come unless he plows it up or fills the vacancies next season. The blackberry failure is not entirely his fault, but the result of a swindle. He sent to a widely-advertised firm for Erie plants. Late in the season he received a box containing pieces of roots about five inches long, with a letter stating inability to furnish plants, but taking the liberty to "substitute root cuttings, which would do just as well." Such a swindle should be punished by recourse to law and wide exposure, but in this case the amount is not large and the swindled party not given to litigation, so he will quietly submit, and I suppose the firm will repeat their methods another year.—Vick's Magazine for Sept.

Presto! Change! Gray and faded beards made to assume their original color by applying Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers. It never fails to satisfy.

Wonders

Are wrought by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor in restoring gray hair to its original color, promoting a new growth, preventing the hair from falling, keeping it soft, silky, and abundant, and the scalp cool, healthy, and free from dandruff or humors. The universal testimony is that this preparation has no equal as a dressing, and is, therefore, indispensable to every well-furnished toilet.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for some time and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor my head is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth, of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair to use Ayer's Hair Vigor as a dressing."—Mrs. Lydia O. Moody, East Pittston, Me.

"Some time ago my wife's hair began to come out quite freely.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

not only prevented my wife from becoming bald, but it also caused an entirely new growth of hair. I am ready to certify to this statement before a justice of the peace."—H. Hulsebus, Lewisburgh, Iowa.

"Some years ago, after a severe attack of brain fever, my hair all came out. I used such preparations for restoring it as my physicians ordered, but failed to produce a growth of hair. I then tried, successively, several articles recommended by druggists, and all alike fell short of accomplishing the desired result. The last remedy I applied was Ayer's Hair Vigor, which brought a growth of hair in a few weeks. I think I used eight bottles in two years; more than was necessary as a restorative, but I liked it as a dressing, and have continued to use it for that purpose. I believe Ayer's Hair Vigor possesses virtues far above those of any similar preparation now on the market."—Vincent Jones, Richmond, Ind.

BUSINESS.

THE INDIAN SUMMER

will soon be spreading its haze over our Western prairies; days grow short and evenings long. But every season has its advantages for work, and especially for such work as will bring the Cynosure list up to the 50,000 grade. A secret society of which we read this week prints a paper and has its lodges agree to take 100,000 copies. There is no such compulsion about the Cynosure, but we can guarantee a better paper than can be made by such a plan; and can better rely on the convictions, the faith, the zeal and the enthusiasm of the friends of our reform to secure the list its principles deserve.

Good work is being done by one and another. We do not name them; God knows them, and in the end their reward shall appear. Let us resolve to make September as much better than August as August was better than July.

A band of roughs made a brutal attack upon some workmen while the latter were about to leave work in Berlin Tuesday. Advices from Buenos Ayres indicate that the new regime gives universal sactisfaction and that all parties are rejoicing over the turn which affairs have taken. Had the Desired Effect!

CARROLLTON, GREEN CO., ILL., Nov., '88. I highly recommend Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic to anybody that has suffered from headache as my son did for 5 years, because 2 bottles of the medicine cured him.

M. MOTIGUE.

What a Clergyman Says:

Morrisonville, Christ. Co., Ill., Sept., 1887. Within the last six years I have observed the excellent effect of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic. It cured a boy named Mehon, who was so helpless that he had to be fed like a baby; he hid himself when he saw strangers, laughed and cried for half an hour. He was considered by physicians a maniac and hopeless case; but is now working on a railroad. Another case was Minnie Falls; she had St. Vitus' Dance; her legs and arms were so uncontrollable that she scratched holes in her dresses in a few days. 8 bottles of the Tonic cured her entirely. Another such case, which many physicians tried to cure without success, was cured by only two bottles. These and other cases convince me that the Tonic is the best remedy for epilepsy and other nervous troubles. It would be a blessing for all sufferers to know of it. A. TEPPE, Pastor.

Our pamphlet for sufferers of nervous diseases will be sent free to any address, and poor patients can also obtain this medicine free of charge from us.

Reports from the colleges are excellent this year from every quarter. At Wheaton there is twenty per cent increase over former years; at the Theological Seminary at Union Park, this city, 160 young men are attending; Northwestern University is overflowing; so are the colleges for women at Northampton and Wellesley, Massachusetts. The proposed Baptist University in this city has not only secured Prof. W. R. Harper for its first president, but Mr. Rockafeller has just given $1,000,000 in addition to the previous $800,000. One of the trustees believes it will open with endowments and other property worth $5,000,000,—an amount that will sink men who have not extraordinary grace and humility into worldliness and folly.

The New York Central strike was declared off last Wednesday by the defeated "Grand Master Workman," and something less than 4,000 men were left to ask for work. As attempts to dynamite trains were made after the great Burlington strike, so in the present instance strikers began to wreck the Central trains, and succeeded twice. Several men were arrested, and three have confessed in court. Enough is now known it is said to place the order of Knights of Labor in a position of detestation and horror, which no explaining can palliate. The wreckers say they held conferences with their official leaders, and the labor organizations furnished them, after their work of attempting wholesale murder was over, with funds to escape. This is a fearful charge, and if it is not refuted will sink the K. of L. order into infamy.

The passage of the anti-lottery bill in the Senate without a negative vote marks the power of public discussion. The wealth of the lottery ring was able to carry Louisiana for the infamy, and almost secured North Dakota. God rather than man defeated both efforts: in one case by the timely exposure of a plot, or fear of it, in the other by laying his hand upon the life of a man. The ring had a strong lobby in Congress, and its business in Washington is said to be larger than in almost any other American city. But public discussion was too much for the lottery, entrenched though it was behind millions of money and of patrons. Not one Senator dared vote for the swindle. No one would now vote for slavery which thirty years ago ruled the country. The day must soon come when the liquor business, equally accursed and equally powerful, must come to the same end; and the fate of the lodge, more poisonous than either, must follow hard upon that. Every plant not of God "shall be rooted up." The word is unchangeable.

HORACE MANN.

Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, president of the New York Central railway, spoke on his return from Europe the other day, with extraordinary praise of the Passion-play at Oberammergau in Bavaria, where the humble towns-people in fulfillment of a vow re-enact theatrically the closing scenes in the life of Christ. Mr. Depew speaks of this performance as of remarkable spiritual power. It thrilled him and gave him such a view of religion as he had never before experienced. In like manner an editor of one of our most esteemed Christian reform papers writes home after seeing the play: "I have never had such a spiritual uplift as on that Sabbath day when, with 6,000 others, I sat from eight in the morning until six in the evening and followed our blessed Saviour from his triumphal entry into Jerusalem, on to his betrayal, trial, crucifixion, resurrection and ascension. . . . Never has Christ seemed so near and real as since then." American readers will not readily comprehend the enthusiasm of these words from a Christian editor. From Mr. Depew, whom we are not sure professes any religion than that of the lodge, to which it must be regretted he belongs, they are not so strange. It is difficult to understand how those who know Christ through his Word and the abiding of the Holy Spirit should require a performance like the Passion-play to deepen any genuine feeling of love or reverence. Otherwise the effort to reproduce the play in New York a few years ago should have been fostered rather than opposed and smothered by the Christian sentiment of the city; and such a representation could be profitably substituted for such revival meetings as Mr. Moody, Dr. Pentecost and others have been promoting.

Speaking of the Passion-play it would be an injustice to omit the testimony of another witness equally reliable with those above mentioned. Mr. Eugene Field is a gentleman well known in the journalistic and literary circles of Chicago. In his letter from Europe to the News printed on the 16th inst., he says it is unlikely that the Passion-play will ever be performed again. Rome is against it because of its demoralizing influence, and the players are all Romanists. "The noble spirit which formerly characterized the performances has quite disappeared, and the whole business has degenerated into a catch-penny affair of the cheapest kind. The scheme is now controlled by a Viennese syndicate composed of three rich Jews; these shrewd speculators bought the control of the Oberammergau theatre for this season and have profited enormously therefrom. The accommodations for lodging and victualing are practically in the hands of Cook and of Gage, two London speculators. Between the Viennese speculators and the London speculators the Passion-play has been dragged down to the low level of a country fair, where robbery is tolerated because it is expected. The extortion has become so flagrant and so notorious that the Regent of Bavaria announces that he will interpose to prevent a repetition of the Passion-play."

The address of the Hon. Henry Hitchcock at the recent meeting of the American Bar Association, showing what legislation had done in this country to improve the condition of the laboring classes, and to secure to them their just rights, presents a very different picture from that of Mr. Powderly in his recent letter to the public. We commend this address to the special attention of Mr. Powderly. We know of no one who more needs this kind of information.—Independent.

HORACE MANN, EDUCATOR AND REFORMER.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

In studying the lives of the reformers of this century, I find that not only morally but intellectually and in culture, they were far above and in advance of the great mass of society. There was a host of presidents and collegiate professors, among whom was pre-eminently the Hon. Horace Mann. In 1852 I visited Mr. Mann at his own home in Massachusetts, and I found in him excellencies of an extraordinary character. I confess that I fell into a profound passion of love toward him. He was a goodly man to look upon. Benevolence was radiant in his expressive face, and the law of kindness was on his lips. I have his great speech in the House of Representatives in 1849 on slavery in the United States. In this Congressional speech I find a page of unequalled beauty, and of practical utility and weight, by the perusal of which every reader of the Cynosure will be delighted:

"Of all the remorseless and wanton cruelties ever committed in this world of wickedness and woe, I hold that to be the most remorseless and wanton which shuts out from all the means of instruction a being whom God has endued with the capacities of knowledge, and inspired with the desire to know. Strike blossom and beauty from the vernal season of the year, and leave it somber and cheerless; annihilate the harmonies with which the birds of spring make vocal the field and forest, and let exulting Nature become silent and desolate; dry up those fountains of joy and gladness that flow unbidden from the heart of childhood, and let the radiant countenance of youth become dull and stony like that of age;—do all this if you will, but withhold your profane hand from those creative sources of knowledge which shall give ever-renewing and increasing delight through all the cycles of immortality, and which have the power to assimilate the finite creature more and more nearly to the infinite Creator. Sir, he who denies to children the acquisition of knowledge, works devilish miracles. If a man destroys my power of hearing, it is precisely the same to me as though, leaving my faculties of hearing untouched, he had annihilated all the melodies and harmonies of the universe. . . . Just so far as he disables and incapacitates them from knowing he annihilates the objects of knowledge; he obliterates history; he destroys the countless materials in the natural world that might, through the medium of the useful arts, be converted into human comforts and blessings; he suspends the sublime order and progression of Nature, and blots out those wonderful relations of cause and effect that belong to her unchangeable laws. Nay, there is a sense in which such an impious destroyer of knowledge may be said to annihilate the Creator himself, for he does annihilate the capacity of forming a conception of that Creator, and thus prevents a soul that was created in the image of God from securing the image it was created to reflect. Such a destroyer of knowledge dims the highest moral splendor of the universe."

Before uttering these sublime sentences Mr. Mann had said, "Out of New England schools there is going forth a nobler band of young men and women than ever before conferred intelligence, virtue, refinement and renown upon any people or community upon the face of the globe."

This great address, for its power in unveiling the horrors of the slave system, its scathing denunciation of the defenders of that system, and for its chaste and classical style, proved Mr. Mann to have been a worthy successor of his renowned predecessor, John Quincy Adams. His first speech in the legislature of Massachusetts was in favor of religious liberty. He was an advocate of temperance. He founded the State lunatic asylum. He was president of the State Senate. For eleven years he was secretary of the Board of Education, and devoted his whole time to its interests. During those eleven years he worked fifteen hours a day. He introduced normal schools and paid committees and visited educational institutions in Europe, the report of which was published on both sides of the Atlantic. At the close of his Congressional term he was elected president of Antioch College, Ohio, where both sexes were received to the benefits of his vast learning until his death, August 2, 1859, at the age of 63. He justly deserves a place among the moral heroes of the nation.

THE GREAT EDUCATOR'S ADDRESS TO SCHOOL CHILDREN.

In this age of controversy over what shall and what shall not be taught in our public schools, it would be well for teachers and school boards to study the life and work of that great pioneer of education in the west, Horace Mann, who gave his life to the work of educating the children. When Horace Mann founded his first normal-school in Massachusetts, where he was State Superintendent of Education, even that oldest part of New England was dependent upon the old system whereby teachers had no requirements but to "keep school," and needed no other preparation for their duties than to convince the school committee of their ability to be master in the school-room. Horace Mann set for himself the task of raising the standard of the schools, so that they would become fountains of knowledge; but with his education of the brain also was coupled the education of the heart, to build up a strong conscience as well as a masterly mind, to make the complete man.

In 1846 the superintendent of schools in Chautauqua county, New York, wrote to Horace Mann asking that he send an address to the 20,000 school children in that county. This address would form a good text for teachers and children in the schools to-day, and might be read in every school-room at the beginning of every term. A portion of it reads thus:

"You must be religious—that is, you must be grateful to God, obey his laws, love and obey infinite excellencies. The works of God are full of wonders and beauties. He has laid the foundations of the universe in miracles and filled it with starry splendors. But God is greater than his works. If you were delighted and charmed with a curious instrument or with a piece of exquisitely wrought machinery would you not like to know its contriver and builder—especially if his ingenious mind and skillful hand could perform a thousand such masterpieces in a day? If you were so captivated by a book that after reading it through a score of times you still would turn back its pages and commence it again with ever renewing delight, should you not like to know the author of that book—especially if you had learned that every word from his lips was like a glowing picture, that all the tones of his voice were enchanting music, and that every aspect of his countenance would thrill with admiration and love? Such, and more than this, and more than the tongue of man or angel can describe, is your Maker. And he who does not know him, though he may know everything else, is ignorant of the greatest and best part of all knowledge. There is no other conceivable privation to be compared with this. If a man be blind he but loses the outward light. If a man be deaf he but loses music and the sweet converse of friends. If a man be bereaved of companions and the nearest and dearest kindred are plucked from his bosom, is persecuted and imprisoned and torn limb from limb by the hatred and malice of men, he is only beneath a temporary cloud which will pass away like the vapor of the morning. But if he is without God, he is a wanderer and a solitary in the universe, with no heaven or hope before him when beaten upon by the storms of fate; with no home or sanctuary to flee to, though all the spirits of darkness should have made him their victim. These things, my dear children, and such as these, you were made for. You were made for them as the rich corn and delicious fruits were made to grow in fertile valleys; and may your own efforts, encouraged and aided by divine goodness, enable you to fulfill the purposes of your creation."

HORACE MANN ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

Among the distinguished educators of America perhaps none have a national fame superior to that of Horace Mann. Like the most of the earnest anti-slavery men of his day, he abhored secret societies. We present our readers with an extract from an able argument of his on the subject:

In the first place, before arguing against secret societies, it would seem proper that something should be adduced in their favor. The burden of proof, as the lawyers say, must be sustained by the advocates or defenders of such associations. Some argument in the affirmative should precede the argument in the negative.

But waiving this point, it seems to me that all the higher and nobler instincts of mankind are adverse to such associations. In all ages, openness, frankness, artlessness, sincerity, candor, or by whatever other name the free and true expression of a man's consciousness may be indicated, have always commanded the admiration of men; while secrecy, disguise, concealment, or a disposition to hide one's thoughts and purposes from his fellow-men, have been regarded with a strong repugnance and condemnation. Among moralists, poets, and dramatists, the first class of qualities has been the theme of praise; the last of satire. How deeply and inextricably has this sentiment of the world been wrought into language. Why do we say "open-handed" and "open-hearted" when commending, and "close-fisted," "close-mouthed" or "close-souled" when condemning? Why do all languages ascribe an "open countenance," to a brave and high-souled man, but a close, shy, disguised, secretive one to villains? "Hand open as the day for melting charity," says Shakspeare, and I think I could call to mind at least a dozen expressions in this one author where the word "open" is used in a praise-giving sense; and perhaps as many where the word "secret" is used for reproach and vituperation, as in the following from Othello: "Closest lock and key of villainous secrets."

The same universal sentiment characterizes the manners of men also. One man we call open, frank, transparent; having a window in his bosom through which we can read his heart; with no labyrinth between his breast and his tongue where truth gets lost. Another is secretive, counterfeit, buried in disguise, deceptive, only half opening his eyes, so that he may see out, but no one see in. Now why is this, in all languages and among all people, if there be not something attractive, praise-enkindling, and congenial to the best qualities in human nature, in what is above-board and undisguised; and something also that is repulsive and odious in predominance of the secretive, furtive propensity? To what class do the secretive animals belong—the fox, the tiger, the cat, the snake?

Should brutes imitate men as in Æsop's time, would not these form the "secret societies?"

Is it not also an argument against secret societies that no one of the higher sentiments of men is ever ashamed of what it does, and therefore never desires to act clandestinely, or trickishly, or evasively. Veneration is never ashamed to worship God. The love of justice is never ashamed when holding the balance with untrembling hand between king and subject, between the titled, emblazoned lord and his lowest servitor. Benevolence is never ashamed when discovered at its divine work of charity. And so of all the rest. Avarice, concupiscence, vanity, self-love, must be leading members in the "secret society" of the brain.

Has not diplomacy got a bad name because of its secrecy? Were not the trials of the Inquisition conducted in secret? Are not all the lowest and meanest felonies committed in secret, and forty-nine fiftieths of them in the night? Was it before or after eating the apple that Adam and Eve skulked among the trees? Where do gamblers live? Where does licentiousness breed its pollutions? Do these seek daylight, the open street, the market-place, the common resorts of virtuous men? No, they all belong, as the tie of natural affinity, to the order of secret societies. A bond of secrecy is the same to a society that a mask is to an individual; the mask covers the face of one man, the oath of secrecy covers the face of the body corporate.

HEBREW SOCIALISM.

BY REV. A. B. CURTIS.

The Hebrew system of legislation that passed through Sabbath and Sabbatic year to the year of jubilee Dr. T. T. Munger regards as "the most exalted piece of statesmanship the world has known." Let us look at it, because its significance to the student of social problems is most important. The theory never becomes prominent in any portion of the Bible. I suspect it was a regulation that was never fully carried out; the people could not keep educated up to its rigid requirements. But still for a time it was a live issue and it has left its mark upon history. The laws in question are set forth in the twenty-fifth chapter of Leviticus. Let us see what this law was.

The Jewish Sabbath, as we find it in the days of Ezra, was not only religious and moral but political as well. This idea of seven ran on through the month and year. Every seventh month was sacred as well as every seventh year. And every seventh period of seven years which completed the half century was followed by a year of jubilee. Every seventh year it was decreed that the soil should lie fallow. Every debt that had been running for the full period was declared outlawed. Any Hebrew who had been enslaved became free after seven years of service. These are the main features of the Sabbatic year.

What influence did these laws have upon the social and economic relations of the people? Very important ones, as will soon be seen. That the soil by continued cultivation loses the power to produce is well known. The abandoned farms of New England are alarming proof of this fact. There is no hard and fast advice in our agricultural journals that every seventh year the land shall lie fallow, but there is an abundance of warning that it is not worth while to let a farm "run down." The best interests of the whole body of society who ultimately get their sustenance from the soil, demand that at certain periods the land be given, not a summer vacation, but a whole year of rest.

The forgiving of all debts regularly once every seven years had a marked effect upon business. Men did not and could not afford to let their debtors keep putting them off. When there was the ability to pay, the debt was paid. Business was done up snugly. Endless and wearisome complications could not arise. Lawsuits could not run for 400 years as the newspapers show may be the case in some parts of the world to-day.

But if this law was a shrewd one from a business point of view, it was a humane one from a moral standpoint. Some incurred debts which ill-fortune or bad crops rendered them incapable of paying. The inability was not altogether their own. They did their part. But still a half, more or less, of the debt is unpaid. Now comes the Sabbatic year. The debt is forgiven. Once more the honest poor man starts even with the world. He takes new hope, and new ambition. He is given every advantage to succeed once more. No one thinks ill of him and no one has a bill against him.

After seven years of service also the slave was free. This emancipation is not to occur during the Sabbatic year, but whenever the seven years were up. This law needs explanation. The laws of Moses were often restrictive where no credit is given for it. No doubt animal sacrifice was much more frequent among other peoples than among the Jews. The laws of Moses seemed to encourage it, but really they did not do so. Where the other nations sacrificed a hecatomb, a nundred head of cattle, Moses commanded to sacrifice one bullock. Where other nations compelled the poor to give of their little, Moses commanded that two doves should be sufficient. So in the case of the slave, where other nations set no limit to the period of enslavement and laid down no laws for the slave's protection, but permitted the master to abuse or kill their slaves if they choose, God by Moses fixed the limit at seven years, and commanded that the servant should be treated justly and humanely.

Emerging, as we have seen, from a community of shepherds to one of farmers, these laws regarding debt were especially important. Each family was given an individuality that it could not possess under the old social order. To be constantly harrassed by debt would be destructive of all the elements of hope and aspiration that tend to national progress. Such a law as this described would slowly bring the patriarch of the old order down to a level with the laborer. Social intercourse at once becomes more intimate. If they did not say, "Let us all have one purse" (Proverbs 1: 14) they at least in a good and friendly way exhorted the neighbor with "cast in thy lot among us."

How the year of jubilee tended still further to keep a family upon the same piece of land for a period of years and to build up a definite type of social life, we shall notice hereafter.

THE THINGS GOD HAS CHOSEN.

BY REV. J. F. AVERY, MARINER'S TEMPLE, NEW YORK.

He who tries to measure missionary success by a bare numerical rule, will be apt to judge that appearances are deceptive, or else figures do lie. Jesus taught that sometimes quickest growth was neither a healthy or enduring sign of prosperity. The rooting process, less showy than the upward spreading and leafing, is nevertheless most important for continuance and fruitage. The acorn and the mustard-seed may both fall on good and suitable ground, but the growth and endurance will show great diversity of character and results. The painter who was upbraided for his minute carefulness, said, "I paint for eternity."

That the harvest end of the world is coming, should be stimulus enough to go forth sowing wisely good seed. In due time, despite the birds of the air, the thorns and stony places, sheaves shall be gathered. Tearful endeavors yield joyous results. Prayerful toil is needful as much in spiritual as physical husbandry: both are dependent for increase and golden harvest upon Divine operation.

We do well to remember that Jesus sent Peter to cast a hook into the sea,—a small instrumentality to fish in so large a pond of opportunity. But note: the first fish caught brought money in its mouth. The endeavor proved more than golden, for it confirmed the fisher's faith, and supplied a pressing necessity. We cannot always tell the why and wherefore of the Master's usage of instruments, and the only explanation given is, the Lord hath need. Yes, even that humble beast of burden had to play its part in the great King's ministry and in the fulfillment of prophecy.

Let us be careful what we call "common or unclean." The great sheet of God's grace can carry and uplift more of the despised ones than tongue can tell or mathematician calculate.

> "There is a wideness in God's mercy
> Like the wideness of the sea."

He who came to seek and to save the lost, has practically demonstrated that to be good is to do good actively. It is recorded of Jesus he went about doing good, and started other human agencies. The invitation first was, Come unto me for life, food and light. Then the command was, "Go." From Jerusalem the boundry line of love was so far flung that it included every creature. The question might rightly be suggested, Can a man be a Christian and go to heaven if he does not care for or seek to save the lost. Rather than answer, we suggest: Reader! repeat the question. Write it plain. Then work out the answer by the rule of God's Word. "God is love." "If ye love me keep my commandments."

RELIGION AND EDUCATION.

Religions have been, in all time, the great regulating and humanizing agencies which have preserved order among the tribes and communities of mankind as the race has made its way from lower to higher conditions. Coupled with the sense of obligation and obedience which they have inculcated has been the influence of increasing knowledge and intelligence, by the exercise of which the false has been eliminated from the beliefs and the darkness lifted from the understanding of men until our higher civilization has been revealed in the light of truth. So, at last, the world has become possessed of a pure religion and of political and social institutions, the enjoyment, preservation and transmission of which constitute at once the happiness and duty of the race.

Three centuries since our continent was substantially as vacant as the spaces between the planets. The scattering savages, who did not constitute a population of more than cne person to five square miles of territory, were so few that it could hardly be said that the surface constituting what now are the United States and Canada was inhabited at all. Instead of being the arena for the gradual development of savage tribes into civilized nations through periods of almost interminable time, our country has been filled, as it were, in a day, historically speaking, by conflicting races, nations and civilizations, so that we exhibit all the elements of both life and destruction in full and contemporaneous action. Now the American people behold and are beginning to comprehend their own condition. They are admonished by the lessons of history. They realize that their existence in any desirable sense depends upon the nature of the religion and of the education which shall prevail among them and fashion the generations as they play their part and replace each other upon the soil.

Only a homogeneous people can be great. No nation can exist with more than one language, more than one religion, more than one general form of education for the masses of the people. There may be change, modification, improvement in all these, but community of language, religion, and of educational forces are indispensable to the development of nationality, and there is no hope of prolonged existence of great communities where there is not either already complete unification in all these respects or a strong and increasing tendency to the same. The American people instinctively feel and know these things to be so.

I do not believe that it is possible that the American nation will develop in the direction or toleration of all religions—that is, so-called religions. Whether the general public conviction shall be right or wrong, I yet believe that instead of selecting and finally tolerating all so-called religions, the American people will, by constant and irresistible pressure, gradually expel from our geographical boundaries every religion except the Christian in its varied forms.

No religion which interposes any agency between man and God is Christianity. No other religion than Christianity—and Christianity as I have thus defined it—is consistent with the existence of human liberty and republican institutions. This country will not long exist as a free country if any other religious teaching comes generally to prevail. No one human being is the superior of any other human being in kind, however much we may differ in the extent of our several endowments, and no religion which finds space for an authority between the creature and the Creator can prevail without destroying the republic. Now, religious belief is a matter of education, and hence no free people will, or at least can, safely permit a system or a practice of education which sets up any human master of the human soul—save only the supremacy of each soul over itself.

This does not imply that the people will undertake to teach affirmatively the dogmas of religion in the sectarian sense, or perhaps, even, in the most general and fundamental sense. But it does imply that the people of the Republic will see to it that certain things are not taught to the American child. The people will not rest until they have subverted all schools and teachers who create in the soul of the child a belief in a power greater than the right of private judgment and less than the authority of God—an allegiance to any spiritual power except the highest, or any prince, potentate or power, save only the Eternal King, which can inflict pains and penalties of a spiritual nature, or in any other life than this on earth.—Hon. Henry W. Blair in Weekly Mail and Express.

COLLEGE FRATERNITIES.

BY A STUDENT IN THE UNIVERSITY OF KANSAS.

"Are secret societies useful in a college community?"

Prejudice is a resistance to sound reasoning Its effect may be traced both in the harangue o the politician and in the sermon of the minister; and just in proportion as the mind is controlled by this, the reasoner is liable to reach a conclusion far from the truth.

It has been my observation that this is especially true of the subject, secret societies. The conclusions have been warped in either way to suit the personal feelings of the reasoner. This is not as it should be. Secret societies are either right or wrong. They are either useful or an injury in a college community. Having carefully watched their workings from a position as nearly neutral as possible, I am thoroughly convinced that the so-called Greek fraternities have more to account for in the way of evil practices, lost time, etc., than can be enumerated in their favor. I therefore believe they are not useful but an injury, and shall attempt to give reasons for my belief.

It of course must be granted that the secret society is more injurious in some places than others, and more so under some conditions than others. If a number of young men of thoroughly moral character bind themselves together simply for mutual moral, literary and social benefit, it would be hard to say aught against even though it be secret; but this is the ideal and far from what we come in contact with day by day in the halls of the university. This contact has been my teacher.

We hear a great deal these days about the temptations thrown in the way of a college student; but it seems to me that the temptations are overstated and that by the very nature of the case they are not to be compared to those of one without the restraining influences which are brought to bear upon a college student of to-day. After thought it may be seen that the first and greatest temptation of a student is to shirk. If he yields to this, three others come thick and fast. The father's injunction, then, is the sum of the whole matter: "Mind your lessons and be a man."

It might be well here to speak of some of the claims which are made for the secret society. I have never yet heard an advocate of the secret society claim that it was a benefit to its members in the recitation room. But much stress is laid on the last clause of the father's advice, and in this respect the aid comes—it makes students full, rounded men. This is the claim we hear for the secret society. And how does it do this? By their own answers. "It introduces him into society, it restrains him when young and inexperienced, it gives him a closer association, in fact, it is for him a needful home circle." These and others we have heard.

That it introduces its members to society, an observer in the University of Kansas cannot for a moment doubt. But what the observer may doubt is the benefit derived therefrom. That it is a restraining influence to the young I most seriously doubt. They tell us it is, and I suppose it must be so, since we are met by the convincing argument that we have never been in the inside, consequently don't know. However, it has been my observation that fraternity students use just as much profanity, are just as ill in their manners, and do more sneaking than the less favored (?) non-fraternity fellow-students. Just how the dance, the card table, the assurance that one's misdeeds will be concealed if possible, the midnight meeting with its scuffles, its tobacco smoke, and not infrequently its wine, can be a restraining force, I do not know.

That it gives a closer association, we grant. But that general good comes from it we deny. The first objection I have to secret societies in colleges is that in the matter of gaining a liberal education they are unnecessary. They are organizations foreign to the college. They do not in any way supplement the literary work provided for by the university or by institutions directly in line of work with the university.

Again, they are not only unnecessary but they are an imposition upon the time of the student. The curriculum as laid down requires the whole energy of the student. What time is not taken up by studies should be devoted to exercise and general reading. Honest college work leaves no time for the weekly or bi-weekly "hop", the endless parties, and many society duties which are thrust upon the fraternity student in the University of Kansas. And directly in connection with this the secret society steals the energy from class work and renders him unfit for study. As an example: On last Saturday one of the —— came into my room and threw his book upon the table and himself upon the bed with the remark, "I am all broken up. I danced over fifteen miles at our hop last night, and wish you would read this lesson for me for if I get my lessons for Monday it will have to be to-morrow (Sabbath)." These are his exact words, and from his looks I readily believed him. Now, inasmach as he is a young man, and since they inaugurated the dance and were responsible for his being there, they are to be held responsible also for his condition, his lost energy aud opportunity. It might be urged that he would visit the ball room if he were without the fraternity; yet the fact remains that with rare exceptions dances are engaged in only by secret society students, nearly all the societies here having a dancing floor. It seems to me this one example is strong enough to carry the point; yet many might be cited and many testimonies of the alumni as well.

I am opposed to the secret society because it is in conflict with the literary society. "The literary society at Yale struggled against the secret society for its life, but died," says Hon. W. E. Evarts. In our university the literary society kept up an unequal struggle for a time, but the death of Orphilian and Athenian societies during the present college ycar shows to thoughtful minds that the secret society and the literary society are opposing factors. A literary society is now flourishing in our university, but it is formed strictly of non-fraternity students. Literary societies do the most efficient work where the fraternity is unknown, as at Princeton.

The fraternity is wrong and teaches a pernicious doctrine in that it substitutes policy for principle. The question with a fraternity clique, as we have them, is not, "Is this just and right to do?" but rather, "How and by what means can we accomplish this desired end?" That this is the inevitable result and only plan of secret societies, I do not say; but I do say that it is the tendency and has been the result. Where? I refer you to the fight in the old oratorical association last year. To the disgraceful action in Athenaeum, to the closely contested elections of Orphlian, and to the action of our weekly college papers.

The secret society is directly chargeable with having destroyed class spirit. How could it do otherwise since it binds together in one common interest the freshman and the senior? And just as necessarily follows they have put contention between members of the same class, between cliques and classes, and substituted a good healthful contest between classes which changes yearly, by a never-ending, never-changing squabble.

The secret society is to be condemned in that it gives opportunity for immorality. Again let me say I do not believe immorality the inevitable result of the fraternity. I believe the morality of many of my fellow-students who are in these societies would shame the thought. But does it not stand to reason that his actions will be less guarded when thus hedged about? Does uot the young "Greek" know that his brothers are pledged to defend and keep secret? Why then does not the knowledge that his clique will cover up and keep secret his misdeeds, if possible, lead him on to actions he would not dare perform outside his brotherhood? My observation has certainly proven this to my own mind. Students who thus pledge themselves hamper their own judgment of right and wrong, and commit a sin against society.

The secret society, as we have it, is no exception to the adage "Some must lead and others follow." Conniving students have at times gained control of these organizations and used it for their own aggrandizement; and it is a very effectual means of gaining positions and honors for such a one which his merit would never win; while on the other hand the fraternity evidently becomes an end to others. Each fraternity represented here has a number of such students. They have, seemingly, no higher aim or purpose. They may be seen and heard daily in the halls, and this very thing was lamented by our late chancellor, Dr. Lippincott, in the fall of '88, that a part of the students seemingly came to attend fraternity and do just enough work to be allowed to remain. And also in the fall of '87, speaking in the same way, he attributed the wreck of many a life to the fraternity hall, where students learn to think more highly of pleasure than is wholesome for the soul.

The fraternity system forms an association upon an unnatural basis, hence I claim it can result in no good to the student. One can form a true friendship for a fellow-student if he has a spark of the better life in him, only after he has weighed the action, analyzed the motive, and admired the character. It cannot be claimed that the fraternity applies any such task. A prominent fraternity student of last year said to me, "This thing of fraternity association is the greatest fraud the conscientious fraternity student has to deal with. There are many whom you despise, whom you cannot openly or even iu your own heart speak against without breaking your obligation. They have the right to thrust themselves upon you and you must endure it."

The fraternity system destroys, to a greater or less extent, the individuality of the student. His actions are not strictly his own. His fellow-fraternity brothers are in part responsible for his actions, and he in turn responsible to them. He must govern his actions to suit them. Thus he is not a unit but a fraction, a part of a greater body, and he, as a member of the body, must be governed by the mind of the body.

The secret societies by clashing and bitter rivalry make the university anything but pleasant to one not educated in that sort of thing.

The secret society in the University of Kansas hinders its members from proper church application. Fraternity students are kept in a continual rush of their own society; and the Sabbath, so beneficial to students if properly observed, must be taken to recover from their dissipation or spent in entertaining or being entertained. But certainly there are exceptions to this, also. The very fact that not one fraternity student in ten has proper church connection led me to believe they have no Y. M. C. A. department.

The Phi Kappa Delta, as generally organized, requires two oaths. The first is administered in the ante-room before the candidate enters for initiation, and reads as follows:

"I, —— ——, do solemnly swear in presence of Almighty God, with my hand upon his sacred Word, that I do not belong to any fraternity or secret society in this college. And furthermore promise and swear that I will never reveal anything I have seen or may see here. So HELP ME GOD."

The second oath is administered in the lodge-room after the candidate has taken his place upon his knees before the presiding officer. It reads as follows:

"Do you solemnly swear in presence of Almighty God, with your hand upon his sacred Word, and before these witnesses, that you will not reveal any of its secrets or make known any of its mysteries; . . . that you will take the part of a brother Phi Kappa Delta when assailed either in character or person; . . . that you will cheerfully conform to all the established rules and regulations of the fraternity; that you will vote for a Phi Kappa Delta in preference to any other fraternity or neutral man, should he be a candidate in either of the literary societies of the college; that you will respond to all the calls of the fraternity, and to all its established signs and grips given by any of its members. So HELP YOU GOD?"

Such an oath administered by a youth to a youth needs no comment. A thoughtful mind can readily see where it leads; for my part I believe the saying of Shakespeare: "It is a sin to swear into a sin, but a greater sin to keep a sinful oath."

Let me then answer the question, "Are secret societies useful in a college community?" by asking others: In a college community is policy better than principle? Is conniving better than manliness and openness? Is the dance hall better than the study or library? Is wrong better than right?—The Midland.

Governor McKinney, of Virginia, says that it is not at all necessary for a public man to drink, as is often asserted. It has been his invariable practice to decline all "treats" in his political campaigns, and he believes that instead of losing he has gained votes by his abstinence.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The weather.—A spiritual law in the natural world.—Recent political nominations.—A unique form of gambling.—Newspaper prizes to secret socicties, and their moral effect.

Solomon's remark: "A pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun," has come home to most persons with an especial force during this extraordinary long spell of wet and gloomy weather. An almost constant downpour for over a week is an unwelcome innovation on the traditional September weather; for a perfect September day, when the trees are just beginning to show their glowing opaline tints against a back ground of sapphire, is as worthy a poet's celebration as the rarest day in June. There is a fascination about the former which the latter with all her roses and bird songs cannot equal.

I notice that the French astronomer, M. Flammarion, who, in his stories of infinity, has illustrated under a thin guise of romance some of the great facts of astronomy, has observed new appearances in Mars that are mysterious and startling. Its lakes and oceans are divided periodically by a mighty ebb and flow, that on our earth would involve in a common destruction all the races now existing. Other observers have seen the same phenomena, and are querying what such disturbances in our nearest planetary neighbor may mean, and if they have anything to do with the perturbed atmospheric conditions of our own earth. As more powerful telescopes are all the time being constructed, future astronomers may solve the problem. Meanwhile, does it not give one a curious thrill to think that beings in some other world, who may have advanced immensely beyond our own in intelligence, are probably directing their attention toward us, observing our peculiar phenomena, and wondering how life can possibly be sustained under conditions so different from any with which they are acquainted. Perhaps it is well that Providence has forced us to mind our own business by shutting us out from all knowledge regarding the inhabitants of other spheres, as we find the social condition of our own little earth quite enough to absorb all our mind and energies, and it is probable that every world as well as every individual must work out the problem of existence for itself.

The dwellers in cities on whose attention the need of pure water is continually forced, have an interest in Mr. Mills' late article on "Natural Purification of Sewerage," in Rev. E. E. Hale's magazine, "Lend a Hand," which no dwellers in the country can appreciate. It is not often that professed scientists find in the facts of nature, illustrations and proofs of some of the deepest truths in the spiritual life, as for instance this: "The laws by which God performs any work of purification in the material world, may form a basis for comprehending the true spiritual law of purification in human life. · · · It is of deep interest here, to find that in God's method of purifying polluted water there is necessarily applied organic life from a higher kingdom in nature." Here is another proof of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World." Only so far as the Christian is a cleansing, renovating force in the circle around him, be it large or small, can he claim to have within him the seed of the kingdom. Nor can our low and degraded classes ever be uplifted by anything short of personal, helpful contact with those from a different and higher sphere.

According to general expectation, Governor Brackett has been renominated by the Republicans for a second term, while Dr. Blackmer is the unanimously accepted nominee of the Prohibitionists, whose convention last Wednesday was the largest ever held in Massachusctts. The choice for treasurer and receiver general fell on Mr. Wm. H. Gleason, the husband of Mrs. Gleason, superintendent of tobacco and narcotics in the State W. C. T. U., who has spoken so often and with such force and power at our conventions. The Weekly Times speaks of him as "an excellent candidate," and if all its nominees ring as true on the anti-secret question, the party in Massachusetts is to be congratulated. Its platform is good, though not beginning to equal in broadness of scope, and firm aggressive grasp of living issues our own American party platform. It pronounces against sectarian aggressions on the integrity of our public schools, buying and selling the Presidency on tariff issues "by the lordly manufacturers, who in connection with the liquor interest control the Republican party;" deplores the growth of the lobby system as shown in the West End railway investigation, and declares in favor of equal educational advantages for white and colored alike, and justice to the farmer. It is to be hoped the latter will know his real friends, and not allow himself to be switched aside from prohibition by the cider argument, which has been so effectively used in times past on our New England farmers.

Everybody knows that the gambling mania can take a great variety of forms, but it was left for the devotees of that pursuit on one of our homeward bound ocean steamers to go beyond even the managers of the most "advanced" church fairs, by getting up a pool on the amount of money collected in the contribution taken up at the Sunday service. I am inclined to think Americans are not less, but more, subject to this almost universal passion than other races, and that it is fast becoming one of our great national dangers. Many good people who are scandalized at the Louisiana lottery, do not stop to think that these numberless benefit orders only mean that many thousands of people are putting in their one or two hundred dollars, and taking their chance of drawing out five hundred or a thousand dollars in five or seven years; and are therefore on the lottery principle of getting something for nothing. The prizes which it has been fashionable lately for newspapers to offer, are only a pandering to the same strong desire to worship the goddess, chance. First the Traveller offered a gold watch to be given to the member of the Woman's Relief Corps who should receive the most votes. Then the Globe, not to be behindhand, offered a sword to be voted for in like fashion by the G. A. R., which brought out a very unsavory controversy; and now the Newburyport Herald has recently offered a valuable desk to the society getting the most votes. The Get There Benefit Association, a secret anti-Catholic organization on the Know Nothing plan, which has before been noticed in these columns, is reported as having won it. Of course it is not meant to have a demoralizing result, but the offering of such prizes is a strong inducement to betting, and sometimes, as in the G. A. R. sword contest, to resort to unworthy measures of bribery; and above all, it is an open advertisement and glorification of the secret orders. These shifts to increase circulation, and get lodge patronage, is beneath respectable American journalism.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 17, 1890.

The Senate passed the anti-lottery bill without debate and without a division. This is just what the country expected the Senate to do, notwithstanding the open efforts of prominent attorneys employed by the lotteries to postpone action upon the bill. They did not, of course, dare to ask the Senators directly to do this, but they attempted to accomplish their end by trying to get other unobjectionable measures taken up, thus postponing indefinitely action upon the bill their clients had such a dread of. There will be no delay in making this measure a law, for the President is deeply interested in seeing the mails closed to these swindling concerns and will lose no time in signing the bill as soon as it reaches him; and as Mr. Wannamaker prepared the bill it is reasonable to expect that the Postoffice department will take the proper steps to see that the new law is rigorously enforced. This law will probably result in the suspension of the weekly paper published in this city by the Louisiana Lottery Company.

The temperance people have begun their annual crusade against the liquor sellers of this District, and I understand that they propose making a house-to-house canvass on all squares where there are bar-rooms, requesting the householders not to sign applications for liquor licenses. This, together with the announced intention of the authorities to limit the number of retail licenses to four hundred (there are more than double that number now), makes it reasonable to expect some grand strides in moral reform at the national capital this year. The new license year begins on the first of November.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has had bills introduced in both House and Senate, to prohibit the importation, exportation, and interstate transportation of alcoholic beverages. The ladies do not expect to have the bill acted upon this session, but by getting it introduced and referred to committee they prepare the way for work at the next session.

Rev. Green Clay Smith, who represented a Kentucky district in the Thirty-eighth and Thirty-ninth Congresses, and who was a major-general in the late war, has preached in this city quite a number of times, and I am told that there is a probability of his becoming permanently located here as pastor of one of our most flourishing churches. He is at present connected with a college at Williamsburg, Kentucky. He was named as one of the candidates before the Prohibition nominating convention in Indianapolis in 1888; but a protest of John G. Fee, because of his connection with the Freemasons, practically defeated him.

Many a Washington mother, aye, and father too, is ready to rise up and call the members of the Senate blessed for having at last passed the bill prohibiting pool selling on horse races in the District of Columbia. But there is an unfortunate exception allowed by the bill, and the manner in which it is allowed is shameful. I quote from the bill: "This act shall not interfere with the right of the Washington Jockey Club or any other regular organizations," etc., "to make books and sell pools at their regular or special meetings." In plain English, the gambling on race tracks is to be legalized by act of the American Congress, and the rights of these gambling organizations are not to be interfered with. Rights? Pray where and how did such organizations acquire any rights which respectable society should recognize? Has the starting of thousands of bright boys on the downward track which leads to ruin given these gamblers rights which even the Senate of the United States feels compelled to recognize? No, a thousand times no. They have no rights. They are higwaymen, engaged continuously in robbing humanity of one of its brightest jewels—honor—and they should be treated with no more consideration than any other robbers. Their nefarious trade should be entirely broken up, not only in the District of Columbia, but everywhere else. Does any one know of any good purpose ever having been served by the maintenance of a race track? *

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MISSIONARY CONFERENCE AT INDIANAPOLIS.

BEREA, Ky., Sept. 15, 1890.

Besides others of marked ability, there were three men whose presence and utterances gave special interest to this conference. They were A. T. Pierson, Wm. Taylor of Africa, and Dr. James Johnston of Jamaica, West Indies. Quite unlike except in their entire consecration to the work of missions, each has demonstrated his eminent practical wisdom by remarkable success.

Dr. Pierson was former pastor of the church where the conference was held, and is a very able preacher. But his chief power consists in his clear apprehension of the spiritual needs of the nominal church, and his insistance on a higher standard of Christian living and especially of more zeal in the great work of foreign missions. One is reminded of the old prophets by the terrible earnestness with which he sets before the Lord's people the extent and the wickedness of their departures from God. Nor does he spare any popular idols, but smites them with the energy of an iconoclast. He thinks one of the gravest of our mistakes is in making a distinction between the "lay" and "clerical" classes. He insists that no such distinction is authorized, and that all Christian duties and rights are common to both. He affirms that majorities are almost sure to be wrong, and that when he finds himself on the popular side of any question he begins to fear that he has made a mistake. He affirms with great earnestness that we have no right to ask the ungodly to aid in Christian work, nor on any account to accept the proceeds of an illegitimate business; that the church has abundant resources for the prosecution of her work and ought to utilize them.

I regret that he did not tell us that what the church wastes in needless divisions, would more than double the foreign mission work. He demonstrated the practicability of evangelizing the entire heathen world before the close of the present century, and showed that if King Ahasuerus could send messages to every part of his vast empire in the short space of seven months, surely we with our railroads, steamships and printing presses, can send the Gospel to the remotest parts of the world, if we, too, were "hastened and pressed on by the King's commandment." Esth. 8:14.

Bishop William Taylor is surely "in the Apostolic succession," for no man since the days of Paul has planned more largely or executed so grandly. In two long addresses which were listened to with deep interest, he gave us a sketch of his work in San Francisco, Australia, South Africa, India, South America and West Africa.

The great truth that he has brought to light is that it is practicable, in most cases at least, to make missions self-sustaining. This cannot be reached at once, but may be nearly always proposed with reasonable hope of success. If his missions in Africa have not accomplished all that his friends have hoped, they have at least far surpassed the predictions of others. Some of them have attained to self-support.

Because a man is great and good, it does not follow that he is wise in all things. Bishop Taylor's views as to the best means of preserving health in Africa are not in accord with those of the medical world. That his health has been preserved proves that he has exceptional powers of endurance. Should any suspect the good bishop of a trace of egotism they will remember that, like Nehemiah, he, if anyone, has a right to say, "Think upon me for good for all that I have done for this people."

Dr. James Johnston was the youngest of the three. He is but thirty-six, and has spent sixteen years in the mountains of Jamaica. When he visited the island he found the entire coast region full of missionaries and churches. All the different kinds of Methodists, many kinds of Presbyterians, of Baptists, of Congregationalists and Episcopalians, occupied the entire field, and struggled, if not contended for existence. But the great mountain region, full of people, was destitute. Now there were 4,000 of these mountain people who call him pastor, and 30,000 who had no other physician. At first they built temporary tabernacles of bamboo, but now they have fine stone mission buildings, all done without aid from any missionary board. A considerable number of native pastors had been raised up and eight of them were now ready to go with him to Africa, where he proposed to enter on a new field next winter. During all these years, he tells us, no white man's money has ever passed through his hands. His work has been undenominational and self-supporting.

The China Inland Mission has also some marked characteristics. It, too, is undenominational and its missionaries are promised nothing, and yet it has been eminently successful.

It was most inspiring to see the large number of young men and young women who have devoted themselves to the work of evangelizing Africa. Most were "bound for the Soudan," with, I fear, a poor conception of all that is implied in such an undertaking, but with evidently a heroic purpose that no fear even of death could restrain.

But it was somewhat remarkable that the returned missionaries took quite a different view of the necessity of preparation and careful forethought against probable or even possible wants. Bishop Taylor said, "Trust in God, but keep your powder dry." Instead of taking "neither purse nor scrip, neither two coats apiece," the counsel of experience was, Make the best preparation you can. Get the best mental and moral equipment, leave nothing to Providence that you can do yourselves, and then go in God's name, trusting that he will be with you always.

H. H. HINMAN.

OFF TO INDIA.

BRO. GLADWIN'S RETURN.

A crisis in our work demands my return to India. A telegram received last week says: "Urgently wanted in England and India." God has given us signal blessings in several departments of his work there, and it is important to press the battle more zealously than ever.

One marked victory was in our securing the repeal of the infamous laws licensing immorality; and we have had encouraging success in laboring for the protection and elevation of the women of India. We "thank God and take courage."

The crusade against the terrible and growing opium trade is an urgent part of our great mission work. Missionaries in India and China are laboring earnestly for the total abolition of this "worse than slavery" curse. To specially help in this important struggle I am now urgently called.

To leave my precious sons is a far heavier cross than it was to part with my widowed mother nineteen years ago. But for the sake of my Saviour and the 800,000,000 of Asia, I gladly go, for I have "respect unto the recompense of the reward." Our Jesus promised a hundred fold, but he gives at least a thousand fold! How I wish that all who profess to consecrate to his service knew the blessinge and joys which crown the real and full offering of their ALL to him and his glorious work.

"Who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord." Who will "come over into ASIA and help us?" Come by your sympathies and prayers,—every true Christian must do this, for the Spirit of Christ is a world-saving spirit, and "if any man has not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His." Of their substance, Christians ought to consecrate ten times as much as they now do to mission work. Ten times as many persons ought to consecrate their whole lives to mission work.

I expect to leave about the 30th inst. My address in the "far East" is Bombay, India. The Banner of Asia (48 cents) and the India Watchman (75 cents) will give items of our labors there.

Yours in the "Mighty to Save,"

WALLACE J. GLADWIN.

ERIE ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

CUSTER CITY, Pa.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Like things earthly the session for 1890 was and is not. The business has been completed and the members gone to their homes to carry grace, determination and courage to their neighbors and the halting. If we do not fall from grace, but continue in the spirit and light let down upon us, from the Father of light, during the Conference, souls will be born unto God's everlasting kingdom and will rise up and call us blessed. We then can look back to the time when we were counted worthy to suffer the abuse and vituperations of false brethren, our watchword being, Jesus only, and the God of nations our defense.

We convened in the business college of Rev. N. R. Luce, Union City, Pa., on 4th instant, under the presidency of Bishop M. Wright. A more determined, consecrated body, I think, never assembled. Bro. Wright with his usual urbanity won the hearts and sympathies of all. The number of members was not all we could have wished, but in our crippled circumstances it was perhaps unreasonable to expect more. Doubtless there are hundreds who stand with us, did they understand circumstances. We are much encouraged for greater victories and a larger membership for the coming year. Our effective ministry has doubled itself and half again. In other words, from six efficients going out from the Conference of 1889, we have sent out fifteen this year. Deep spirituality marked the assembly, and every soul seemed to feel that responsibility large and heavy rested upon them. Pity and not harshness was the sentiment toward the misguided brethren of the Commission folly. The number of entertainers was not burdensome, so Bro. Luce kept full hotel all the time. Mrs. Luce, though an invalid of many years standing, with anguish of body at times almost unbearable, nobly seconded her husband's hospitality, and forgetting self, made everybody welcome. Others I could mention who stood nobly by the Conference, entertaining its members and visitors even at personal inconvenience, our God knows them. "Verily, they shall in no wise lose their reward."

We expect much this year from the noble band of ministers and laymen comprising the Erie Annual Conference. May they be as "an handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountains; the fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon." Let everybody say, Amen.

Permit me, Mr. Editor, to give Bro. Luce a little gratuitous advertisement. If reports are true the liberal brethren (?) have endeavored to crush him by slander, and also by taking advantage of business relations. Somebody should stand by in his hour of need. Let me appeal to everybody in general, and United Brethren in particular, if you want your boys or girls to have a thorough practical business education, with Christianity and responsibility to God taught by precept and example, correspond with Bro. Luce at Union City, Pa. I believe you'll not regret the action.

J. C. YOUNG.

PITH AND POINT.

A FIERY PASS-WORD.

I expect to canvass for the Cynosure this fall and winter. We must all try to push all anti-secret matters this autumn and winter. I believe we can make much progress, if we all fire up and become red hot. I am afraid some of our anti-secret friends keep themselves too cool. Red hot is now our pass-word; and let all our friends begin to pass it along the lines.—EDWARD J. CHALFANT, York, Pa.

DESTROYING THE BOOKS.

An exposition called Jachin and Boaz, was given by his mother to Helim Sutton. He went with me to get the consent of the trustees of the church for J. L. Barlow to lecture in 1875, and gave me an account of how a neighbor who was a Mason came to make him a visit, and talked about discrepancies between that book and Morgan's till Sutton went to the old chest and brought out the old book and compared them. Then the Mason proposed to Sutton that they go out and see the stock on the farm. They were out until called to supper. When through supper they hitched up and the Mason started for home; then Sutton thought of his book and could not find it in the house. He followed to the neighbor's house but never found the book.—H. BALDRIDGE.

LET THE LIGHT SHINE.

I try and do all the good I can with my papers. I leave them with the W. C. T. U., Y. M. C. A., and Salvation Army. Then I take a number of anti-Catholic papers, as I am very much opposed to that awful abomination. Yours in the war against all sin. May the Lord be our defence as he was David's.—H. P. MARKS.

I trust that the Lord will use you greatly in breaking up the secret organizations, which have got such a hold on this country.—G. S. FISHER, Topeka, Kan.

THE "INDEPENDENT" (?) TREMBLINGLY APPROACHES THE LODGE.

The Independent seems to be encouraged by the Congregationalist to say something, not much, against the Geshems, Sanballats and Tobiahs that pasture their swine on the ruins of Zion. The remark of the Independent which puts Romanism at an implied advantage in comparisom with non-Romish churches, because Romanism is allied to secretism and confederate with it, is just as true of the destroying scourge intemperance. Rumsellers are chiefly Romanists. But their covenant with death shall be disannulled, their agreement with hell shall not stand, "the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding-place." "In that day shall Jehovah of hosts be for a crown of glory, and for a diadem of beauty unto the residue of his people, and for a spirit of judgment to him that sitteth in judgment, and for strength to them that turn the battle to the gate," Isa. 28.—WM. F. DAVIS, Chelsea, Mass.

THE STRIKERS.

I am glad the Cynosure is all right about the strikes. It is time good people see this matter as it is—not a natural uprising from oppression, but rather an uprising from Rome and the bottomless pit, a part of the great scheme to destroy this nation and bring it under the power of the Pope and his Jesuit emissaries. I am glad there is a corporation able to meet and cope with these unions before whom politicians bow in servile manner, and to whom good people have given sympathy and comfort. I think Miss Willard will yet feel ashamed of her friendship for some secret organizations because they profess some good things.—N., Tarrytown, N. Y.

LITERATURE.

SEVEN YEARS AMONG THE FREEDMEN. By M. Waterbury. Pp. 144. Price 50 cents, postage 6c. T. B. Arnold, Chicago.

There have been many books written about the South since the war, books full of wisdom and learning and graphic narrative, but it may be safely said that few can compare with this little volume in the simple truthfulness of its story by which an actual view can be obtained of the condition of both races in the days of Ku-klux and bitterness that followed soon after the war. Miss Waterbury is yet residing in Polo, Ill., and writes in verification of some of the harrowing or ludicrous scenes through which she passed during seven years of teacher's life. This work was in those days a veritable missionary effort. Teachers were bitterly ostracised and sometimes actually in danger of life. The raiders did not always stop to see at whom they fired. This book has the genius of simplicity. The characteristics of the poor ex-slave as he emerged from the dark death-cloud of slavery, or of the poor white in perpetual bondage to ignorance, superstition and petty vices, are told with such unaffected candor and brevity that the reader seems to be transported to the very spot where the story grew. No less remarkable answers to prayer are recorded here, too, than are furnished by the foreign mission fields. In reading one learns to "wonder with a great admiration" at the faithfulness, patience and devotion of the Christian women who began the work of teaching the freedmen after the war. The volume can be had of Bro. Arnold or of Miss Waterbury at Polo, Ill.

This gift of a precocious child to the reading world was copyrighted by a well-known house of New York, but not published by them, possibly for the reason that it has a very distinct flavor of Jesuitry. It is dedicated to a Roman sisterhood and introduces the crucifix and mass and other Romish notions into the story of events which are supposed to have transpired a century or two before Romanism existed. But there are other anachronisms, and all may be attributed to the extreme youth of the writer. Her story is a pretty one of the persecutions under Diocletian, and exhibits a wonderful facility in the use of language as well as maturity and beauty in its thought.

Few have not read of the last book of the Russian Tolstoi, which Postmaster-General Wannamaker has justly proscribed. Several volumes intended as an antidote to this vicious work are out, one of them, published by J. S. Ogilvie, New York, sufficiently horrifies the ordinary reader, so that he will care no more for Tolstoi horrors. Let them all be buried from sight and be put out of mind.

Our Day for September is a number full of matter for thinking men and women. The venerable Cyrus Hamlin writes of the attack upon the American Board which, often beaten back, is expected to be renewed with more energy than ever at the approaching meeting of that body in St. Paul. Dr. Hamlin brings a severe analysis to bear upon the liberalizers and future probationists and other representatives of fast-and-loose theology, and shows that the movement to change the charter and management of the Board is only to be better able to ruin it. Prof. Stuckenberg, writing of the "Religious Movement in Italy," makes a strong presentation of the fact of the Pope's insistent demand for a temporal sovereignty. The effect of such a demand is fast alienating Italian faith from him—would that it might have a like effect in America. Mrs. Florence K. Wischnewetzky writes an article full of warm sympathy on "Our Toiling Children," of whom there are more than a million under 15 years of age earning their own living. The papers accompanying the anti-lottery bill in Congress are printed for preservation, and an article on American lawlessness and the ready use of the revolver, from the London Spectator, should be studied by Americans. Mr. Cook's Monday lecture, reported in this number, is on the "Promises of the Pan-American Congress," and in connection with the discussion of reciprocity, is as interesting as it is valuable. Mr. Cook gives also one of the readiest of replies to Archbishop Ireland on the public schools, by printing that prelate's speech in full with annotations which bring out in a notable manner its glaring self-contradictions and Jesuitical character.

Prof. G. H. Darwin, of Cambridge, Eng., one of the great Darwin's very able sons, will print in the forthcoming (October) Century what is said to be one of the most important scientific papers that has appeared of late years. The subject is "Meteorites and the History of Stellar Systems," and in this essay Prof. Darwin attempts, in an original and novel manner, to reconcile the nebular hypothesis and the meteoric theory. Though dealing with a subject both abstruse and highly speculative, Professor Darwin expresses himself with great simplicity and clearness. Accompanying the article is a new and remarkable celestial photograph which seems to show in actual formation a great system, like our own solar system, all exactly according to the program of the nebular hypothesis.

In the October Ladies' Home Journal, P. T. Barnum tells, in a very entertaining manner, the secret of "How I Have Grown Old;" Mrs. Ulysses Grant describes her courtship with the General, and how the warrior proposed marriage to her; the methods pursued by the Vanderbilts in the training of their children are freshly sketched; Mrs. Margaret Bottome, the President of "The King's Daughters," begins what will hereafter be a regular department entirely devoted to "The King's Daughters."

LODGE NOTES.

The official report of the order shows a membership of nearly 135,000 Sons of Veterans.

The Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Masons for Missouri, Hon. Theodore Brace, is one of the judges of the Supreme Court of that State.

Tanners in the employ of Lenox & Co., of Lynn, Mass., gave notice Thursday that they will not work with non-union men, and that as soon as the stock on hand is disposed of they will leave.

In Baltimore the Federation of Labor declined a request to aid the New York Central strikers because they had no confidence in the General Executive Board of the Knights, and did not believe the money would reach the strikers.

Of the priests of the Roman Church in this country, numbering in all 8,332, only 2,217, or about one-fourth, according to a recent report, are members of religious orders. Of this number 637 are Jesuits, 323 Benedictines, 231 Franciscans, 193 Redemptorists, 96 Dominicans, 82 Capuchins, the remainder being divided among nineteen other religious orders.

The great council of the Improved Order of Red Men meeting in Boston reported a membership July 31 last of 97,-164; net gain, 9,766; receipts, $925,731; paid for reliefs, $245,000; other disbursements, $337,458; investments, $803,813; in hand, $359,272. So this benevolent order devotes only about one-fourth of its income for a legitimate purpose. This is costly insurance.

A handsome building, known as the Pythian Temple, is to be erected at the corner of Oakdale avenue and Clark street, in Lake View, this city, at a cost of $200,000. It will contain a theater, storerooms, and a number of apartments for the Knights of Pythias. The knights will have a lodge room, banquet hall, drill hall, committee-rooms, and anterooms. The theater will seat 1,400 persons.

Allen C. Durburrow, the young man who organized the secret, oath-bound society of the local Democracy known as the "Wine-and-Whiskies," was nominated yesterday for Congressman in the Third District by the convention of his party. His only competitor was an ex-Alderman, whose record in the last General Assembly was so questionable that he has not ventured to seek a nomination.—Chicago Tribune.

The head of the Supreme Council of the Federation of Railway Employes, F. P. Sargent, is also the head of the Brotherhood of Firemen. In 1885—but little more than four years after he became a railroad hand—he was promoted to the Grand Mastership, which he has since held. In 1888 he was a prominent figure in the great strike of engineers and firemen on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Road. The firemen over whom he rules are said to number 20,000, organized in 384 lodges.

The Supreme Court of Connecticut gives warning to the boycotters not to settle in that State. The union printers in a New Haven newspaper office struck against the employment of non-union men in the office, and being defeated in their efforts to drive out the "rats" they boycotted the paper. The proprietors of the newspaper caused the arrest of the leaders of the boycott conspiracy and they were convicted. The case was appealed and the Supreme Court confirmed the decision of the lower court, deciding that the boycott is an unlawful combination and a conspiracy within the meaning of the law.

T. P. Rixey, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Missouri I. O. O. F., has decided that the resolution passed by the Grand Lodge at its last session, providing for ridding the order in the State of the saloon-keeper members, is in conflict with former decisions of the Sovereign Grand Lodge and that the resolution will not be enforced. The decision has not yet been proclaimed to the members. It is the first case in the history of the order in the State in which the Grand Master had found it necessary to revise a resolution which had been adopted by the Grand Lodge. The action taken by the Grand Lodge has caused a great deal of controversy, and prominent members of the order had employed lawyers and propose to present the matter to the Sovereign Grand Lodge of the United States, confident that the State Grand Lodge would be overruled.

THE DISCUSSION

of the College fraternities is assuming more importance daily. Beside the contributions prepared or preparing by men and women whose interest or experience in our colleges are well known, we are assured by students from various institutions that they will have a lively interest in the review and expression of opinion on this question.

This number contains the opinion of one of the first educators of America or of any land, whose statue of heroic size stands with that of Charles Sumner before the golden-domed State House on Beacon Hill, Boston,—HORACE MANN. This opinion is directed against no particular society or class of societies, but against THE SECRET SOCIETY principle itself. The able contribution from a student in the University of Kansas, furnished by the Midland, ought to be read carefully by all the students in our four hundred colleges. Next week we expect to publish the views of MISS FRANCIS E. WILLARD, now president of the National and of the World's W. C. T. U., formerly at the head of the Woman's College of the Northwestern University.

THE FUTURE PROBATIONISTS.

The American Board, whose checks have been preferred by Eastern bankers to the paper of any banks in the United States, meets now soon in Minneapolis. As it is the leading missicn board in this country, and perhaps in the world, our readers, whether its supporters or not, wish to know about it.

If they have access to, or can procure Joseph Cook's monthly, Our Day, for the present month, they will find in the first article, by ex-President Cyrus Hamlin, altogether the ablest exposition of the Board's affairs we have seen since the war on the management began.

In 1845 Dr. Leonard Woods, the founder of Andover Theological Seminary, moved, and the Board voted, that slave-holders, and the higher castes in Asia, should be received into the Board's churches on giving satisfactory evidence of piety, without relinquishing either slavery or caste; both of which are fundamental opposites to Christianity. From that time, the family of Dr. Woods and the seminary have shown a withdrawal of the divine favor, as did the family and realm of Sólomon, after he corrupted the state religion to secure popular favor. And it now seems that Yale and Bangor Seminaries are timidly backing Andover in its raid on the American Board. If old Dr. Dwight were alive at Yale, or Pond or Shepherd at Bangor, those two seminaries would be saved this weakest and most worthless of theological wars.

Andover insists that its students hold the private personal opinion that about ten hundred millions of heathen, who have never heard or known the name of Christ, must have a post mortem probation because they have not had a fair chance to be saved in this life. They do not claim that the Bible teaches this post mortemism; but think the opinion is so harmless that the Board has no right to object to sending students holding it to being missionaries. That is to say: they insist that post-mortemism shall be treated as unobjectionable, if not orthodox. So they make an unrevealed opinion a turning-point in their religious creed, and an articula stantis vel cadentis of the Board."

Now Paul says that the number of those Old Testament people who had not "received the promises," yet who "all died in faith" (Heb. 11: 13), were "as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is by the sea shore innumerable." (Heb. 11: 12, 13.) It would seem then that Christ manifested himself to these countless hosts, and saved them before he came and died on Calvary. And Cornelius seems to have seen Christ in "bright clothing" before Peter went from Joppa to tell him what the name of that wonderful personage was. So two other Roman captains seem to have been Christians without giving up their commissions in a Roman pagan army.

One would think that the King of Dahomey might have as "good a chance" as the myriads who "all died in faith," without hearing the name of Christ, and if it turns out that Dahomey and his Amazons, being confessedly "natural brute beasts, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful," should be turned among the goats, "into everlasting punishment," where Christ's own words sends them, we do not see in this sufficient reason why the American Board should send them Andover missionaries to console them on the road with their private opinions that Christ's terrific words do not perhaps apply to them, but only to such heathen as in this world have had a "fair chance."

Of course, our columns are not for theological dissertations. But we are inclined to give the whole of Dr. Hamlin's article from Our Day, if we knew a respectable number of our readers would be glad to have it inserted. At any rate we hope to induce as many as can do so, to read that uncommonly sound and sensible discussion of the issue between our Bible and its "Liberal" critics.

DO DEVILS INSPIRE PEOPLE?

About two years after the rappings at Hydeville, N. Y., a young lawyer, named Cornell, came down from Tiffin, O., to Cincinnati, and, though candid and capable, he was drawn into the gyrations of spiritualism, and was made giddy by its whirl. He took a young Irish tramp into his parlor and used him as a medium for commerce with spirits. Mr. Cornell was a parishioner of the writer, in the Sixth Presbyterian church, and insisted that his pastor should witness his medium's revelations. We went. The ignorant young Irishman, whose language in his normal state was not above that of a common tramp, was mesmerized by Cornell, and then he was eloquent as Daniel Webster. Cornell, who was a phrenologist, excited the young medium's organs of color and language and he burst forth in these words: "I will take the blue sky for my pallet. I will dip my pencil in the colors of the rainbow, and draw the heavenly host, everyone smiling in his beauty;" with much more in the same glowing and exalted strain. Poor Cornell, who knew the ignorance and low dialect of his medium, was captivated and convinced, and followed the familiar spirits to his temporal if not eternal destruction.

Waiting to change trains at a railroad crossing near Beverly, Mass., toward evening, a group of little old farmers had gathered at a small back country school-house, they said, to hear a young girl trance-preacher, who had never learned to read, and could scarce talk intelligible English; and yet, when the spirit came on her, she entranced her audience with her eloquence. This is characteristic of trance-preachers from Balaam to Joseph Smith, the Mormon.

The confederate General Albert Pike, "Sovereign Grand Commander" of Masons, has issued a book of 860 pages, which he calls lectures of the thirty-three degrees of Scotch Rite Masonry, glowing and glorying with a devil's inspiration. Here is a specimen:

"Man owed it to himself to be free. He owed it to his country to seek to give her freedom, or maintain her in that possession. It made tyranny and usurpation the enemies of the human race," etc., etc.

And yet this Pike, who dates his book from Charleston, though he lives and writes in the old Blair and Rives house at Washington, D. C., was the son of New England; joined the Southern Confederacy to found, in the words of A. H. Stephens, its Vice-President, an empire whose corner-stone was to be slavery. He obtained by fraud and falsehood from the U. S. treasury, money voted to the Indians to school their children; initiated some fifty Cherokees and Choctaws in Federal Lodge No. 1, at Washington; armed a brigade of them, and scalped wounded Union soldiers, in the battle of Pea Ridge; and now is writing devil-inspired peans in favor of liberty and against slavery.

In this same book he hints that the war which slave-holders began by seizing U. S. forts, bombarding Fort Sumter, and firing on their supply-ship, "Star of the West,"—this most infamous of all infamous wars—Albert Pike suggests was brought on by the vote of the prize-fighter, John Morrisey, who voted with the Democrats against the war, and the Abolitionists whom he (of course) styles "fanatics." These are Pike's words:

"A civil war in America will end in shaking the world; and that war may be caused by some ignorant prize-fighter or crazed fanatic in a city or in a congress." Morals and Dogma, p. 42.

And yet this "Sovereign Grand Commander" of U. S. Masons, whose character the vocabulary of fraud, falsehood and hypocrisy has no term to reach in this volume of vaticinations, lauds the morality taught by Christ, whom he puts on a level with the founders of the false religions which have filled the dark places of the earth with "the habitations of cruelty."

We have listened to Mormon priests in the Tabernacle at Salt Lake. We have heard their really lofty praises of morality and the teachings of Christ, but a few blocks from where were sold the wagons, tents, and clothing of the men, women and children who were murdered by order of Brigham Young in the Mountain Meadow massacre, for which their Bishop Lee was given up by Young to be shot by U. S. troops; and no one can witness these performances, or read the pages of Pike, or the responses of familiar spirits, without perceiving the identity of their origin in the inspiration of devils, those "spirits of a low order" which Robert Dale Owen, the coolest and most capable of the spirit writers, thinks may produce effects on men not unlike demonaical "possession." "For false Christs and false prophets shall rise · · · to seduce, if it were possible, even the elect."—Mark. 13:22.

CHURCH UNITY AS A SOCIAL QUESTION.

In an admirable article, replete with momentous facts, and thoroughly imbued with a Christian spirit, Dr. Charles W. Shields discourses on the above topic in the Century for September. After considering the social and semi-political questions now pending before the American people, and which, if settled at all, are to be settled by the Gospel of Christ, and by the intervention of the Christian church, he says that a church divided into sects and denominations can never meet the emergency; that without a change in this respect it must fall before the powers of iniquity. Speaking of the denominations, he says:

"Around these Christian bodies, like a beleaguered army entrenched on the very ground once occupied by themselves as their natural domain, are countless other social bodies without a Christian name or even a Christian spirit, . . . the unchurched fraternities making a religion of Masonry, Odd-fellowship, insurance, or practicing the Christian virtues of brotherhood, temperance and charity under heathen names and with pagan rites. In front are the mustering hosts of insurgent labor, no longer asking Christian charity, but demanding natural justice—gaining recruits from the Christian ministry itself, and already threatening revolution, violence and anarchy. At the rear are the retreating bands of rationalism, materialism, agnosticism, infidelity—turning Christian liberty into license and recoiling with random fire on the ranks that they have deserted. Meanwhile the churches themselves thus outflanked on each side, desperately assailed in front, and treacherously weakened in the rear, still stand asunder without union, without discipline, without enthusiasm—against their common foes. . . . . Upon this situation I remark in general that mere Christian unity, the so-called unity of the invisible church, does not meet the social exigency of the churches. The simple fact that they are all Christian sects, composed largely of true Christians loyal to Christ, is no more to the point than that they are like so many wrangling masses of patriots before a disciplined army of invaders and traitors."

We quote briefly, but the entire article is worthy of study. All will not agree with the proposed plan of union; for methods are subject to endless modification, but great purposes forever remain.

It is a relief to think that the growing conviction of American Christians is that aside from all considerations of economy and Christian propriety, the very perils in which we are involved will compel the Christians of our land to present a united front to every form of iniquity and false religion, or go down before their terrible momentum.

THE FOX RIVER CONGREGATIONAL CLUB met at Sycamore, Ill., last week (Sept. 16), when seventy-five or one hundred men and women sat down to an agreeable dinner, followed by speeches which were not so laboriously funny as such speeches commonly are.

Dr. Hard of Aurora, absent by illness, sent in a Bible argument for riches and the right use of them; and Hon. M. B. Castle gave the Bible condemnation of the greed for and trust in riches. Rev,

N. A. Prentiss was absent. His place in the program, "Jesuits and our Free Schools," was filled extempore by the senior Cynosure editor.

The name of this organization "Club" is objectionable; but provision was made in the Bible for social intercourse among the people of God, and Christ attended social gatherings at weddings; and was accused of "eating with publicans and sinners."

Our readers will wish, and have a right to know the relation of this Club to the lodge. A few members of the Club belong to the Masonic lodge. But the Elgin Association, in whose territory the Club met last week, has put on its record pointed and explicit condemnation of the lodge; and Aurora Association, within whose bounds the Club met three months before, has refused to license Freemasons to preach. So those who still adhere to the lodge, do so to their own hurt, and grieve the Holy Ghost. There is probably not a family or church on earth whose discipline is perfect. But no open fundamental wrongs should be tolerated in either. One member of the Club who is a Knight Templar, and has practiced blasphemy over a human skull, has been faithfully and pointedly labored with. And as the Association observed the Lord's Supper, which is a continuation of the Jews' Passover, since God commanded (Ex. 13: 7.), "There shall no leavened bread be seen with thee; neither shall there be leaven seen with thee in all thy quarters;" and as the Egyptian leaven, which they left out of their bread in their haste when quitting Egypt, seems, afterward, to have been excluded as a type of Egyptian religion; and as Masonry boasts its origin and derivation from the same Egyptian religion,—the Associations, therefore, will doubtless purify their associational communions by faithful labor with those erring brethren who have sinned through ignorance, and so put away the accursed Egyptian leaven from their sacred feasts.

HORACE MANN, whose portrait and testimony against the lodge we give this week, is well remembered at Antioch College, Ohio, of which he was the first president. Professor Tufts, the oldest member of the faculty, was five years under Mr. Mann, and remembers to have often heard him express his detestation of secret societies. That college has no secret societies, and a majority of its trustees have always been of the same opinion with their first president. Horace Mann was also one of the first of the prohibitionists. In 1837 he gave his voice for the "utter prohibition of the sale of ardent spirits as a drink." As an Abolitionist he frowned upon the spirit of caste, and welcomed the black student as well as the white. The memory of moral heroes like him should often be recalled in these days of great temptation.

—The Washington agent is now in Philadelphia meeting old friends and making new ones. He had, when he wrote Saturday, three meetings arranged, and is hopeful for Philadelphia.

—The Journalist of New York, commenting on the boycott of the Baltimore Globe by the printers' union of that city, reads the latter a sensible lesson for their ill-advised movement.

—Rev. B. T. Roberts, editor of the Free Methodist, is reviewing the Henry George theory of single tax in the clear and convincing style for which he is well known. The Free Methodist for Sept. 10 is an excellent one for all who wish to study both sides of this question. It contains an explanation of his theory by Mr. George himself and the reply of the editor.

—The New England agent wrote on Thursday that the rainfall had been almost constant during the week. Wednesday evening he reached home wet and weary from exposure, and a slight chill followed. He was better next morning, but weak. The next letter we hope will report him well and more resolved than ever, in his efforts against the lodges of New England.

—The Christian Banner of Philadelphia gives a very kind notice of the Cynosure, which all our readers will see with pleasure. The Banner says: "We have been a careful reader of this journal for the last two years, and think it a splendid paper for every true Christian, Odd-fellow or Mason, to read. Bible doctrines on this subject are here so plainly stated that all may see who read."

—Bro. Nichols, the California agent, finds that the lodges of that State have not become less cruel and proscriptive since Revs. Richards and Henry Cogswell attempted to combat them. He has been up in the mountain mines east of San Francisco at Sonora, and was not permitted to speak in the hall he had hired for that purpose. His letter came late for this week and waits for next.

—Rev. George B. Checver, the famous anti-slavery and temperance advocate, is lying critically ill at his home in Englewood, New Jersey. He was a classmate in Bowdoin College of Longfellow and Hawthorne, and has manfully filled during his long life various responsible positions, among them pastor of one of the leading churches of New York and editor of the Independent. Though he has led a retired life for many years, he has been busily engaged in literary labors. He was 83 years old last April.

—Horace Greeley, whether his sentiments were ever published in the New York Tribune or not, was known in the early day as an Anti-mason. He wrote the article on Anti-masonry in the first edition of the American Encyclopedia. A massive statue in bronze, by J. Q. A. Ward, was unveiled to his memory the other day in New York by Miss Gabriel Greeley, the daughter of the great editor, before an assemblage of several thousand people. The statue stands under the arch of the Tribune, and was erected by an association of his successors in the office. The ceremony opened with prayer by Bishop Potter. Colonel John Hay presided, and Mr. Chauncey M. Depew delivered the address.

REFORM NEWS.

TAKE NOTICE, PENNSYLVANIANS!

CUSTER CITY, Pa.

BRETHREN:—Bro. W. B. Stoddard suggests an early State Convention in Pittsburgh. What do you say? "Don't you hear the sounds of a going?" Does not secret society murder and jail-robbing, their Sabbath camp meeting at Shohola Glen, their Sabbath excursions and displays, their cover for the whisky men to hide in against law and moral sentiment, their jury-packing, and unrighteous verdicts, their jury hanging, etc., do not these things make you feel that something should be done and that every man should say, I will do something, God helping me? Let us trust one another and pull all together to further God's cause.

The Pennsylvania temporary organization is still alive, and only awaits your pleasure to bring a permanent organization to the birth. Remember! The watchwords of our State are, "Virtue! Liberty! Independence!" Noble sentiments; but you and your best influence are needed to resuscitate those sentiments and make them ring in the hearts of every Pennsylvanian. Have we virtue (active quality) in morals? Look at our "Sunday newspapers," breaking down our Sabbath institutions, undermining and sapping the morals of our youth; whose pages reek with crime and pestilential (spiritual) death, making heroes of criminals, feeding the souls of our boys and girs with bread from the nether world.

Have we Liberty? Look at the clans that gather nightly in our cities, towns and villages, each bound to a superior; each standing as a phalanx against all who can't twist their thumbs or fingers in the same direction with them; each in their Machiavellianism posing as citizens of these United States, but whose first obligation is the clan and not the government. Let every true patriot answer. Daily are we approaching the time when "both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond," shall receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads; and" when "no man" shall "buy or sell, save he that" has "the mark or the name of the beast or the number of his name." Is there not a law for the clansman and a law for the cowan? Judge ye.

Are we Independent? What is the price paid by many for their moral manhood? Is it not ostracism, disarrangement of business, whisperings, backbitings, etc., etc.? Let us arise and make our Virtue, Liberty, Independence, a motto with truth in it, not left for Fourth of July orators to pick out of the forgotten as often as the year rolls round, lifting the patriotism of the gaping crowd from its grave to sink back to its old resting-place till the next anniversary. We don't need fire-crackers or rockets to show our patriotism, but we do need to take our necks and our manhood from under the yoke of abnormal sentiment, which is oppression to true morals, and be free men and women of the Lord in the state.

Edward J. Chalfant, York, Pa., anxiously awaits your correspondence with your suggestions and determinations to stand for Virtue, Liberty, Independence. Be men to-day, Pennsylvanians.

BOSTON HEADQUARTER TALKS.

BOSTON, Sept. 16, 1890.

An anti-lodge room is not a bad place to study character or to pick up information. For example: A well dressed man stops and says, "I see you advertise free tracts on secret orders."

"Yes, sir; what can I show you? Anything special you would like?"

"Well, yes, something on Odd-fellowship."

"I have it, sir. Just what you want."

Turning to make the selection, I ask, "Do you reside in the city?"

"Well, no matter about that; I would like to see what you have on Odd-fellowship."

"Certainly, sir. Are you a Christian?"

"I came in to see what you know about Odd-fellowship."

"Then you are a member, I presume?"

"I can tell at least whether you are a member or not."

"Well, I am a Western man, and in our town the candidate had to go in blind-folded, have a chain entwined about him, and after being manipulated around for a time he was placed beside a coffined skeleton, the blind removed and he was permitted to look upon the ghastly skeleton, the masked and costumed members, and listen to a dolorous tale of woe by the venerable warden. Does this custom prevail here in your city lodges?"

"I don't care to answer your question, but I want to know if you are an Odd-fellow, or what you know about it?"

"My dear sir, that's just what I am trying to tell you. Don't be impatient. Were you blind-folded and entwined with a chain and terrified with the death scene when you were initiated; or is there one form for Chicago and another for Boston?"

"It doesn't concern you whether I was hoodwinked or not."

"But my good sir, you proposed to test me as an Odd-fellow, I accepted the challenge, and now, what is your decision?"

"Well, you may or may not have been a member at some time."

"That's evasive and not manly; were you blind-folded, etc.? Say yes if you were, and no if you were not and maintain your self-respect in spite of the order."

"How do you know so much about those things, any way?" was his reply.

"Well, sir, here is the manual of my lodge. Every word in plain English, signs and grips all illustrated; why shouldn't I be posted?"

Taking the book, he glanced through it, and inquired, "Is this book for sale?"

"Yes, sir."

"What is the price?"

"Fifty cents."

He paid the money. With the book I wrapped a good assortment of tracts I had selected while the dialogue was going on, and my early customer departed, promising to call again.

Later a young man called for tracts. I asked, "Are you connected with any of the secret orders?"

"Yes, I belong to two or three."

"You live in the city, I presume, and have steady employment?"

"Yes, I am a printer."

"Belong to the printer's union, I presume?"

"Yes."

"Do you own your own labor, make your own contracts, and fix your own price on your work?"

He hesitated, and so to relieve him of evident embarrassment, I said, "I see! You didn't feel competent to take care of your business and so you chose a guardian whom you pay liberally to do the bossing. You belong to other lodges, you say?"

"Yes, I am a Knight of Pythias."

"How did you stand the bravery test, when you jumped on the spikes?"

He laughed in reply. I handed him an expose, and asked, "Is that true?"

THE HOME.

SIX O'CLOCK P. M.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

Homeward o'er all the peaceful land,
At six o'clock P. M.;
Their shining luncheon-pails in hand,
At six o'clock P. M.;
Discarding every irksome rule,
There in the evening shades so cool,
The boys and girls come home from school,
At six o'clock P. M.

A thousand tables draped in white,
At six o'clock P. M.;
The scattered families unite,
At six o'clock P. M.;
As round the board they gather now,
The burning sun is sinking low,
A thousand heads in blessings bow,
At six o'clock P. M.

Ended at last, the weary day,
At six o'clock P. M.;
Garments of toil are laid away,
At six o'clock P. M.;
Shrined with his happy household band,
Relieved from toil the weary hand,
While shadows lengthen o'er the land,
At six o'clock P. M.

Happy are hearts that labor cease,
At six o'clock P. M.;
Happy those joyous homes of peace,
At six o'clock P. M.;
As round those white-robed tables there,
Father and youth and maiden fair,
A thousand voices rise in prayer,
At six o'clock P. M.

A SOCIAL EVENING IN SWEDEN.

M. W. Montgomery, writing from Stockholm, Sweden, to the American Home Missionary, gives the following beautiful picture of a social evening in that city: "What better greeting from this far-off land on the top of the globe can I send to the home missionary friends than to tell them how some Swedish Christians spend a social evening? The company, consisting of twelve or fifteen ladies and gentlemen, gathered at six o'clock, and after a few minutes of mutual greetings in the spacious parlor, were invited to the dining-room, where tea, coffee, milk and other light refreshments were served. Returning soon to the parlor, social converse flowed freely for some time. Anecdotes were told, and the laughing was hearty but not boisterous. The natural, easy, quiet manners showed to a marked degree, the atmosphere of cultivated, earnest Christian people. All the ladies had "handiwork" with them which they were preparing for a church sale for the cause of missions.

"About half-past seven o'clock Bibles were passed around. With true Swedish politeness a Bible in English was handed to the American guest and an interpreter seated by him in case he should need one. After a brief prayer, which earnestly invoked the leading of the Holy Spirit into the Word, a few verses were read, and then a biblical conversation began. Two blessed hours were spent talking of the meaning of the Scriptural passage. Questions were asked, other scripture compared, commentators cited, especially Meyer, Dr. Waldenstrom taking the lead in the conversation. But there were also present pastors Ekman and Fernholm, who are so well known among Congregationalists in the United States. Sometimes, during the conversation, Dr. Waldenstrom, in his earnestness, would spring to his feet for a few moments. Then, and indeed at all times, he was followed by the eager ears and fond eyes of his parlor audience. They were not studying the Sunday-school lesson, but with minds in a remarkably teachable and expectant attitude, were lovingly studying God's Word. They could well say with the Psalmist (Ps. 119: 97), 'O, how love I thy law.' I learned afterwards that these friends met informally in this way every two weeks for a 'Social Bible Evening.'

"At half-past nine o'clock prayer was offered, in which all kneeled, and the company were then again invited to the dining-room where a substantial supper was waiting them. At its beginning and at its close brief prayer was offered. Most of the guests ate while walking about the room, but those sat who so preferred. Dr. Waldenstrom had become so much interested in the discussion that he continued it during the supper, walking among his guests familiarly, with his thumbs in the armholes of his vest. At ten o'clock the guests began to depart."—The Home Missionary.

PRAY FOR YOUR CHILDREN.

Did you ever see a chain-gang of convicts marching to their labor? I could wish never to see the sad sight again. Suppose that among those convicts there was a boy of yours! Ah me! Ah me! it were better for you that he had never been born. But think of those who are prisoners in the chains of sin. Is there a boy or girl of yours in such bonds? Oh, then, I am sure you will pray the Lord to rescue you from so sharp a trial, and to set your sons and daughters free from the fetters of iniquity. Pray each one fervently, "O Lord, let thy glory as their emancipator appear to my children, and then do what thou wilt."

Did you ever visit a condemned cell? To peep through the gate and to see a man sitting there condemned to die is enough to make one faint. Suppose it were your boy! Suppose it were your husband! Suppose it were your brother! But listen: "He that believeth not is condemned already." Pardon us, unconverted relatives, if we say that we feel more sorrow for you living than we do for our gracious ones who are dead; for yours is a terrible plight, to be even now sitting in the condemned cell, doomed to be taken out to execution before long, unless infinite mercy shall grant a free pardon.

Did you hear of

wherein there were many guests, and they were in the upper story, and the flames had grasped the whole edifice, so that numbers perished? It must be dreadful to see persons at the upper window of a burning house, and to be powerless to rescue them. But if your child were there, your boy, your girl, or if your husband or your wife were there, or even any one that you knew were there, your grief would have a double sting about it, and you would cry, "Lord, do what thou wilt with me, but do save those precious lives." Remember, then, that your ungodly friends are in a like condition, and what greater mercy can God bestow upon you than for him to make his glory to be seen by your children in their eternal salvation?

Therefore I turn your thoughts to that prayer. May you breathe it now, and may the Lord, for Christ's sake, answer it right speedily—"Let thy glory appear unto our children."—Sel.

JOHN GUTENBERG, THE INVENTOR OF THE PRINTING-PRESS.

A sturdy young German who, with knapsack on back and staff in hand, knocked at old Laurence Coster's door was no ordinary youth. Although scarcely more than twenty, he had seen already a great deal of life, and even some of its rougher aspects.

John Gutenberg belonged to a family of high degree, and had been reared in such luxury as could be enjoyed in the rude mediæval time; but he did not allow luxurious living to make him indolent or unambitious. He was an ardent student, and had received the best training which the learned monks could give him. Often, when a boy, he was found pouring over the manuscripts which he found in the monasteries where he was educated. He was also very religious in thought and act. Many a time he would earnestly exclaim, what a pity it was that the Bible was a closed book to the masses of the people; that, as it was written by hand on parchment, it could only be possessed either by the churches and monasteries or by very rich people.

Gutenberg's home was at Strasburg, on the banks of the Rhine. He had often dreamed of foreign countries, and imagined what they and their peoples were like; so one day, being strong of limb and active in exercise, he resolved to pack up his knapsack, attire himself in walking costume, and take a long pedestrian tour. It was while on this jaunt that, by a chance for which all later generations have reason to be thankful, he heard of old Coster and his discovery, and hastened to present himself at the humble church-warden's door.

You can imagine the eagerness with which Coster led his young guest in, and how delighted he was to show him just how the printing of his letters worked. While with his rude leaden types the old man pressed letter after letter on the parchment, Gutenberg stood by, wrapt in attention. Already he imagined he saw dimly to what great uses this discovery might be put.

"And, see here!" exclaimed Coster, holding up some pages of parchment awkwardly sewed together, "here is my first book in print."

It was a Latin grammar. Old Coster had slowly printed it, letter by letter, and right proud was he of this first triumph of his patient labor.

"But we can do better than this," said Gutenberg. "Your printing is even slower than the writing of the monks. From this day forth I will work upon this problem, and not rest till I have solved it."

Warmly grasping Coster's hand, and thanking him for showing him his discovery, Gutenberg resumed his knapsack, and trudged out of Haarlem. He had no longer any thought of continuing his tramp into new scenes. His fondness for seeing strange lands had deserted him. His only thought was to get back as soon as possible to Strasburg, where he lived, and to set to work upon the task he had now set to himself.

Gutenberg lived in an age of dense superstition and ignorance. Everything that was new and unfamiliar seemed to the ignorant people of the time to be the work of sorcery; and anyone who dared to do things which appeared marvelous in their eyes was persecuted and pursued as if he dealt in evil magic. No one knew this better than the young Strasburg scholar.

So, on his arrival at Strasburg, he gave out that he was at work making jewelry. Meanwhile he locked himself up in his room, and scarcely taking time to eat or sleep, devoted himself to the problem how to make Coster's discovery useful to the world. But he found that he was watched and interrupted, and that his hiding himself so constantly in his room gave rise to dark suspicions among his neighbors. So he repaired to an old ruined monastery, only one or two rooms in which were habitable, which stood a few miles from the town. Here he thought he could work in peace, for the monastery ruin was in a half-deserted place.

In this old monastery of St. Arbogaste was a little cell, hidden in an obscure part of it. This cell Gutenberg secured by a great oaken door with heavy bolts, and here he put the tools and materials needed for his work. At the same time he fitted up a half-ruined room in a more open part of the monastery as a jewelry shop. He engaged two young men to help him polish precious stones and to repair trinkets. In this way he hoped to be able to work at his types in the hidden cell without discovery.

He now set to work, at such times as he could escape into his little cell, in dead earnest. It was not long before he had carved out of some bits of wood with his knife a number of separate types. The happy idea struck him to string these on a piece of wire in the form of words, and at last sentences. Then, finding that wood was not hard enough, he carved some types, with more difficulty, in lead.

Having made types which satisfied him, Gutenberg used his knowledge of chemistry to make an ink which would leave a distinct imprint, and he soon succeeded in producing such an ink. As he continued to work, the great idea that was absorbing him grew more and more clear. He had his types and his ink, so he made a brush and a roller to put the ink on the types. He had now got as far as printing a whole word or sentence on a piece of parchment; and by changing the movable types about, could form at will new words and sentences.

His next task was to construct "chases," so that the types could be held together, and would print in pages. And at last the idea of a printing-press was made a reality.

When Gutenberg had completed and gazed with delight on the first printing-press which had ever been constructed, the main difficulties of his task were over. With his types set in their chases, his different colored inks at his elbow, his rollers at hand to apply the ink, and his press ready to press the types down upon the blank pages, he stood ready to complete the first book printed with movable type.

But poor Gutenberg was not destined to get much happiness from the results of his labors and the splendid invention he had made. He worked so hard that the few hours of the night which he took for sleep were disturbed by uneasy dreams. Sometimes he thought that angelic voices warned him not to go on with his printing, for that it would bring untold miseries upon the human race. Then he would rise in the morning, unrefreshed by his slumbers and terrified by the vision, and, seizing a mallet, would be on the point of smashing his printing-press all to pieces. But sometimes other spirits would appear to him in dreams, and urge him to go on with his good work, saying that it would be an immense blessing and benefit to all the world in all future ages. This would inspire him with new energy, and he would toil the next day with a light heart.

But after the printing-press had been made, and he had really begun to print books, his assistants in the jewelry shop betrayed him. They told the magistrates of Strasburg about his long absences and mysterious movements. Their story soon spread through the town, and roused the anger of the priests, who did not wish the people to read the Bible for themselves, and the hatred of the writers of manuscript books, who feared lest printing should ruin their occupation.

Gutenberg's enemies soon compelled him to fly from Strasburg. He was stripped of all he had in the world, and even his life was threatened. So he went back to Mayence, his birthplace, and there resumed his printing. He took a rich jeweler, Fust, into partnership. But he was not allowed to work long in peace. Fust turned against him, and he was soon forced to leave Mayence as he had left Strasburg.

He was now wretchedly poor, and for a while roamed aimlessly from place to place. But at last he found a home in Nassau, the ruler of which offered him his protection. In that quiet town Gutenberg set up his press again, and printed many books, and spent the remainder of his days, I am glad to say, in rest, comfort, and content, although he never got rich from his invention. He died in the year 1468, at the ripe age of sixty-nine, and many years after the statue of him, which may be seen standing in Mayence, was erected in his honor by the descendants of those who had driven him forth, a beggar, from his native city.—Harper's Young People.

TEMPERANCE.

SAM SMALL'S CONVERSION.

In a lecture at Philadelphia reported in the Philadelphia Inquirer, S. W. Small said: "Out of seventeen years' bitter experience," said the speaker, "I can say that I do not believe the man was born who has the power to restrain his unguided passions." Continuing, he told of the humiliation and alarm the discovery gave, of his fruitless efforts, by the aid of physicians and drugs, to overcome the mad thirst for drink, and how he moved from one place to another, even abroad, but found no relief. At last he settled in Atlanta, Ga., as one of the editors of the Constitution and official court reporter. He described the helplessness of his daily career in drunkenness, of his faithful wife's efforts to save him from ruin. Once he went with his two little children to hear Sam Jones at a revival. He had almost been converted, when he crushed back the flood of religious conviction and rushed from the tent with his little ones. A prolonged debauch followed. Seated in a saloon, with his head in his hands, he was debating whether he should kill himself or not, when his wife found him and took him home in her carriage. When they arrived there he went straight to his room, and thought his case all over. Some distant voice from his mother's memory came back to his fevered brain. It called him to righteousness, and seemed mingled with the eloquence of Jam Jones' sermon of a few days before. He went from his room to another one above, locked the door and prayed. For four long hours he struggled in physical and mental agony with beseeching supplication to the Almighty, and at last, with a great cry, he fell forward.

When a little later he awoke he felt a curious numbness of the body and imagined he was paralyzed. But this feeling soon gave away to one of ease and comfort.

Rushing down stairs he clasped his wife in his arms and told her of his grand gift of righteousness and declared he would make her the best husband in the world. He then went out and got a lot of circulars, on which he had printed, "Sam W. Small will preach this evening at so and so street, 7 P. M. sharp."

A lot of newsboys soon had this all over the city, and promptly at the hour he opened a discourse on a platform of two whisky barrels. His little children were again with him. A great and curious crowd of old acquaintances had collected to hear the drunkard preach. He told them of his past life among them and his conversion, and announced his intention of going away to a life devoted to God.

The very next morning the old feeling of desire came over him, and for two hours he prayed and struggled against it and it disappeared, "and from that hour to this," said Mr. Small, "I have never felt the desire again."

THE RIGHT PLACE FOR A SALOON.

Where is the right place for a saloon? Where is the saloon wanted? If not the fashionable mercantile establishment, what other kinds of business are likely to be helped by the proximity of gin mills? Let some one name them. Is it the baker, the tailor, the shoemaker, the butcher, the milliner, the bookseller? Do any of these find it of any particular advantage to their trade to have a grog-seller come and open up a shop beside them? What surroundiugs are necessary in order to justify the opening of resorts for loafers, of drunkard mills, of dens for the propagation of vice and crime? What neighborhoods shall be selected for the establishment of places for the debauchment of men, for the destruction of families, for the making of paupers and felons? Which is the worst, to open a saloon within two hundred feet of a church or school, or to open one next door to a house, in front of a house, over a house, or under a house? What is there that should make a grog shop a stench in the nostrils of the public on one street and a sweet smelling savor on another? What should make it an ugly blot on the landscape in one locality and a thing of beauty in another? Is a saloon on Fifth avenue calculated to do greater harm than a beer-dive on Mulberry street? If the wealthy and powerful cannot endure the presence of the grog-shop, why will they thrust them on the poor and weak? Are the tenement districts—the homes of those already deep down in poverty, squalor and misery—are these the proper places to set the saloons? Are they needed here to help men to live purer lives, to make happier homes, to strengthen the weak, to cheer the downcast, to guide the erring? Who shall take upon himself the responsibility of declaring where the people shall be cursed with the presence of grog-shops, and where they shall not be cursed? These, it seems to us, are the practical questions, and we should have them answered.—New York Observer.

Last week's Independent is a railroad number, twelve pages being given to the discussion of railway themes. Cassius M. Clay answers the question, "Shall the railroads own the people?" Edward Everett Hale, "Should the state own the railroads?" Professor Ely and a railroad manager discuss the same question; Governor Larrabee writes of railroad legislation, and the editor of "Poor's Manual of Railroads," gives four pages of statistics on railroad matters. One of the most interesting things in this interesting number is the symposium on "Temperance in the Railway Service," in which seventy railroad superintendents testify that total abstinence is generally required of railroad employes. The use of intoxicants while on duty is forbidden by nearly all roads, and many of them make visiting saloons and other places of bad repute cause for dismissal. Vermont has a State law by which a railroad company that knowingly employs as conductor, engineer, brakeman or switchman, one who uses intoxicating liquors as a beverage, shall forfeit not less than three hundred dollars nor more than three thousand dollars with cost of prosecution, and shall also be liable for damages sustained by retention of such an employe. Michigan has a similar law. Several roads prohibit the use of tobacco by any employe on a passenger train. The Chicago, St. Paul and Kansas City forbids smoking by any employe while on duty or about the stations, shops and warehouses. The Union Pacific makes the same provision. The good effect of this railroad prohibition which does prohibit is incalculable.—Union Signal.

J. B. Gehry, of Reading, Pa., engineer of a passenger train on the Reading Railroad, reports a strange experience which he had shortly after 8 o'clock last Wednesday. It was very dark and when he got near Perkiomen Junction he was running slowly, at the same time keeping a sharp lookout for objects ahead. Suddenly the headlight revealed the body of a woman between the tracks ahead of him and two children lying near by. Engineer Gehry whistled down brakes and the locomotive was stopped within a few feet of them. When the train hands got off they were surprised to find another woman and three more children lying near by all in stupor, and as unconscious of what was going on about them as if they were dead. Of the children the oldest was ten years and the youngest three months. The crew at first thought that they had been struck by a train, but investigation showed that they were fearfully intoxicated. Being aroused, they stated that they had attended an apple-butter stirring and had drunk too much hard cider. All seven had a narrow escape from being run over and killed. The women were prosperous farmers' wives, and had no idea the cider would affect them. They were taken on board the train and carried to their destination, the next station.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. God's care of his vineyard.—vs. 9–12. It is very likely that our Saviour had in mind the 5th chapter of Isaiah, in which the prophet represents the Jewish church under the type of a vineyard to which its owner had done everything possible in the way of tillage; and yet after all his care and pains it brought forth only wild, sour grapes. But this allegory under our Lord's treatment becomes a parable, with living human actors. The Master of the vineyard is represented as being absent in a far country. It would have been no test of the faithfulness of these servants had they been kept all the time under his watchful eye. It is true they would have had no chance to carry out their wicked plots, but their wicked WILL, which was the source and motive power of all their crimes, would have been the same. The Jews remained faithful to Jehovah so long as he spoke to them in accents they could hear and understand from the smoking top of Sinai, but when all signs of his visible presence were withdrawn, they began to worship the golden calf. If miracles were common events, and God now manifested himself openly and visibly to men, humanity would fail of being properly tested. Neither our wickedness or our goodness, our faith or our unbelief, could be measured under such circumstances. "He let it forth to husbandmen," the chief priests and religious teachers. They were to see that he received the fruit. It is implied in the parable that these husbandmen kept the fruit for their own enrichment. So the religious condition of the people was of no interest to their priestly leaders, except so far as they could put money into their coffers by trading on the general ignorance and superstition—as do the priests of Rome to-day. The servants whom he sent to demand his rightful dues are shamefully maltreated—a graphic picture of the sufferings, even in some instances to death—endured by the old Testament prophets.

2. A last resort.—vs. 12–14. There was but one thing more God could do that he had not done; and this was to send a divine Ambassador—his own beloved Son. But so far from paying him due reverence, they proceeded to cast him out of the vineyard and kill him with the vain thought of seizing upon the inheritance themselves. This was actually what the chief priests were aiming to do. They wanted to retain their power and rule, and so they deliberately imbued their hands in the blood of God's Son. The same sin is practically committed when religious leaders tolerate some great iniquity as slavery formerly, or high license and the lodge at the present day—thereby crucifying the Lord afresh and putting him to an open shame—for fear of losing their salaries or their ecclesiastical power; or hurting their particular church or denomination. We are prone to forget that even the men who crucified Jesus were men of like flesh and blood with ourselves. We have no right to sit in judgment on their sins. Our chief concern should be to take warning by their example and their final fate. Otherwise much of the Bible will afford us but little profit.

3. The punishment of the wicked husbandmen. —vs. 16–18. Christ himself answers the question, "What shall the Lord of the vineyard do unto them? He shall destroy these husbandmen, and shall give the vineyard unto others." The quick response, "God forbid!" shows that his hearers, at least the scribes and Pharisees, understood the parable; for had they listened to it as a mere story with no practical bearing on themselves, they would have concurred in the sentence, at once so reasonable and just. But the idea that God would take away all the rights and privileges so long enjoyed by them as his peculiar people, and give them to the despised Gentiles, they could not tolerate for a moment. Yet this was what actually came to pass. Our prejudices or our opinions can make no difference with God's judgments. That we have been educated in the firm belief that America's star of empire can never set, will not keep her from being destroyed as a nation if she refuses to obey God in the person of his Son, Jesus Christ.

He looked it carefully over and said, "It's no use saying a thing isn't true, when it is; and I won't say that that book isn't true."

Said I, "Did you ever see a book like that before?"

"Yes, somebody brought it to our lodge one night."

"What," I asked, "did the brethren say about it?"

"Oh, they just laughed and said 'nobody would believe it.'"

He gave me the names of some parties who were strongly opposed to the lodge.

On the Sabbath the "Ancient" Order of Foresters buried one of their distinguished members with great pomp and circumstance. The band was large, the uniforms gaudy, and the procession long. As the carriages passed I noticed several empty, others filled with mourners (!) talking and laughing in high glee. Several were smoking, and beside the driver on one carriage was one "mourner" so drunk that he fell over and lay on the carriage top, in spite of the best efforts of the driver to arouse him. One gentleman standing near me made the very just remark, "Such a scene as that is a disgrace to civilization." So they moved on, the band playing "Nearer, my God, to thee!"

I have been seeking readers for the Cynosure to-day, among the members of Clarendon St. Baptist Church, and was greatly rejoiced to learn that the pastor speaks occasionally and boldly against the lodge, to his people. There is no man in Boston from whom an occasional remark or an entire discourse has more weight than from Dr. Gordon. I find a number of his members belonging to "benefit orders with a little secrecy;" but have it on good authority that only one or two members of Clarendon St. Baptist Church belong to the Masons, Odd-fellows, or like religious orders.

After a time of trial Bethany Mission has come forth from the furnace with renewed vigor and greatly enlarged usefulness. The attendance is good, the conversions numerous, and the testimonies simply wonderful. Sister Richards and Mrs. Lock, her assistant, are at their post seven nights in the week, using such helps as the Lord sends, but responsible for the services, which are often protracted until eleven o'clock, when there are earnest seekers. Their endurance and resources are a marvel to all who do not know the "secret of the Lord." Prayer, conference and mission work is resumed all along the line, and some are believing that a gracious outpouring of the Spirit in Boston is at hand. May it come in power. J. P. STODDARD.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The annual report of the Pacific Garden Mission has been issued by Col. Geo. R. Clarke and his devoted wife, its founders and managers. The thirteenth year of the Mission has just closed, and has in many respects been the best of all; more people have been reached with the Gospel, more aid to the poor and sick, more professed conversions, more drunkards saved. Mrs. Clarke visits the county jail two or three times each week, spending several hours each visit, going from cell to cell, reading the Bible and praying with the prisoners. Other visitors and missionaries are connected with the mission, and Bro. H. Monroe, who has been a very successful helper, devotes his entire time to the work of the mission. The devoted workers of this mission are looking to God for means to put up a new building. The number of meetings held by the mission during the year were 660, and the total attendance in all meetings has been 117,020. The contributions and expenses have been $6,417.74, of which Col. Clarke has borne about one-third. More devoted Christian workers than those who manage this mission God has seldom sent into his vineyard. If a tithe of their spirit was felt in the churches of Chicago, Bro. Clarke would not be called upon to pay $2,000 and over year by year, but money would pour in to carry on the work, and a prayer would sanctify every cent of it for the work of soul-saving.

—The National Swedish Mission union meeting in Galesburg adopted temperance resolutions expressing sympathy with those working for the success of the prohibition amendment in Nebraska. The question of replying to the greeting extended to the union by the national Congregational Triennial Council was adopted. A number of delegates were strongly opposed to making a reply, fearing that it might indicate that the Swedish Mission churches favor union with the Congregationalists. The debate ended with the adoption of a resolution that a reply be drafted in time for the next Triennial Council of the Congregationalists, thus postponing the matter for at least two years. Carl Wheaton and P. Watson were ordained missionaries to China.

—"Talk about questions of the day," said Mr. Gladstone in a recent interview, "there is but one question, and that is the Gospel. It can and will correct everything needing correction. All men at the head of great movements are Christian men. During the many years I was in the cabinet I was brought into association with sixty master-minds, and all but five of them were Christians. My only hope for the world is in bringing the human mind into contact with divine revelation."

—Bishop Thoburn, of India, whose bishopric includes three hundred and ten million people, is now in this country to secure workers for his vast field. He has been a leader in temperance work in India for years. He and his sisters are pioneers in the movement for establishing the order of Deaconesses in America. She has spent two years here in the interests of this work, aiding in the establishment of the Deaconesses' home in Chicago and also one in Cincinnati. These being now on a sure footing, she starts for India to resume her much loved missionary work.

—Methodism in Maine has been unusually active this year, building a larger number of new churches than in any recent year.

—The friends of the American Board are making strenuous efforts to increase the gifts to that excellent missionary society. President Storrs, Secretary Clark, Dr. Taylor and others urge the importance not only of increasing the sum given last year. but also of raising it to a millon dollars.

—Rev. E. Payson Hammond, the evangelist, spent the first two Sabbaths of this month, with the intervening week, in Lockport, N. Y. His congregations were very large, and the evidences of the presence of the Divine Spirit in the meetings were unmistakable.

—It appears from the comparative summary published in the minutes of the recent Southern General Assembly (Presbyterian) that in the past five years there has been an increase of over twenty-five thousand members in the Southern church, and an increase in contributions over those of 1886 of over $400,000.

—The Congregationalists of Toronto have formed an association the object of which is to promote church extension and sustain new congregations until they can sustain themselves. During recent years the number of Congregational churches has greatly increased, and the prospect is that others will soon be formed.

—Rev. Dr. F. A. Noble, pastor of the Union Park Congregational church of this city, proposes that the Ashland Mission, towards which his church has paid six thousand five hundred dollars for lots, be known hereafter as the Porter Memorial church, in honor of Rev Jeremiah Porter, the first Protestant minister in the city, who, although a Congregationalist, gathered and organized the First Presbyterian church there.

—Beginning on Sabbath evening, Sept. 28, and on Sabbath evenings thereafter during the remainder of the year, Rev. T. De Witt Talmage will deliver a series of sermons at the Academy of Music, in New York City, under the auspices of the Christian Herald, that journal having secured the Academy for this purpose at a cost of nearly $3,000 for the series. The trustees of Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle sometime ago decided not to resume Sabbath evening services in Brooklyn until the completion of the Tabernacle building. In embracing the offer to preach in New York, Dr. Talmage generously declined to accept any compensation. The entire plate collections will be distributed by the Christian Herald among the hospitals of New York, regardless of religious preferences.

—Rev. Dr. George F. Pentecost, who is proceeding to his evangelistic work in India, may be addressed until October 10 at the office of the Christian, London, Eng., and after that at Calcutta, India. Many persons have expressed deep interest in his missionary work, and Dr. Pentecost asks that they will constantly lift up their hearts in prayer on behalf of the enterprise.

—The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Church South has determined to have a missionary training school for workers in home and foreign fields. The matter is well received, and Dr. Scarritt promptly offered $50,000 if the school is located in Kansas City and if the women will add $25,000 to the enterprise. This the women immediately proceeded to vote, and they also commissioned Miss Bennett, of Richmond, to enter the field as agent for that fund.

—A summary has been made of missionary work in China, as reported at the late missionary conference, together with the corresponding statement made thirteen years previously, at the conference of 1877. The record is inspiriting. The number of foreign missionaries has increased two and a half fold. As to the native laborers, the increase of ordained missionaries has been nearly three fold; of unordained, two and a half fold. The churches have increased from 312 to 520, or sixty-six per cent., within the thirteen years. The communicants in the churches and the pupils in the schools have increased each a little less than three fold, while the contributions by native Christians have increased four fold.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

—A young woman who pays heavy taxes in Parsons, Kan., demands the right to pasture her cows in the school-house grounds because she never had any children to send to school. "My cows are my children," she says, with the dignity of a Roman matron.

—Of the 389 colleges in the United States by which literary or scientific degrees are conferred upon male students, 237 admit women to all their honors and privileges. Besides these, there are 207 colleges and seminaries devoted solely to the education of women, employing 2,581 professors, and numbering 25,318 students during the past year.

—The richest theological institution in the Presbyterian denomination is Union Theological Seminary in New York city, which has property in land, buildings, and endowments amounting to $1,941,000. Princeton Seminary comes next with property of $1,655,248. McCormick Seminary, Chicago, follows with property in possession amounting in value to $1,316,301.59.

—J. J. Hill, the Great Northern Railroad magnate, has given a total of half a million dollars to establish a Catholic theological seminary in St. Paul. Two hundred thousand dollars will be devoted to grounds and buildings, and the remaining $300,000 will be set aside as an endowment fund. The institution is to be under the direction of Archbishop Ireland.

—Eight women attended the School of Law of Boston University last year. New and better quarters are now in preparation for them.

—McGill University, Montreal, has received $250,000 from Sir Donald Smith to establish a woman's branch.

—A Chair of Music has been established at Yale College by the gift of $20,000 from Mrs. Ellen Battell Eldridge. Dr. Gustave I. Stoeckel, who came to the college about the same time with President Dwight, fills the professorship.

—The trustees of Dickinson College have, through the munificence of a number of Philadelphians, established the "Chair of the English Bible," and elected Prof. A. W. Rogers, of Philadelphia, to fill it. It is to be hoped that such a chair may soon be established in every institution of learning in the country.

—Sam Small, speaking of his lately founded Utah University, at Ogden, says: "Garfield was right when he said, 'A log cabin with pine benches would be a university with Mark Hopkins as its president.' The great Berlin University, with its 6,000 students attending annually from all parts of the globe, has an endowment of only $750,000. The Mormons do not like our enterprise. They look upon a Methodist university in Ogden with the same enmity that they have toward the United States garrison at Fort Douglas or Salt Lake City. They regard both as equal menaces to their church supremacy and political power."

—Dr. Merrill E. Gates, president of Rutgers, having accepted the presidency of Amherst College, his resignation will take effect on September 30, and he will become president of Amherst on October 1. He will occupy the chair of moral philosophy there, with the lectureship on literature. Dr. T. S. Doolittle, the senior professor at Rutgers, will fill the office of president until a successor to Dr. Gates is appointed.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. THOMAS H. STOCKTON, D.D.:—Religion is as open as the sky and bright as the sun. As a man, an American, and a Christian, I love true manhood, true Americanism and true Christianity too well to approve of secret institutions of any kind.

L. L. HAMLINE, Bishop M. E. church, in his diary, 1848: "North Ohio Conference has progressed very rapidly till this time, but Masonry and Odd-fellowship have arrested us." At another time: "I have enjoyed and suffered much during its session. Masonry and Odd-fellowship, a bane in the midst of us, have done us much evil."—Life, pp. 323, 4.

A. M. MILLIGAN, D.D.:—Thus I have shown that Masonic oaths and obligations are not obligatory; that God has no part in them; that they are a profanation of his ordinance of the oath, and a usurpation of the prerogative of government under the wrath of an insulted God and the ban of outraged society: a great sin to make them but no sin to break them.

REV. J. P. LYTLE, D D.:—We could fill a volume with extracts of the same tenor, showing, as these have shown, that Freemasonry is a distinct and positive religion with a promise of salvation; yet rejecting and denying the Lord Jesus; a religion which claims to have borrowed its principles and rites from those heathen institutions so abhorrent to God and corrupting to men.

REV. JOSHUA BRADLEY, a renouncing Mason:—A lying spirit is abroad, and speaks through all Masonic presses, and this spirit influences all who hate the truth, and will make them wax worse and worse, till sudden destruction shall overwhelm those workers of iniquity, to the astonishment of every beholder. Then Masonry will rise no more to trouble Zion, and spread delusion and death amid civilized nations.

C. B. WARD, missionary in India:—When men get saved out here they get out of the lodge of necessity. We are personally acquainted with a barrister, a doctor, a locomotive fireman, a station-master on a railway, a principal of a high school, a commissary officer, a military officer, and others who when saved at once quit the lodge for Christ's sake without any one saying much to them. The evil of the institution is too apparent to need pointing out in India.

JOSEPH S. CHRISTMAS, Pastor Bowery Presbyterian church, New York, 1830:—If these remarks should meet the eye of any follower of the Redeemer who still worships at the altar of Masonry, I beg him once more to consider whether, imposed on by the mock solemnities of the lodge and the pompous pretensions of the craft, he is not really attempting to effect a concord between Christ and Belial; and whether he does not owe it to the souls of Masons, to the honor of the church of Christ, and to the good of mankind, to come out and be separate.

DRS LEONARD WOODS, EBENEZER PORTER AND THOMAS H. SKINNER, Professors at Andover to the Massachusetts Legislature:—Praying for a full investigation into the nature, language, ceremonies, and form of rehearsing extra-judicial oaths in Masonic bodies; and if found to be such as the Memorialists describe them, that a law may be passed prohibiting the future administration of Masonic, and such other extra-judicial oaths, as tend to weaken the sanctions of civil oaths in courts of justice; and pray also for the repeal of the charter granted by this Commonwealth to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts.

REV. MOSES THATCHER:—Our Saviour declared to the Jewish high priest, "I spake openly to the world; and in secret have I said nothing." What now would be thought of the church if she should "tyle" her doors, impose obligations in secret, and place a perpetual seal upon the lips of her members? Would it any longer be believed that her sole object is to promote the religion of the Gospel? Now if the church, which is the purest body on earth, could not and would not be trusted as a secret society, who can blame conscientious and judicious men for drawing the conclusion that any secret society, of whatever description, is altogether unnecessary and cannot exist without becoming an object of suspicion, if not an engine of wickedness.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

A frightful accident occurred at 7:15 o'clock Sunday night at the Kedzie avenue crossing of the Burlington Road. At that hour, when an Illinois Central excursion train of twelve cars was standing at the crossing awaiting the raising of a freight blockade, the Downer's Grove express train crashed into the rear of the excursion train, telescoping two cars and causing the loss of five and possibly seven lives. The excursion was composed of German Lutherans.

The National Columbian Commission elected Col. George R. Davis Director General yesterday on the first ballot.

COUNTRY.

Mr. George Westinghouse, Jr., of Pittsburg, is said to be perfecting an arrangement with Mr. George M. Pullman whereby the Pullman company and the Westinghouse company will jointly manufacture electric street cars.

James Matthews, aged 10 years, died at Union Hill, N. J., Friday, from nicotine poisoning. The boy was an inveterate smoker of cigarettes.

For keeping open Sunday at Cincinnati, Herman Reisinninger, saloon-keeper, was sentenced Monday to $25 fine and ten days in the work-house. Although hundreds have violated the law, he is the only one to suffer the penalty—principally because he had neglected to employ an attorney.

People leaving the Park Theater, at New York, Monday night, were horrified at seeing Lineman Kopp meet his death on an electric light pole, near the theater entrance. They had just witnessed a roaring farce, and reached the street in time to be spectators of a ghastly tragedy.

Reports of a cyclone near Manning, Iowa, Thursday evening, were confirmed Friday. William Ferry and child were killed and a number injured. The loss of property will amount to several thousand dollars.

The Upper House of the Oklahoma Legislature Tuesday passed a bill locating the permanent territorial capitol at Oklahoma City.

A collision between freight trains was caused on the Pennsylvania railroad near Tannery Creek, N. J., Tuesday, by a flagman, who had been sent back to stop a train, falling asleep on the track. He was run over and killed.

A passenger train on the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas road was wrecked by a misplaced switch at Vicksburg, Miss., Wednesday, and the engineer and fireman were killed. A freight train was derailed at Wyoming, N. Y., by a switch that had been taken apart. Both disasters were the work of train wreckers.

A frightful railroad accident occurred on the Omaha and St. Louis railroad about seven miles from Council Bluffs, Saturday morning. A freight train with eighteen loaded cars broke through a trestle fifty feet high. When the train ran on the east end of the trestle, the engineer discovered that the west end

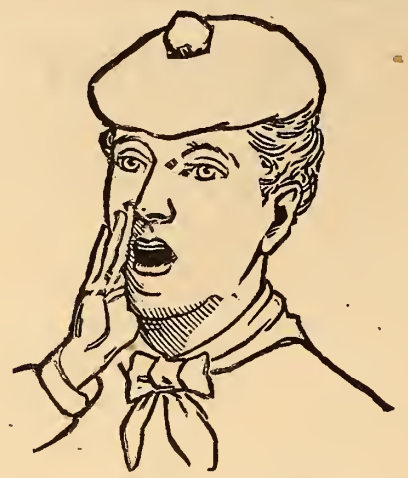
HOME AND HEALTH.

HOW TO PURIFY DRINKING WATER.

It has been known for many years that the addition of a minute amount of alum to a water containing bicarbonate of lime in solution (and most natural waters contain more or less of this substance) will cause the formation of a gelatinous precipitate. This precipitate entangles and collects the suspended matters and germs, forming coagulated or agglomerated masses which are easily removed by simple filtration. Waters containing clay or mud which is so fine that a mechanical filter cannot remove it, when treated with a small amount of alum can be filtered perfectly clear through a coarse filter. The alum thus added is not left in the water, but is removed by the filtration, for its active constituent, the aluminic sulphate, is decomposed and precipitated by the action of the dissolved bicarbonate of lime. This should be well understood, although if a minute amount of alum were left in the water its effects would not be noticeable, and even if present in larger amounts, it would not be at all dangerous.

The method of filtration is simple in the extreme. An oil bottle or any long, narrow-necked bottle serves for the filter. Tie around it a string soaked in kerosene, about half an inch from the bottom, set the string on fire, and hold the bottle bottom up. When the string is burnt out, the bottom of the bottle is thrust into cold water. If properly done, this causes the bottom of the bottle to split off evenly. The rim of the glass should now be burred off with a little round file to remove any sharp edges that may be left. The bottle is then thoroughly cleaned and placed neck downward in a convenient support, as, for instance, through a hole bored in a shelf, or it may be allowed to stand in a wide-mouthed bottle, resting by its shoulders on the rim of the mouth. A small handful of cotton wool is now thoroughly wetted by squeezing it in water, and shreds of it are dropped into the bottle until a layer about two inches deep has been made. The shreds should be dropped in carefully, so as to distribute them evenly, and not to let them pile up in the middle or at the sides. When enough cotton has been dropped in, a cup or two of water is poured in and the bottle gently tapped. This consolidates the mass and finishes the making of the filter-bed.



The amount of alum needed to coagulate the water sufficiently for filtering need not, as a rule, exceed two grains to the gallon, and in many instances may be less, but in certain cases of very dirty waters, such as that of the Mississippi, the amount of alum may be increased to four or even six grains per gallon. The alum is best kept in a solution of such a strength that a teaspoonful of it will contain a grain. To save trouble, the following prescription will enable one to get enough of the solution put up at any apothecary's to last for a considerable time:

Aquæ dist.....oz. 16
M. ft. solutio.

I may add that the expense of this prescription, including the bottle, should not exceed fifteen cents.

The treatment and filtration of the water is best done as follows:

A gallon of water is placed in a clean tin pail and two teaspoonfuls of the alum solution are added. It will save time to make, once for all, scratches on the inside of the pail, showing the height of one, two, or more gallons of water. It is then well stirred and mixed with a clean tin dipper. It is best to keep this pail and dipper for this use alone. They should be kept scrupulously clean, and frequently well scoured with sapolia or a similar kind of soap. After mixing, the water is allowed to stand five or ten minutes, and then poured, by means of the dipper, into the filter. It will run through rapidly if the filter-bed has been properly made, and will be as clear as crystal, and not seldom will form an astonishing contrast with the original water. The first half pint of the water passing through should be rejected. The filtered water may be caught in a pitcher or in any other convenient receptacle. A filter-bed will last a day, but it is not advisable to use it longer. Each day the used filter-bed should be thrown away and a fresh one prepared. The method may, of course, be applied to any of the many filters in use, by simply adding to the water to be filtered one or two grains of alum to the gallon. It will be a poor filter, indeed, that will not filter clear after this addition. —Prof. Austin in Scientific American.

A Call for Pearline

brings the best washing compound in the world, and the original one—all others are imitations. It costs no more than common soap. It does more than soap's work, and half of your own besides. Anything that needs cleaning can be washed with it—without scouring, rubbing and scrubbing, and with absolute safety. Make its acquaintance; millions of women call it their best friend. Every grocer keeps it, because he has constant calls for it.

Beware of imitations. 184 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

FARM NOTES.

SILAGE.

Silage is not a complete food.

Silage is not a substitute for hay.

Silage is a partial substitute for green grass.

Silage may be made an efficient ally of or a good substitute for soiling crops.

Some who keep cattle up in summer say that silage is even more valuable in summer than in winter.

Silage may be fed profitably wherever hay or grass can be. Properly mixed with grain and hay, silage will increase the quantity and improve the quality of milk during the winter or during summer draughts, and is good for breeding cows.

Forty-five pounds of corn silage, or twenty pounds of clover silage and twenty-five of corn, mixed with bran, oats, and corn meal and a little good hay, will prove satisfactory to all concerned. The amount should vary with cow and season.

All forage and grain crops may be preserved in the silo. The silo adds very materially to the palatableness, digestibility and nutritiousness of many articles of food and detracts from none.—N. Y. Witness.

IMPROVING WORN-OUT LAND.

T. B. Terry, of the Ohio Farmer, after bringing an ordinary farm up to a high state of productiveness, says: "We worked to great disadvantage at first from lack of practical experience. But I could take now any originally good land in this vicinity and bring it up within five years, and the increased crops during that time would pay all the cost. Tiles (where needed), tillage, and clover would be the chief renovators, with, of course, a careful saving of the manure from what clover was taken off, to be returned where it would do the most good." Terry's land has been enriched by a liberal top dressing of brains.

KEEP THE STOCK IN CONDITION.

The farmers in sections where the drought was severest were compelled in many instances to cut up their growing corn to keep their cattle in full flesh and strength. This is a wise thing to do, for it is very poor policy to allow stock to run down and go into winter in a "spring-poor" condition. They should be kept up at any cost, and the winter should find them hale and vigorous, with plenty of fat to resist the blasts. The present prospect is that the pastures will be revived and there will be an abundance of fall feed.

A MONSTER ROSE BUSH.

The trunk of a rose bush which is in full bloom at Ventura, Cal., is three feet in circumference at the ground. The first branch, which is thrown out at a height of about four feet from the ground, is twenty-one inches in circumference. Wagon loads of vines (it is of the climbing variety) are clipped from it annually, yet it covers an area of 1,200 square feet. It was planted in 1876. Within another fourteen years, if nothing happens to it, it will have outstripped the gigantic rose tree at Cologne, which has had over three hundred years to grow in.

We learn from an exchange that a gentleman who bought largely of Annapolis Valley apples last season found some curiosities in some of the barrels marked No. 1. Among other things he mentioned one piece of trace six feet long, one clevis without bolt (he wants the bolt put in next time), one piece of old buffalo robe, two sheep skins, one old curry comb, one old horse brush, with divers and sundry other articles too numerous to mention. It is also stated that he has all these hung up on the wall of his wareroom. "The apple-packer" should beware. As the packing season approaches he should endeavor to lay in a store of grace for that time of temptation. It will never do to mix such articles as are mentioned above with apples, or the patient consumer will in time lose his taste for that fruit.—Ex.

Convincing Evidence

That Ayer's Sarsaparilla cures Rheumatism and kindred complaints is abundant. This medicine eradicates from the blood all trace of the disease, and so invigorates the system that a perfect restoration to health is inevitable.

"In Oakland, La., 22 years ago, I had been sick a year and a half with sciatic rheumatism. The extreme pains that I suffered wasted my flesh to the bone, and my strength and vitality were well nigh exhausted. My skin was yellow and rough, showing a bad state of the blood, and it is more than likely that blood poison existed, as I have taken large quantities of mercury. After the sciatica was in a measure under control, I was put under treatment to cleanse the blood and give me strength. This was continued several weeks, but to no purpose. My physician then suggested the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and it is to this medicine I owe my restoration to health. From actual experience in the use of various blood-purifiers, I am confident that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has no equal."—J. W. Pickle, Farmerville, La.

"I have known Mr. J. W. Pickle for many years, and consider him a truthful man."—R. B. Dawkins, Mayor of Farmerville, La.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla —FOR— Rheumatism.

"During the past year my joints, which had become stiff and sore, caused me great pain, especially at the close of a day's work. At times my fingers were so lame I was unable to hold a needle, while the pain at night prevented my sleeping. I suffered also from nervous chills and a want of appetite. I tried outward applications and took remedies prescribed by my doctor; but all to no purpose. A short time ago my son-in-law, Wm. Woods, of Hollis, N. H., was cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla of an inflammatory disease of the eyes, and seeing him so much benefited, I thought I would try this medicine for my own trouble. The result is a complete cure of the pains, stiffness, and swelling from which I suffered so much. The Sarsaparilla has had a good effect on my appetite and nerves, so that I have better strength and no more chills."—Eliza Halvorson, Nashua, N. H.

"After being many years afflicted with rheumatism, I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla with great success."—J. B. Bridge, Boston, Mass.

BUSINESS.

ONE IN TEN.

Many friends of the Cynosure are proving themselves worthy of a good cause by their responses to our request for names of good people, who ought to be constant readers of this paper. We wish to cheer them in this work, and urge them to do even more and especially to pray more. Pray for a blessing upon every name that is written. A single postal card will hold many names—ten at least. So now if prayer and labor go faithfully and honestly together we ought to expect confidently, that at least one in ten of these names should soon come to our list as a permanent subscriber. The proportion would probably be greater, but we will say one in ten. God bless this work. Let us continue it more zealously and with greater faith. Soon thousands of students will be reading the paper. Pray for them, that the Holy Spirit may give a sure lodgment for the truth.

Now that we have a portrait week by week for a time, each number will have an attractive feature for canvassing. Show the first page of the Cynosure to your friends, and you will find an introduction more easy if the face of a third person makes one of the company.

We have a few more of those cheap Webster's Unabridged Dictionaries, which can be supplied as per advertisement in this paper.

The following letter explains itself:

KILLONA, La.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I received my Dictionary and was well pleased with it. I tell you it is a monster. So being so well pleased, I thought that I would drop you a few lines. It appears to me more a gift than a purchase. Yours,

G. B. DUNCAN.

The Labor Conference at New South Wales, Monday, adopted a proposal to call out immediately all the shearers, wool-shed laborers, and carriers. The conference instructed the various strike committees to order all the members of the labor union to prepare for a general strike. It is probable that all affiliated trades will be called out. This will affect 80,000 men.

The slavery proclamation was signed by the German commanders of the respective stations in East Africa. Brokers' houses are now full of slaves, having been established under German license. Spanish soldiers were building a fortress outside of the town and left in the fort a number of rifles. Aug. 8 natives overpowered the guard, seized the guns, and attacked the town. Thirty-two Spaniards were killed. Several Spanish men-of-war were sent from Manilla to quell the disturbance.

Great excitement has been caused at Cape Town by the arrival of a Portuguese steamer loaded with kidnapped natives from Mozambique en route to the west coast. The tribunal decided that it was unable to interfere with the steamer, but fourteen natives who, after a desperate attempt, succeeded in escaping from the steamer, were declared free, and the tribunal refused to assist in recapturing them.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—U. S. Government Report, Aug. 17, 1889.

Queer world! Queer people! Here are men and women by thousands suffering from all sorts of diseases, bearing all manners of pain, spending their all on physicians and "getting no better, but rather worse," when right at hand there's a remedy which says it can help them because it's helped thousands like them. "Another patent-medicine advertisement" you say. Yes—but not of the ordinary sort. The medicine is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and it's different from the ordinary nostrums in this:—

It does what it claims to do, or it costs you nothing!

The way is this: You pay your druggist $1.00 for a bottle. You read the directions, and you follow them. You get better, or you don't. If you do, you buy another bottle, and perhaps another. If you don't get better, you get your money back. And the queer thing is that so many people are willing to be sick when the remedy's so near at hand.

If our women readers could only understand what a convenience, economy and thorough cleanser "Pyle's Pearline" is, they would never use anything else. It is pure and free from any injurious ingredient. It is economical because only the requisite quantity is used at a time. While soap may slip from the fingers and be lost in the water to dissolve, Pearline is used only in the quantities required. It is better adapted for cleansing around the house than any known article. It is more convenient than anything ever discovered, and it is as suitable for the most delicate lace or the finest linen as for the dirtiest horse-blanket, and it will make either as "clean as a whistle" in short order. All grocers sell it.

I highly recommend Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic to anybody that has suffered from headache as my son did for 5 years, because 2 bottles of the medicine cured him.

What a Clergyman Says:

Morrisonville, Christ. Co., Ill., Sept., 1887.
Within the last six years I have observed the excellent effect of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic. It cured a boy named Mehon, who was so helpless that he had to be fed like a baby; he hid himself when he saw strangers, laughed and cried for half an hour. He was considered by physicians a maniac and hopeless case; but is now working on a railroad. Another case was Minnie Falls; she had St. Vitus' Dance; her legs and arms were so uncontrollable that she scratched holes in her dresses in a few days. 8 bottles of the Tonic cured her entirely. Another such case, which many physicians tried to cure without success, was cured by only two bottles. These and other cases convince me that the Tonic is the best remedy for epilepsy and other nervous troubles. It would be a blessing for all sufferers to know of it. A. TEPPE, Pastor.

THE COLLEGE FRATERNITIES have a friendly word from Miss Willard this week. It is, we think, better than they deserve, to have the approval from one whose word has such influence with millions of good women,—our mothers, wives and sisters. We are not without good hope, however, that Miss Willard will in the end agree with Joseph Cook and Dr. Goodwin, and Horace Mann, and—we say it humbly— the Cynosure, that if such societies in this country have to be secret, we can better do without them.

We shall look in our next number for the excellent argument of the venerable Dr. A. A. Smith, a man beloved by the many churches of the Evangelical Association, and for many years president of Northwestern College at Naperville, near this city. We shall also have a portrait of a former eminent professor of Harvard.

Everybody will read the letter from Bro. Johnston with interest,—and a prayer also for God's blessing on his work for the unreached Soudan over against Sierre Leone. In a recent letter to the Wesleyan Methodist, Bro. Johnston writes pathetically of the three young missionaries who died not long since in Freetown on their way to this interior region. They had come to Africa trusting God to care for them and open their way, and when attacked with the fever refused to use the ordinary remedies, praying that God would heal them. Three died, but the others rapidly recovered, when they were persuaded that it wasjust as much a prayer of faith to ask God to bless the remedies as to heal without them.

The sudden death of Rev. Dr. W. W. Everts in this city on Thursday last removed from earth a man who has been eminent in good works. In the early religious history of Chicago he was one of the most powerful factors. He came here in 1859 as pastor of the First Baptist church, and except a few years spent with Eastern churches he has been here ever since, a man esteemed and beloved, a Nestor among the Baptist pastors. Of late years he has labored earnestly in the Sabbath cause, writing a noble book on the subject, and speaking often of late as president of the State Sabbath Association. No one who heard his remarks and prayer at our notable conference last April will forget his earnestness. Though his opinion was well known privately, that occasion was, we believe, his first public testimony against secret societies in this city.

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Secretary of the Treasury Windom takes a business-like, sensible view of the petty quarrels so often stirred up in the Government printing office by the secret unions. Some girls were lately set to feed presses in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving. The union men objected to working with these girls,—and they were probably good-looking girls, too! So strong is a lodge oath! A "Master-workman" of their order joined their protest and forbade them to work in such company. On hearing of it Mr. Windom cut short the matter by sending Moore adrift in a hurry.

Mr. Wallace Thornton, a college graduate, has been teaching in the Roman parochial schools of New York. He is a teacher of some reputation, for the Independent requested his opinion for a symposium published September 4, on public education, and parochial schools especially. Mr. Thornton frankly says that these schools are deficient, have "an utter lack of grading and system." The head of each school introduces whatever studies he pleases; and it is an open question whether the Romanist schools have thoroughly qualified teachers. The Catholic Review of the 20th, rebukes Mr. Thornton severely, and closes with an outburst of priestly anger, saying, "Wherever he lives Catholics should mark him as a renegade."

When the New York Central strike was hottest, Powderly and his fellow Knights were very free with the name of Chauncey M. Depew, the president of the road. If he were home from Europe he would set aside the martinets of the Vanderbilt family and decide for the "workingmen." His appeals to the public assumed that Mr. Depew's magical word would settle the case most happily. But in a few days when he did return and did speak, Mr. Powderly's honey was turned to gall, and his speeches betrayed him as the child of Jesuitry. The Catholic Review, comforting the son of the church, says this of his puerile denunciation: "Mr. Powderly's description of Chauncey Depew is not only amusing but correct. 'Back-number Depew,' he entitled him in allusion to the fact that the orator would not interfere with the Central strike since it was in Mr. Webb's hands. In more senses than one Mr. Depew is emphatically a back-number, just far enough back to be useless at present, and not ancient enough to be valuable for rarity's sake."

The political discussions in the South are beginning to call out the latent abhorrence of secret methods in politics; and, in a general way, to arouse a protest against all underhand schemes and lodge methods, however applied. The following is from the address of Dr. David C. Kelly, Prohibition candidate for Governor of Tennessee, as reported in the Chattanooga Times:

"I am irreconcilably opposed to any oath-bound, secret, star-chamber organization, such as the Farmers' Alliance acknowledges itself to be, coming into control of the affairs of this State. Any organization that excludes from membership, or from any knowledge of its internal affairs, a large portion of the best citizens of this State, has no right to demand that it be entrusted with the government of those citizens. The affairs of government and the motives and principles that are the mainspring behind them, should be open and above board, free to the inspection of everybody."

The Farmers' Alliance and the Democratic party have united on a candidate for Governor in that State. But the great mass of the people, while in sympathy with the farmers, do not propose to commit their interests to any secret cabal, however worthy may be its professed object. It was a great mistake in the farmers, who in an open field, and by open methods would have secured the moral and political support of the great mass of the people of the South, to have gone into a secret alliance. Many joined it with the assurance that it was non-political. Like the Know-Nothing movement, when the people discover its true character, they will arise and destroy it because of its unrighteous methods.

THE EXCEPTIONAL ALPHA PHI.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL AND WORLD'S W. C. T. U.

My whole record is against secretism. I was informed early in my active life, and with a critical air, by a cultivated friend, "You are nothing if not frank." I am quite confident this trait has grown upon me rather than been curbed by events.

It was among my first perceptions of the Gospel that love is the only force in the universe that conquers, and that light is the emblem of the Divine Being. These two L's go together. In our Heavenly Father is no darkness at all. The light of the world is Jesus. There is no night in that country to which we are going. The nearer we can, in character and conduct, show forth these two guiding qualities of God, the more we help this world and the more we get into sympathy with him and readiness for that higher estate on which we hope ere long to enter.

I have never belonged to a secret society except that pioneer among Greek letter sororities, the Alpha Phi. When I agreed to join I was not clearly aware that it had a secret aspect. This some may find it difficult to believe; but a group of very likely young ladies took me in hand when I had concluded an address before the Women's Congress in Syracuse, N. Y., about the year 1877, saying that they wished me to join their literary society, and they named certain professors in a well known university who were valued friends of mine, saying that these gentlemen very much desired that I should give my influence to the movement. I am always ready to do anything I can to help women, and I particularly like them to branch out in new directions that are good.

These young women said, "We have a ceremony by means of which you become a member."

"But," I said, "I am to leave so soon; how can I join?"

They answered, "You have nothing to do but come into the wings of the Opera House here; give us ten minutes, and the initiation will be complete."

So I went laughingly along with them, and they proceeded with what they had to say. As the performance went on, the proverb, "In I am and on I must," was present with me. This, in brief, is the "how" of it.

Before long, I was in that city again, and attended one of the meetings of the society. It was so religious, so womanly, so everything that I like best; and it was so plainly evident to me that their only secret was that they had no secret, that I have maintained my allegiance. This is the sum total of my knowledge of secret societies except a playful movement of very brief duration when I was a school girl. Certainly the one I belong to has had the harm taken out of it. Under my own observation, girls have maintained an enthusiastic fondness for this society throughout their college course, and have developed steadily in all those qualities that are most admirable in women—(or, which is far better, that are most admirable in a human being, for that is the highest and last analysis). I have questioned them carefully as to what goes on in the society, for I am seldom there, being on the wing most of the time; and I know that to understand its methods better would not be to appreciate them less. The most devoted Christian women are among the members of this society. "By their fruits ye shall know them." You may say the young ladies would get all the good they do, and far more, if the society were not secret. I am not prepared to controvert that proposition. Neither am I prepared to accept it. But on the whole I am inclined to make of Alpha Phi an exception among all secret societies that at present have their location on this terrestrial sphere.

I have been criticised for affiliating with the Good Templars, but am prepared to take all the contumely that may come from such an alliance. I have never belonged to the order, but its members have been so large-hearted as to give my name to the lodge in my own town; and when I went to California the material aid of Good Templars there alone enabled me to make the trip. Though they have often asked me, they have been so considerate as never to urge me to join, knowing my position on the question of secretism. They send a fraternal delegate to our National W. C. T. U. convention, and we send one to their meeting. I do not believe there is any harm in them, but, on the contrary, any amount of good. The secret features are constantly growing less prominent; and I would not on any account wound the feelings of that noble band of temperance workers.

My good friends of the Cynosure would think it wise for the W. C. T. U. to disfellowship the Good Templars, because of this feature in their method of organization; but I could never bring myself to contemplate anything of the kind, and am therefore obliged to take the censure of the Cynosure, a paper that I respect, and whose managers from the first have had my heartiest good will in an undertaking which I believe tends toward the better time and the greater light of brotherhood that slowly emerges into the perfect day.

Frances E. Willard.

The W. C. T. U. of Kansas sends out the following showing at once the devilishness of liquor men and the bravery of women:

"A letter has been received at headquarters threatening the lives of the leaders of our organization in this State. It declares that any church, hall or public building in which the W. C. T. U. is allowed to hold its meetings will be blown up with dynamite, and states that 500 men have banded themselves together to forever stop the work of the organization and to see that the State is relieved from our influence.

"In view of these facts we resolve that believing in the God of Israel and his power to protect, we will work assiduously, effectively, earnestly and faithfully until there is not one stone left upon another of any brewery, distillery, saloon, package house or joint in the United States of America, and when this is accomplished we propose to look for new fields of conquest beyond the seas.—Exchange.

FRIENDSHIP ELIMINATES SECRETISM.

OPINION OF A LEADING STUDENT OF NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY.

Mr. Raymond, what is your opionion, as a Christian gentleman, of the effect of the Greek letter fraternities on the intellectual, moral, and spiritual development of the members?

Answer. It would be better if there were no cliques or "sets" or "crowds," either in college or in the great world outside of college. It would be better, it seems to our finite understanding, if humanity were not divided into races and nations—if all mankind were a universal brotherhood, bound together by common ties of fraternity as children of the same Father. When I think of this beautiful picture—I do not call it a dream, for it seems to me it is a fact, in one sense—I feel like condemning unqualifiedly all agencies which tend to separate men. I feel like saying that secret societies, including the college fraternities, are an unmixed evil, in that they do not forward the solidarity of the race, but rather retard its progress. On the other hand, however, we must recognize the fact that there are white men and black men, red men and yellow men; that there are dull men and witty men; that there are Europeans and Africans, Asiatics and Americans. We call patriotism a virtue, though it is nothing more than selfishness on a large scale; we even condone race prejudice, though it is physical and not intellectual in its origin. If it be right for men of the same race or of the same nation to stand together, it must be right for young men of the same tastes and character to stand together in their college life. We all have our bosom friends; it is impossible, hard as we may try, to love all the world equally. If love is God-implanted in the human breast, why try to root it out? But if you do not root out love, then in some form or other fraternities will exist; for a college fraternity exists purely, whatever may be true of other secret societies, on the foundation of mutual friendship and esteem; my experience has shown me that this ideal foundation is the real one; I have yet to know of a chapter, whatever its main characteristic, where the boys were not warm friends and comrades. The secretism is so overbalanced by the friendship that it is scarcely worth mentioning.

FOR CHRIST AND AGAINST HIM.

BY MRS. LAURA S. HAVILAND.

Every son and daughter of our first parents are for anti-Christ until the enlightening influences of the Holy Spirit are accepted. This may seem a sweeping declaration, but no broader than the evangelist John leaves on record, who says of our Lord and Redeemer, "The Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us." He was "the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." "He came unto his own, and his own received him not."

It is cause of deep regret and great sorrow that legions of secret oath-bound societies of our day reject the name of Jesus Christ in addressing a throne of grace. The mother of this legion is Freemasonry, which received a deadly wound in 1826 by the exposure of the first three degrees by William Morgan of Batavia, N. Y. He was afterward cruelly torn from the bosom of his family, and all that life holds dear, and lodged in jail a short time (within half a mile of my old home). For the Masons it was an easy matter to remove him in the darkness of night to the magazine at Fort Niagara; from thence to the river and to drowning! This was acknowledged by one of the men to whom the lot fell to do the demoniac deed!

I know it was a time of very great excitement. Some of my neighbors visited the grief-stricken family, and ministered to their wants; and the sad recital of that agonized, bereaved widow, with her little children, who, wringing her hands in despair, filled with saddest forebodings, yet at times indulged a faint hope that she might yet meet her husband.

"Yet," said she, "what ground have I to hope if Masons carry out those awful death-penalty oaths."

The description of that scene can never be effaced as long as reason sits enthroned. That relentless bitterness she feared was realized. She nevermore in life saw his face. He was sacrificed on the bloody altar of Freemasonry! (Misnamed free, for its freedom is bondage.) They are bound by oaths not known in the highest to the lowest stations in all the civilized world. After Wm. Morgan's abduction, hundreds of Masons seceded and acknowledged the disclosures made by him to be true. They abandoned their lodges, and many gave up their charters. Freemasonry at that day became a loathsome dead body in the eyes of the public. Anti-masons fought in politics. No Mason, unless publicly renouncing could be elected even to the office of path-master.

In 1830 a national convention was held in Philadelphia by Anti-masons, attended by 112 delegates, among whom were Amasa Walker, Wm. H. Seward and Thaddeus Stevens, who issued an able address to the people of the United States, showing the dangerous influence of secret oath-bound societies in a free government, as ours claimed to be. But we see to-day, that the deadly wound received by the exposure of Morgan and many reliable men who followed his example, was not healed sufficiently. They fill the highest positions in nation and States. It has been quite recently estimated that the whole number of that order in the United States and British America is about 580,000. It seems to us, that secret oath-bound societies and the liquor traffic are the monster Siamese twins—an inseparable anti-Christ of to-day. Their deeds of darkness are wrought in secret.. They sow to the wind to reap the whirl-wind, and we know not but the converging may bring upon us the destructive cyclone.

How Christians, ministers of the Gospel of peace and good will to men, can accept the "mark of the beast" in their forehead or hand, when they have received the seal of the Lord Jesus Christ, is a mystery I cannot solve. How they can with open Bible read, "Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths." The Saviour when queried concerning the accusations brought against him by his accusers, replied, "I spake openly to the world, I ever taught in the synagogue, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing."

Does not the candidate forswear himself while taking the death-penalty oath "to ever conceal, and never reveal" whatever lodge business is entrusted to him? In conversing with my dear son, Joseph B. Haviland, on this point, he said he had often thought of that himself, and it had somewhat troubled him.

Then in regard to man-worship—"Worshipful Master," etc., so constantly applied in the Masonic order. When John the Revelator saw and heard in that wonderful enigmatical vision on the Isle of Patmos (Rev. 19: 10): "And I fell at his feet, to worship him. And he said unto me, see thou do it not. I am thy fellow-servant, and of the brethren that have the testimony of Jesus: worship God; for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." Where is the testimony of Jesus in all the Masonic or Odd-fellow rituals? (For they are near of kin.) Among the many wonders John saw was the true church personified in the woman clothed with the sun and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars. And another wonder was represented in the great red dragon that had power to make war with the church and her seed. He gave a mark in the forehead or hand upon his followers. But the families of faithful Israel were sealed each twelve thousand, beside of every nation, tongue and people a great multitude that no man could number, by the angel sent from God. These were not destroyed by the arch enemy. But are these seals kept untarnished from this enemy who is still deceiving, if it were possible, the very elect, and persuading many of the Lord's sealed children to accept the mark of the beast? Will they hold fast the seal, and meet the fire of God's love that consumes this heavy load of wood, hay, and stubble? Yet I believe they meet with a loss, though hoping and praying that the mark will not hide the seal out of sight. Let the brightness of the seal fade the mark entirely beyond recognition. This will be the condition of the sanctified soul who avoids every appearance of evil, by looking steadily to the Author and Finisher of our faith, who declared (Luke 12: 2, 3), "For there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; neither hid that shall not be known. Therefore, whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness, shall be heard in the light, and that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets, shall be proclaimed upon the housetops."

These declarations of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, are to-day being fulfilled. Freemasonry with her legion is brought to light, the three murderers who played to kill Hiram Abiff, Jubela, Jubelo and Jubelum, are no longer secrets with all their concomitants. "He that doeth good cometh to the light that his deeds be manifest." May all men who are tempted to drop themselves into this snare investigate for themselves, is the earnest, sincere prayer of yours and Christ's, LAURA S. HAVILAND.

THE ISOLATION OF THE RACES.

IS IT TO BE DESIRED?

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

In the able and, in some things, excellent address of Dr. E. W. Blyden, at the seventy-first anniversary of the American Colonization Society, he insists on the importance of an entire separation of the African race as a condition of their highest development, and of the impossibility of their obtaining equal rights in America. The remedy, he thinks, is in emigration to Africa.

Without stopping to dwell on the impracticability of the emigration of eight millions of people, even if they desired to go; of the unwisdom of leaving the best labor market in the world and going to the worst; of colonizing a country already full of people; and going from a healthy climate to one where the percentage of deaths of all immigrants is greater than the births; I will reply to the main proposition, Is the isolation of the Negro race calculated to promote its highest development?

Thomas Jefferson thought the Negro race would emigrate. Henry Clay thought they would remain and be absorbed in the white race. The latter, if either, seems the more probable result; for while, in more than seventy years, less than 18,000 colonists have been sent to Liberia, a far greater number have come to us from Africa and the West Indies. Since Jefferson's time our colored population has increased five fold, and now they are American citizens.

The present inhabitants of Europe and their descendants in America are of the Aryan race. In them the world has seen the highest type of civilization, and theirs is the power which rules mankind. Yet for ages the people of the British Isles lived in the grossest barbarism, and the cannibalism that is now practiced in Africa was once common on the banks of the Thames. Egypt, Greece and Italy advanced in civilization because they were on the world's great highways, and were brought in constant and intimate communication with all nations and races, but especially those which had made the most progress. The development of the British Isles began only after the Roman invasion; and nearly two thousand years of intimate intercourse with other nations have brought them to their present development as leaders in civilization and Christianity.

Hindustan, the original home of the Aryans, has until recently remained in isolation and semi-barbarism. The race, neither in India or in Britain, had no inherent capacity for development until brought in contact with others.

Africa, except Egypt and the Barbary States, has always remained isolated. The Great Desert, her malarious coasts, and the absence of harbors, have prevented colonization, and the Negro has made just the same progress as other races under similar circumstances.

Indeed, history teaches nothing more plainly than that no race or people ever emerged from barbarism to civilization except through the intervention of others who had enjoyed superior advantages; nor is there any instance where the entire separation of races by the law of caste did not tend to produce animosities and mutual injuries. The North American Indian is an illustration. For 270 years we have regarded him as an alien and kept him separate. We have made some feeble efforts to teach him our religion, but he has rejected our language and our civilization. Just of late, we begin to see that if we would civilize the Indian we must make him a citizen, a property-holder, and incorporate him in the body politic. In Mexico, where the races have been largely assimilated, the Indian has fared better. The late President Juarez was a full-blooded Indian and an honor to his country and to humanity.

Japan is an illustration of the effects of intercommunication on national development. For ages Japan, like China, was isolated and stagnant. Since her ports were opened to the commerce of the world, she has surpassed all others in the rapidity and beneficence of her development.

Nor would I forget the power of Christianity as an influence on national life. It is the great commercial nations that are Christian, and commerce and Christianity ought to go hand in hand. They are the hope of Africa. On the part of the slave-trader, the bringing of Negroes to America was an unspeakable wrong; but on the part of Divine Providence it was a great good to Africa and her people. At all events the Negro is here to stay, and it is not by separating from his white fellow citizens that either is to be benefited, but by their dwelling together in harmony and mutual helpfulness. Some Negroes will emigrate to Africa. They will be useful there; but they will be but the smallest fraction of the race in America.

Nor will the separation of our colored population into distinct communities be helpful. Experience has shown that such communities, whether in the Carolinas, or on the Mississippi river, make much slower progress in all the elements of civilization than those who live in more intimate relations with their white fellow citizens. Not concentration, but diffusion, should be the rule.

Much impatience has been manifested at what has been thought to be the slow progress of the Negro in America. But his progress, as compared to that of other peoples under similar circumstances, has been wonderfully rapid. It takes centuries, if not ages, to change the essential types of humanity which previous ages have developed. Nevertheless they do change. We are not like the old Britons whom Cæsar found and fought; and if in twenty centuries we have somewhat outstripped our African brother, let us not glory over him, for we had a long start in the race. We may perhaps regard him as our younger brother, but all the more is he entitled to our sympathy and aid.

A NEW COLLEGE AND ITS PRESIDENT.

A few weeks ago the corner-stone of the Methodist University in Ogden, Utah, was laid, Bishop Vincent conducting the services and delivering an address. The Governor of the Territory, Mr. Thomas, was present, and spoke favorably of this new factor in the civilization of Utah. The college, or university, as it is called, will have a large building, costing not less than a half million dollars, with apartments for both boys and girls; laboratory, library, observatory, and residences for the professors. Rev. Samuel Small. D.D., better known as "Sam" Small, lately an evangelist of the Southern Methodist Church, but now in connection with the Northern Methodist Episcopal Church, has been chosen to the presidency of the institution.

All Christian denominations will rejoice in the establishment and success of a Christian university in that part of our country. We fear, however, that a great mistake has been made in the election of Dr. Small to the presidency. If he has been correctly reported in some of his addresses and sermons which we have seen, we must say that we do not regard him a safe instructor of youth.

Rev. M. A. Gault writes to the Christian Statesman that he was present at the great debate at the Beatrice, Nebraska, Assembly, in July, and heard the prohibition question discussed by Messrs. Dickie and Small for prohibition, and Messrs. Rosewater and Webster for license. "Mr. Rosewater," says the correspondent, "argued for wine, because the church uses it in the sacrament, and Freemasonry uses it in the ceremony of laying corner-stones. In reply, Sam Small upheld Freemasonry as of equal sanction and divine authority with the church of Christ."

This is quite as bad as Sam Jones, whom the New York Tribune reports as saying at Round Lake, August 31, "The crucifixion of Jesus was not a vicarious sacrifice to wash away the sins of man, but an exhibition of the love of God, by which he aimed to reclaim men from their sins."

We mistake the temper and spirit of the Methodist church, if it will not promptly repudiate Mr. Jones' view of Christ's vicarious sacrifice. And we also believe, when it comes to understand that Dr. Small regards "Freemasonry as of equal sanction and divine authority with the church of Christ," it will at once require him to vacate the high and responsible position in which he has been placed.

It would be as well to leave the Latter Day Saints with their Mormonism, as to teach them a Christianity which has no more divine sanction than Freemasonry.—United Presbyterian.

DANGEROUS SECRET SOCIETIES.

The New York Independent, commenting on the late New York Central strike and the action of the "Supreme Council of the Federation of Railway Employees" at Terre Haute, Ind., declining to join the Powderly order, says: "This Council is composed of twelve men, who are the head men of four subordinate divisions of the Federation; and who, according to the rules of the Federation, have it in their power to order their entire constituency to enter upon a strike, and to continue it until the strike shall be declared 'off' by the Council. Fortunately for this constituency, for railroads, and for the country, the Council did not choose to exercise this power. The spectacle presented to the American people is that of twelve men called a 'Supreme Council' unknown to the laws of the land, and representing organized labor among the railroad employes belonging to the Federation, who, according to the theory of the Federation, can, by a simple vote, derange and throw into chaos the whole business of railroad travel and transportation throughout the United States. No State legislature has any such power, and even the Congress of the United States does not possess it. This power belongs only to the said Federation; and this Federation has no legal existence or attributes whatever. It is a self-constituted imperium in imperio, more potent to derange the operations of our industrial and commercial system than any legally constituted body, State or Federal, existing in the United States. This is not a very pleasing spectacle for a thoughtful student of human affairs to look upon. It is a volcanic power in the bosom of society that can act with terrible power of evil, and bring confusion and disorder from one end of the land to the other."

The result of a late census in France gives but little over 38,000,000 of inhabitants, and the increase of population, for thirty years past, has been less than in any other country in Europe. French journals and publicists take this matter very much to heart, as the Germans, their great enemies, are increasing rapidly. A law was passed, not long since, to encourage large families. Every seventh child was to be cared for and educated by the State, without expense to his parents; and now M. Fouquier advocates the taxation of bachelors. But he thinks that this negative inducement to holy matrimony ought to be supplemented by an inducement emphatically positive. The father of a family, according to M. Fouquier's project, is to be allowed an additional vote, or at least an additional fraction of a vote, for each additional legitimate son or daughter presented to him by his wife. The State must perish, according to this lively publicists, unless it is firmly grounded upon that equally necessary and equally divine social organism—the family. This may seem absurd to Americans, but the waste of human life, the preponderance of deaths over births, which is true of large cities everywhere, is beginning to be equally marked in the rural districts of France.—Demorest's Monthly.

The rainbow that plays in the adverse sunlight seems for a moment a vast, stable arch that spans the earth and reaches to the clouds. We look again and it is gone. Thus it is with all earthly things.—Dr. Spring.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The public schools of Boston.—The Rev. Mr. Lansing on the labor question.—The Republican "temperance" plank.—A dragon of prehistoric New England.—The New Hampshire Convention.

A recent order for an investigation of the public schools of Boston is now stirring up to renewed energy the friends of unsectarian education, who are very generally of the opinion of Dr. Miner, "that it is the work of the enemy." The makeup of the committee shows that it did not emanate from a friendly source. And he very pertinently asks "why a Catholic should ask an investigation of our school system if he is not willing to submit the parochial school system to public scrutiny." But if 12,000 school children in Boston cannot go to school for want of rooms, as is reported to be the case, the proposed "investigation" might profitably wait, as it is better that these 12,000 children should go to a school where some faults of method prevail than to none at all. The last census report entitles Boston to 95 more licensed barrooms, and she will without doubt have them, but she has built but one schoolhouse since 1886. Why an increase of population with the Hub city should mean more saloons but not more schoolhouses, is one of those perplexing questions continually provoked by such peculiar favors shown to the liquor interest vs morals and education. If only the old parties which back it up would give us a satisfactory answer! The Citizen reports, on reliable information obtained from Mayor Hart himself, that 90 per cent of the money paid from the State Treasury is given to Roman Catholics. No wonder Rome and Rum can control when the former has so large a bulk of the public funds in her own hands.

While there is so much complaint made that ministers preach too entirely on abstract themes, letting alone those matters which practically concern everyday life, there are certainly some shining exceptions. Rev. I. J. Lansing, in his series of sermons on the Labor Question, handles the whole subject from the Christian standpoint. They are continually growing in interest; and his last, on the wages question, ought to have been heard by every capitalist and wage-earner in the land. It is certainly a startling fact that in our free New England we have white slaves,—women and children working in the woolen and cotton mills for from 35 to 75 cents a day. Great advances in civilization always seem to entail—at least as their first result—this practical enslaving of the most helpless of the wage-earning class. Mr. Lansing's sermons are attracting much attention. There is no reason why America should not have her Maurices and Charles Kingsleys. The conditions are fast getting to be the same.

The State Republican temperance plank—if it can be called such—is about as delightfully general and evasive as the temperance utterances of the lodge by which it is so largely controlled. However, if it only means in practical action half it says we should be satisfied; but the experience of many campaigns has convinced prohibitionists just how much its fine talk about "moral agencies," "restrictive legislation," etc., amounts to.

There is a sandstone quarry in Buckland, Conn., which ought to have another Hugh Miller to discover and chronicle its buried secrets. Six years ago the fossil remains of an antedeluvian reptile was found imbedded in the rock, and taken possession of by Prof. Marsh of Yale. A part of it, however, was found to be missing, and unfortunately inquiry came too late, when the piece of sandstone containing the lost portion had been built into a bridge. Another fossil has lately been found of the same species,—a lizard-like creature about eight feet long, with "claw-shaped fingers and toes." It must have been very common once in Connecticut and western Massachusetts, where many of the rocks bear traces of its footprints. Dragons are generally set down as fabulous creatures, yet geology shows that dragons ranged our earth once, and the old medieval legend was only a fast-fading reminiscence from days when these hideous creatures really existed. Will there come a time when all the wrongs and abuses which now afflict mankind shall be remembered only in the same dim wise, as the moral and spiritual dragons of a far remote epoch?

My next letter (D. V.) will give an account of the New Hampshire Convention, for which I start to-morrow. We have reason to expect a delightful meeting. Gilford Village will always be associated with the anti-secret reform in New Hampshire, as its starting point under Bro. Kimball. Let us hope and pray that a wave of spiritual enthusiasm may flow out from it that will reach all New England.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 24, 1890.

The Senate came very near this week to taking a vote upon the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation and sale of alcoholic liquors, but unfortunately before it was done the time set aside for the consideration of measures on the calendar had expired. There was not a quorum present at the time, so that the resolution could not have been disposed of, even if a vote had been reached, but it would have served a useful purpose by putting those Senators present on record for or against the resolution, and for that reason I regret that it was not voted upon.

The war on the lotteries is not to be confined to shutting them out of the mails, as it is thought the new law will effectually do, but is to be pushed in other directions. It is believed that under the Inter-State Commerce law the Government has the power to prevent express companies from transporting lottery tickets or funds belonging to lottery companies across State lines, and that the same law can be used to prevent banks or bankers from becoming agents for lotteries. The matter is now being carefully studied, and if the present laws do not fully cover these cases a new one will be prepared and rushed through Congress during the short session. Both Mr. Harrison and Mr. Wanamaker are deserving of praise for their zeal and perseverance in pushing the anti-lottery bill through Congress; and in praising them I do not wish to detract one iota from the credit due many members of Congress for the same thing, but it was the official influence of the President and his Postmaster-General that made it possible to obtain the consent of the political leaders to the bill being acted upon, and without their consent it would still be on the Congressional calendar.

The church people of Washington, as a body, are taking a more active part in temperance work than ever before, and quite a number of our congregations willingly give the use of their churches for the purpose of holding temperance meetings. This is just as it should be. Christianity and temperance should always go hand-in-hand, and co-operate for the moral reformation of the world, and by thus opening the churches many meetings are held and much good accomplished that the lack of means to hire halls would otherwise prevent.

Washington is rapidly becoming a city of universities. The latest is by colored people for colored people. Its projectors tell me that their prospects for raising the necessary money to erect a building are promising.

A novel religious service was held here Sunday afternoon. Rev. William Griffiths, a native of Wales, preached a sermon from the text, "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace," in the Welsh language. It was surprising to discover that there are enough native Welsh people living in Washington to form a good sized congregation, and it was a great satisfaction to them to hear a sermon in their own language.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrison and family returned to Washington to-day, and went direct to the White House, despite its being in a state of chaos on account of its annual house-cleaning and painting. The house of Postmaster-General Wanamaker was placed at their disposal until the White House was ready for their occupancy, but they declined it.

The House of Representatives, after two weeks of worse than idleness on account of the lack of a quorum, yesterday got down to legislative work again, but how long a quorum can be kept here is problematical.

The temperance people here are disappointed because Congress has failed to take action on the high liquor license bill for the District of Columbia, which means that we shall have to continue another year under the present inadequate law. If it was only the license feature that would be affected, the temperance folk would not worry, but the bill contains many restrictive features that are sadly lacking in the present law, and for that reason they would very much like to see it become a law. The liquor dealers are unanimous in their opposition to the bill, and some people say that it is their influence which has prevented Congressional action upon it. If this be true it is not creditable to Congress. *

AMONGST THE THUGS.

Sonora, Cal.

Editor Cynosure:—I thought I had got out of reach of the Thugs when I left Central India; but I find some of the worshipers of the goddess Kahli in California. I came to this town of Sonora some weeks since, intending to spend some weeks here before entering upon my work as agent of the N. C. A. for the Pacific Coast. This is one of the oldest mining towns in California, situated in Tuolumne county, well up in the Sierras, being within about forty miles of the summit. It was once the home of "Mark Twain." The mines here, and in most places in this section, yield but little free gold; it is mostly in the form of sulphates.

The California legislator being, as a rule, a low specimen of genus homo, California has no Sabbath law, consequently these mining towns, with a few exceptions, have no Sabbath. The population of Sonora is about 1,500, of which about ninety are Freemasons and 130 Odd-fellows. A large proportion of the people being Catholic, nearly all the able-bodied male Americans must belong to one or the other of these organizations. Besides these there are a number of minor organizations. There are forty saloons, and about half as many female secret society lodging houses. Lodges have always created a demand for saloons, and saloons for brothels. The miners are paid off on Saturdays, and the nights following are made hideous by the drunken debauches and loud revelry of both men and women.

One redeeming feature of the local administration in these mining towns is the ringing of the "curfew bell" at 9 o'clock every night to drive the boys and girls in doors. Most of these mountain towns are worse than this; and in some of them, every one who dares to identify himself or herself with any church is made a subject of persecution. But in all these places the male population is conspicuous by its absence from church services. The lodge is evidently considered a substitute for the church, and by many the lodge religion is considered the better of the two. And this is not confined to those who are exclusive lodgites, but even many professing Christians who belong to the lodges, put their lodge relations above their relations to Christ.

At the request of the pastor of the M. E. church here, I went to a camp meeting of the Church South, where they were in need of some ministerial help. The presiding elder, who was present when I went, but left soon after, a man some seventy years of age, wore a Masonic charm to his watch; and most of the male adult attendants were secret order men.

I preached three times and lectured once on India, apparently to the satisfaction of nearly everybody. But upon my announcement to some of the preachers that I was the agent of the N. C. A., a change came over the whole encampment; and, ultimately, I was requested to leave the charmed circle of Masonic, Odd-fellow and Good Templar saints. Coming as it did from a church with which I had some not over pleasant experience in the South, I was not much surprised to find that I was in one of the "Groves of Baal." But I was surprised when I found all the M. E. church places of worship "tyled" on a peremptory demand from the secrecy members upon the pastor of circuit; and the reason given was that they had learned what my future work was to be.

My next move was to secure the use of a hall in which to lecture, and announce by handbills a lecture on Freemasonry, to be delivered here last Monday evening week, the 8th inst. I did not intend to commence my work here, but, after the treatment which I had received, thought I ought to try to get a hearing. The announcement roused the ire of the Masonic "saints," who tore down my notices, and circulated the report throughout the town that I was to be mobbed, and provided some rowdies with rotten eggs to be used in defence of Masonry. A rotten institution must use rotten arguments. They intimidated the proprietor of the hall, so that he was afraid to light it up; and though nearly the whole community is "cable-towed" and "hoodwinked" by them, they scared out the few who would have come.

The only thing I could do was to sow the residence portion of the town with Anti-masonic tracts. I encountered the "Worshipful Master" and several other prominent members of the Masonic order, all of whom stoutly declared that, having never been a Mason, I knew nothing about the order. But why were they so afraid to have me try to tell something? M. H. Nichols.

PHILADELPHIA MEETINGS AND RELICS.

Philadelphia, Sept. 24, 1890.

Dear Cynosure:—I have always found pleasure in visiting the "City of Brotherly Love." Not the least of its attractions is the home of Edwin Sellew and wife. The rest of their quiet and cheerful home is always most acceptable after conflicts with the unfriendly world.

Though my visit has been limited, I have had the pleasure of renewing acquaintance with many who are laboring side-by-side with us for Christ and his kingdom. What a grand harvest home it will be when the sheaves are all garnered in, and we are permitted to enjoy the companionship of the blest through eternity! How the trials of life will sink into insignificance when "compared with the glory to be revealed!"

My first meeting, Sabbath afternoon, was all I could have expected. Rev. Holm had done all in his power to give me a good hearing. The two hundred or more inquiring faces that greeted me could not be other than an inspiration. The truth I had to bring was gladly received, as was shown by the good collection kindly given at the close of my address. The ready response in subscribing for the Cynosure of several of the young men of this congregation, is also very encouraging.

On Sabbath evening I addressed a goodly number who assembled in a Reformed Presbyterian church, of which Rev. J. H. Leiper is pastor. Bro. Leiper is toiling in a neglected and unfriendly soil, but through the blessing of God some souls have been gathered in. Our acquaintance was made in Ohio, when Bro. Leiper was a district secretary of the National Reform Association. Though having a multitude of papers, he said he could not refuse taking the Cynosure, from me. Wish I had the same influence on all I meet who should take it. I arranged with Bro. Leiper, and Frank Haas, whose mission I addressed last year, (with good results, as I thought) to address his people again on Monday evening. I was disappointed on reaching the meeting-house at the time arranged to find no notice of my meeting had been given, and that Bro. Haas had been called to attend camp meeting in the country. The man who said he had been left in charge of the mission meetings, in learning of my mission, said, "That's just what we don't want here!" He spoke hastily, and doubtless thoughtlessly. I have reason to believe a majority of the mission attendants would welcome another lecture. A prayer meeting was held from 8:15 to 10 o'clock, which I attended and distributed a number of tracts and circulars. Many expressed regret that my lecture had not been arranged.

I go, D. V., in the morning to Baltimore, where I am to address a meeting of the Y. M. C. A. of the Missouri Synod Lutherans, as already announced.

When passing through Independence Hall I saw, among other relics, what is said to be George Washington's Masonic apron, and above it hangs a letter professedly written by himself, addressed as follows: "Fellow Citizens and Brothers of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania." The closing sentence of this letter, a copy of which I took, reads:

> "Permit me to reciprocate your prayers for my temporal happiness, and to supplicate that we may all meet thereafter in that eternal temple, whose builder is the great Architect of the Universe."

If this letter is as it professes, it manifests a deplorable weakness. If, as I am compelled to believe, it is a forgery, of a system whose love of darkness manifests that its deeds are evil if possible, it should be exposed at once, that unwary young men be not entrapped thereby.

This letter bears the date of Dec. 27th, 1796, the very year of that farewell address which so clearly condemns the lodge which is thus complimented. Who is willing to say that Gen. Washington changed his mind in such a short period as could have intervened between these deliverances! May God preserve us from the wiles of the devil!

Baltimore, Sept. 26.—My lecture here given under the auspices of Immanuel Young Men's Association last evening was attended by a goodly number of young ladies and gentlemen. Card invitations were sent those especially desired to be present. Rev. Steimke, pastor of Immanuel Lutheran Church, conducted the devotional exercises. We were also favored with the presence of pastors Dallman and Schall of other Lutheran churches.

I laid special stress on the need of taking care not to start in the ways of darkness. The little seemingly harmless secret societies should be avoided. The devil in fishing for men's souls, like a sharp fisherman covers his hook with attractive bait. I was given the undivided attention of the audience.

The society voted to subscribe for the Cynosure, and in addition to a collection of $5.60, gave many words of encouragement, and a request to address them again later in the season. It is indeed a pleasure to think that, though in a small degree, we are helping mould the lives of the coming men and women. These young people, so full of life and enthusiasm, may be leaders in reform in the future. W. B. Stoddard.

—Albert Pike, Sovereign Grand Commander of the Supreme Council of the Sovereign Grand Inspectors General thirty-third degree Scottish Rite, says in his book, "Morals and Dogma," page 819: "The Blue degrees are but the outer court of the Temple. Part of the symbols are displayed there to the initiate, but he is intentionally misled by false interpretations. It is not intended that he shall understand them, but it is intended that he shall imagine that he does understand them. Their true explanation is reserved for the princes of Masonry."

Are you, kind reader, making those 50,000 subscribers a matter of prayer? If you pray well, you will think well, plan well, and work well for such a list.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A LETTER FROM AFRICA.

Dear Cynosure:—Your weekly visits come to us like a letter from the anti-secrecy friends at home, and though I have nothing to tell about in your special line, I will send a communication from this far-off part of the Lord's vineyard, hoping it may in turn be of interest to some of your readers. But before beginning with African matters, I wish to thank the N. C. A. for providing literature for distribution in foreign fields, and hope if the fund for this purpose has not been exhausted a due portion will find its way to this field.

The month of August is said to be pre-eminently the rainy month of the year here, hence just now rains are of more common occurrence than anything else. We have been taking some note of the proportion of time that it rains and have found so far for this month that it rains about seven hours out of every twelve of daytime. No observations at night. Much of the time the fall of water is light, only averaging about 1¼ inches per day. During a period of three weeks the sun has shone about nine hours in all.

It will be recognized at once that this must affect the temperature to a considerable degree. The thermometer rarely ever ascends above 80°. We probably have an average noonday temperature of 80°. Indeed, our hearts go out in sympathy for our scorched friends at home, sweltering under the burning sun that sends the thermometer above 100° so frequently. Latitude does not always determine temperature. Here, under a vertical sun only 8° north of the equator, August temperature is 80°, while, according to a recent letter, people in North Dakota, half way to the north pole, are enduring a temperature of 105° or more. Come to Africa and spend the hot season!

With the beginning of the rains came the fever, and few white residents escaped an attack. Now that the rains are more frequent it is more healthy. The Lord brought us through our first tilt with climatic fever very nicely. Some of us only had fever one day. In the midst of this time of fever, and while Mrs. J. was down with it, our missionary band was reinforced by the arrival of another missionary—a small one. The Lord was with us, and mother and baby girl are getting along as nicely as could be expected if they were in the home land.

Our hearts are full of cheer in the work the Lord has given us to do here, and we think we see tokens of encouragement about us. There has been as yet no gathering of fruit in the church work, but the people receive the plain, unvarnished Gospel message with close attention; and while some seem indifferent there are many who seem really hungering after the genuine salvation of God. We are rejoicing just now over marked improvement in the Sabbath-school. We have an average attendance of over one hundred young people, and a more lively interest, I dare say, is not manifested in the best of our home schools.

Our faith is beginning to reach out as we get better acquainted with our surroundings, and we are looking forward, not only to a harvest of souls here in Freetown, but our prayers are ascending for the people of the untouched inland country, and we are asking the Father to raise up men and means to enable us to plant a station there in the not distant future. We want to get at least one hundred miles from the coast, in the uplands, and there establish a strong inland station, with industrial schools, farm, etc., in connection with it, and make this a center and evangelize the country for miles around as fast as we are able. As far as practicable the station will be made self-supporting. In attempting this we will be traveling an untrodden road, for the Gospel has not yet penetrated so far inland on the west coast. As yet missionary labors have been confined to the coast and coast rivers. As the rivers are only navigable to the first plateau or upland the belt covered is not very wide. The attempt to go beyond this boundary raises the question of transportation, roads, etc. But we believe God wants us to push inland and therefore will enable us to overcome all difficulties.

Meanwhile it is our daily prayer that we may be kept faithful and have the grace to do a clean-cut work here in Freetown, preaching Christ to the people and instructing them about the popular evils of the day. We ask the prayers of all readers of the Cynosure. We feel we have a special claim on your prayers. Pray for a missionary plant that proposes to stand firm against the lodge and the rum traffic and other forms of popular sin. Pray for the redemption of Africa.

Yours in Christ, H. W. Johnston.

A SPLENDID GIFT FOR YOUR BROTHER ACROSS THE SEA.

Christian Friend:—You have a dear brother far away from home, toiling diligently in a hard field. He will greatly prize a useful gift, which some one will surely delight to send him.

The brother (or sister) is the missionary that represents your church or society. The valuable, yet cheap gift, which he needs is the writing tablet known as the "Edison Mimeograph," manufactured by A. B. Dick Co., Chicago, Ill. I have one which I find just the instrument I needed in my India mission work. Producing hundreds of good copies from one writing, it saves much expense of printing, engraving, etc. In mission work it will prove especially valuable in reproducing in the vernaculars all circulars, lessons, notices, etc., and even for printing small tracts. Native styles of writing can be imitated by this instrument in a way that type cannot effect.

Realizing the great need of missionaries in this line, and knowing of no other instrument to meet it like the Mimeograph (I have tried other processes), I would urge that friends of missionaries see that they are supplied with this most useful instrument. Churches, Sunday-schools, mission boards and individual Christians, can help your foreign work greatly by carrying out this suggestion.

Yours for the promotion of the mission work,

Wallace J. Gladwin,

Miles, Iowa. Missionary to India,

LOCAL ISSUES IN OHIO AND MARYLAND.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 16, 1890.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Last Sabbath morning I preached in the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Cedarville, Ohio, Rev. J. F. Morton, D.D., pastor. The doctor has occupied this pulpit for twenty-seven years. He is a man of untiring zeal, uncompromising devotion to principle, and a natural leader of men. It is not surprising that his congregation occupies the front rank in that community. Some of the members are relatives of mine, many were schoolmates, and almost all were personal acquaintances. It was very gratifying to visit them. The strongest Covenanter doctrine was accepted with evident relish. At the close a collection amounting to about $20 was lifted for the cause of National Reform.

In the evening I preached at a union service in Irvin Hall. All who could be accommodated were there, and some were turned away. The theme was "Church Unity and Co-operation." On Monday evening a temperance meeting was held in the Opera House. Two years ago the town council passed an ordinance that no saloon should be permitted in the corporation. Last spring two councilmen were elected, one at least of whom was pledged to vote to revoke that action. The council now stands two for bringing back the saloon, four against. As a compromise the matter has been referred to the people, and next Saturday an election will be held for that purpose. Of course there is no law for such procedure, and there will be nothing settled no matter which way the vote goes. But an expression of the sentiments of the people seems necessary to strengthen the weak knees of the municipal officers. This was the object of the meeting. An old Roman senator used to repeat this sentiment every time he addressed the senate, "Delenda est Carthago"—Carthage must be destroyed. The temperance people of Cedarville have decreed that the saloon must be destroyed. Forty years ago there were many licensed lotteries in England. Some Christian citizens protested against legalizing a moral wrong. They were answered: The license reduces the number of lotteries one-third. It brings a large revenue into the public treasury. The same arguments are used to-day for licensing the saloon. A loud protest from all over this land went up against the Louisiana lottery, and Congress responded in the anti-lottery law. If it is such a great sin for Louisiana to collect $1,250,000 a year from the lottery, why is it not a greater sin for Ohio to collect $4,000,000 a year from the saloon?

We are told that a vote for prohibition is lost. What is a vote, but the expression of the conviction of the voter. The man who believes in prohibition and votes for license has belied his convictions, and cursed be the hand that casts a ballot which does not represent the sentiments of the immortal spirit behind it. It is no perversion of the words of Christ to say: "He that saveth his vote shall lose it, and he that loseth his vote for my sake and the Gospel shall save it."

A few years ago 323,000 votes in Ohio cast the ballots for prohibition and 95,000 for license. How comes it that the 95,000 have controlled the legislation at Columbus ever since and the 323,000 have not been heard from? The reason is the temperance ranks are divided. Let those who believe in prohibition stand together in Cedarville, and the saloon will never come back.

Is local option justifiable? Only as a temporary relief while working for general prohibition. The illustration first used by the National issue is a good one. Twenty-five snakes running in the streets: that's free whisky. Twenty-five snakes in a box with twenty-five holes, so that they can get out: that is low license. Stop ten of the holes: that's high license. Drive the snakes over to the next town: That's local option. Kill the snakes: that's prohibition. We are in favor of killing the snakes. But if the people in the neighboring town persist in keeping the box with holes in it, it is right for us to rid ourselves of the snakes until they come to a better mind.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 22.—I came here Saturday. This is a fine Southern city of 450,000, a quiet, orderly, and moral municipality. It is the headquarters of Romanism in America. The Cardinal has his official residence here; their great theological school is here; and in culture and refinement the cream of that church is here. But the Protestant churches are strong and active likewise. So it is a church-going city.

Sabbath morning and evening I preached in the Reformed Presbyterian church. This congregation has worshiped on the same lot for many decades. Two years ago they built a new church, at a cost of $10,000. Mr. Bowes, who has a class of 300 Sabbath-school teachers every Saturday evening in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, is an elder. Dr. Slater, who was raised in the Miller's Run congregation, is another. They have called a new pastor.

In the afternoon I visited the Baptist Tabernacle, Rev. A. C. Dickson, D. D., pastor. It will accommodate 1,500. Every seat was filled. The doctor invited me to occupy ten minutes before his sermon in telling his people about our Sabbath Reform work. In his study he said: "Your coming is to me a providence. I am appointed to read a paper next Monday on 'The Workingman and the Sabbath.' Sickness in my family has prevented me from giving any attention to it. I want you to take my place. I will arrange all the preliminaries. You will then reach the whole city." I need not say I thanked God and took courage.

Monday morning I attended the Presbyterian ministers' meeting. This was the first meeting since their vacation. And according to the order, the chairman of last year was to preach a sermon. He was not present. And a motion was passed to hear the National Reform secretary instead. So I took the floor and occupied it to my heart's content. At the close of my address, Rev. Alexander Proudfit, D. D., pastor of the Second Presbyterian church, the old charge of Rev. Geo. P. Hays, D. D., now of Kansas City, spoke. He said he was in the fullest sympathy with the National Reform movement. The Sabbath question must be settled. Our church-members buy and read the Sunday paper. Our ministers ride on the Sunday train forty or fifty miles to fill an appointment. Where are we going to? Revs. McClure, Jones, McMillan, Cummings and others expressed interest in our work.

I visited the Biblical Institute, now Morgan College, an institution maintained by the M. E. Church for the education of colored students. They only run eight months in the year, and begin the first Wednesday of October. We have arrangements for an address.

Of our interviews with the editors and pastors we will speak at another time. J. M. FOSTER.

THOSE MASONIC MINISTERS.

HENRY, S. Dak., Sept. 19, 1890.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In J. P. Stoddard's article in the Cynosure of Sept. 18, he speaks of the claim of the Grand Master of New York that there are 703 ministers of the Gospel, members of lodges in New York State. It would be worth while to ascertain if any of the 703 ministers had had revivals of religion on their fields during their pastorates, and compare the account with the other fields of ministers of the same denomination.

I believe as ministers mingle in these lodges they lose in power in spiritual things. A prominent Mason, a teacher in one of our State schools, viz, the Agricultural School at Brookings, S. D., by name, Stephen G. Updyke, told me that he had got out of the "hang of preaching." He gives a sort of lecture for a sermon, strong in man's power, but weak in the power of God. I feel that several that I know who were really successful Gospel preachers, are losing that power by going into lodges and taking their degrees. I would like to know if it is simply personal, or whether it has a wider application. If there is any way of getting a report of the 703 New York lodge ministers, I should be glad to have some one make it up. I think for the Methodist church that their Advocate file would likely give the necessary information for most of the 288 Methodist ministers if we had a list of the 288 and their fields.

Perhaps some one who has the means of information at hand could tell us, in a valuable paper, the effect of the lodge on the Christian ministry of the State of New York. Hoping you can help me, I am very truly yours, J. P. DYAS.

—F. A. Hosmer, of Great Barrington, Mass., has gone to Honolulu to fill the president's chair of the American College there.

PITH AND POINT.

EQUAL TO ANGELS.

In regard to the ministry of angels, and of the holy dead departed from us, the Cynosure Sept. 7th says: "They are now equal to the angels." I suppose the Scripture you refer to is in Luke 20: 32–39, which evidently has reference to a time after the resurrection of the dead, which will not take place until after the Lord comes again, or rather at his second coming, when the righteous dead will be raised to immortality and eternal life; and the wicked, as David says, are reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished.—DARIUS REYNOLDS, Belvidere, Ill.

HELP THE SOUTHERN FUND.

I have just received notice that my time for the Cynosure is about expired. I do not see how I can do without it, and I wish to ask you to please continue the paper, if there are any means on hand to supply colored ministers with the dear old Christian Cynosure. I will give in brief a few reasons why I want the paper:

A little more than a year ago the friend of the "lodge" came into our community trying to work up a lodge. Bro. Simpson and myself did all in our power to keep them from organizing, but there were other ministers and influential men of both races, who used their influence in favor of the lodge, and the result was that a lodge of Odd-fellows was set up. Since that time Bro. Simpson and I, have been doing all in our power to break up its evil influence. Of course we obtained our arguments from what we had learned in the Cynosure. I have learned the corrupting tendency of the lodge system. Had not your paper providentially (for I do not believe it was mere chance) fallen into my hand, I would no doubt have been carried away with this "delusion." Will you continue the paper to me as a colored minister who hopes and prays that the day is not distant, when this country will be free from the curse of "lodgism."—W. L. CLARK, Weston, Ky.

A GOOD CAUSE TO WORK FOR.

I have not neglected to stand up for the cause, putting the Cynosure in the hands of many to read, also other publications from your office. It seems hard work to get any one here to say he will take your valuable paper. I wish you would send me more reading for circulation. I want to work for freedom's cause.—P. B. BATES, Constantine, Mich.

G. A. R. NOT A SECRET SOCIETY!

A Christian brother and minister told me that the G. A. R., is not a secret society. I was astonished; but had no proof at hand on the question. Will you kindly give us a few brief paragraphs proving the truth on this point? W. J. GLADWIN.

If Bro. Gladwin had asked this minister either one of two questions, his astonishment would have been turned into amazement and grief. If he had asked for permission to enter the G. A. R. without promise of secrecy or taking the initiatory oath, he would have seen confusion in the face of the minister. Or had he asked, What is a secret society? the reply would probably have been, A society whose existence is unknown outside its members. There is no such society, nor can there be long; but this subterfuge is sometimes used by deceivers. We sadly fear that had Bro. Gladwin been talking with an ordinary sinner, he would have had an honest opinion. We would not misjudge this brother, but when a minister gets into the lodge, he gets off consecrated ground into the devil's company, and often sadly plays the hypocrite and deceiver.

ENDORSES THEM ALL.

I cannot say that your paper has changed my opinion on the great reforms that you so ably advocate, but it has a tendency to strengthen and confirm it. I heartily endorse all the reforms that you so ably advocate. May God speed the day when right shall prevail, and the blight of secrecy shall be blotted out of existence.—J. KERR, Albion, Iowa.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Our nominees are now before the people. I am told that the Prohibition candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania, is a Mason. Will our committee of inquiry inform us through the Cynosure before November next? Much as I love the cause of temperance, and anxious as I am to vote Prohibition, I cannot support oath-bound men at the polls, for any office, "I knowing them to be such." I requested our excellent editor of the People to see to it, that no secretist should be put under our noses, stating to him the situation. Possibly Miller is not a secretist, but we must know he is not. I could write him, but he would not answer me probably. Lodgery in some respects is even more to be dreaded than the whisky conspiracy; both are conspiracies and much to be abhorred.—NATHAN CALLENDER.

The local Y. M. C. A. is enjoying a rapid increase in membership. At the regular monthly meeting held this week, thirty-seven new members were elected.

LODGE NOTES.

Mr. Chauncey M. Depew said at New York Monday last that he did not believe that the Knights of Labor organization was responsible for the wrecking on the New York Central Road, but it seemed to him that "some bad men who are Knights of Labor are responsible for it."

At Topeka, Kan., on Monday, Sept. 15, was begun the sixty-sixth annual session of the Sovereign Grand Lodge I. O. O. F. It concluded its session Saturday. The resolution was adopted deprecating the holding of national conventions by the Daughters of Rebekah. The Grand Lodge declined to take action in the matter of barring saloon-keepers from membership. St. Louis was chosen as the place for holding the next convention.

Seven indictments were returned by the grand jury at Monmouth, Ill., against that number of union printers of the Monmouth Daily Journal who are out on a strike. The striking printers struck because one of the union men was discharged, they claim, without just cause. By threats of killing and violence they are preventing others from taking their places. Five of the intimidators are now in jail and the sheriff is after the other two.

The new Stock Yards Switching Association of this city, which was reorganized under the name of the Chicago Railway Transfer Association, had Monday afternoon a strike on their hands and the whole force of twenty-eight engines were laid up. The strike was caused by the switchmen refusing to work because the crews of two Burlington engines were "scabs," although both engines had laid on a side track all day. The men had been on the Burlington road since the great strike.

Grand Chief Engineer P. M. Arthur was in New York Sept. 21, and addressed the so-called grand union meeting which was of the nature of a national convention of the whole Engineers Brotherhood which is represented from Maine to California and Canada to Panama. The meeting was secret, and none but those who were initiated were allowed admittance. The attendance was large, there being by actual count 1,350 at the afternoon session. The meeting put into the form of a resolution its views of Grand Chief Arthur's attitude in relation to the late strike of the employes of the New York Central railroad, which resolution was adopted unanimously.

The New York Central strike was over Sept. 17. It was ordered off by General Master Workman Powderly. The men fairly and frankly acknowledged their defeat, and they go back as non-union men. This statement was made by Dennis McCarthy, one of the leaders of the strike. McCarthy was the first one of the sixty knights suspended by the company whose suspension precipitated the strike. "The strike," said Mr. McCarthy, "was declared off to-day by district assembly No. 246, in Albany, acting under instructions of Mr. Powderly. It means that the New York Central has won the fight and the men are beaten. They go back as individuals and not as Knights of Labor, and the Knights of Labor can take care of themselves."

It has been rumored for some time past that harmony did not prevail between General Underwood, Generalissimo of the Patriarchs Militant and Grand Sire of the Sovereign Lodge of Odd-Fellows, and Captain General Ellis, of Troy, Ohio. Recently General Ellis issued an order to all the cantons of the United States, in which he assumed command of the army. This order has created much comment, and interest has been growing rapidly as to the probable outcome, many fearing that a split in the Militant army would follow. General Underwood is absent at Topeka, Kan., but under date of Sept. 11 he issued an order charging Captain General Ellis with insubordination to his commander and insulting conduct toward the sovereign body. By the order Captain General Ellis is relieved of the command of the Fourth Army Corps, and, because of insubordination, will consider himself under arrest, his action to be reported to the Sovereign Grand Lodge.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

PASTOR FISCH, of Paris, 1873:—The church in America must stand as one man against Masonry or be destroyed.

REV. JOEL SWARTZ, D. D, a renouncing Mason:—Its (Freemasonry's) religion is anti-Christian ... Its prayers are blasphemous. ... Its use of the Bible is sacrilegious. ... The whole is a compound of Judaism and paganism.

MOSES STUART, Professor in Andover Theological Seminary, Mass, 1834:—For a long time I neither knew nor cared about the subject; but recent attention to it has filled me with astonishment; and as to somethings contained in it, with horror. The trifling with oaths and with the awful name of the ever blessed God, is a feature which I cannot contemplate but with the deepest distress.

JOHN WESLEY, June, 1773:—I went to Ballymena and read a strange tract that professes to discover "the inmost recesses of Freemasonry," said to be "translated from the French original lately published at Berlin." I incline to think it is a genuine account. Only if it be, I wonder the author is suffered to live. If it be, what an amazing banter upon all mankind is Freemasonry.—N. Y. Christian Advocate, February, 1884.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL:—I know no Temperance, Odd-fellow or Freemason fraternity that does not recognize a brotherhood with the world. "They are of the world, they speak of the world and the world heareth them." Christians, though in the world, are not of it. Any union, then, for moral purposes with the world that brings us to commune religiously with it, by the laws and usages of the institution itself, is opposed to the law and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

CHARLES G. FINNEY.—God demands and the world has a right to expect, that the church will take due action and bear a truthful testimony in respect to this institution. She cannot now innocently hold her peace. The light has come. Fidelity to God and to the souls of men require that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out, and shoud take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion.

NATHANIEL COLVER, former pastor Tremont Temple, Boston:—I am free to say that it is my deliberate opinion that the vicious character of Masonry and its guilt-concealing and barbarous oaths are such, as not only to release all from their bonds, but also to lay upon them the solemn obligation to tear off its covering and expose its enormity. I regard it as Satan's masterpiece, a terrible snare to men. It sits at this moment as a nightmare on all the moral energies of our government, and utterly paralyzes the arm of justice.

DWIGHT L. MOODY:—Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God and if only one or two go with us it is all right. Do not let down the standard to suit men who love their secret lodges or have some darling sin they will not give up.

HENRY TATEM, an eminent Baptist pastor, Providence, R. I., 1832:—It was about fourteen years ago that I was first initiated into the lodge Within a few months after, I advanced to the Royal Arch degree, and sometime after I took the degrees of Knighthood, as they are called. I well remember the horror of my feelings when the bandage was taken from my eyes and I found myself partly naked, with men standing around me pointing at me the implements of death, and a human skull was handed me to drink from, and I was required to repeat words, awful in themselves, and which I cannot distinctly recollect, but which I believe to have been the same I find given in the explanation of that ceremony in Bernard's Light on Masonry. From that time I absented myself from the lodge and chapter. My mind was afterwards led by degrees to an examination into Masonry, which I am now satisfied is repugnant to the spirit of the religion of Christ.

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.
HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1890.

THE FALL OF BABYLON, which is the burden of Old Testament prophecy, and of the Apocalypse in the New, follows the angel having the everlasting Gospel to preach to "every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people," Rev. 14: 6. Literal Babylon on the Euphrates has long since fallen, and four large cities have been built with its debris. "Mystical Babylon," the mother of the "abominations" (false religions) of the whole earth, is soon to fall and be "found no more at all," Rev. 18: 21. This final and complete demolition of all religions which "deceive the whole earth" is to take place when "the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the seas." That hour is now hastening.

"THOU ART WITH ME."—Daniel Webster, when dying, repeated from the twenty-third Psalm, "Thy rod and thy staff;" but did not—perhaps could not—say, "Thou art with me." The thirst for brandy burned in him to his last breath. His physician, Mr. Harvey says, ordered to give him brandy, "if he still lives;" and Webster's last words were, "I still live." This greatest of American orators and statesmen was thus followed by the liquor-fiend to his last gasp; and the world was thus deprived of the utterances which, if God had been with him in "the valley of the shadow of death," he might have given to mankind. But the Psalmist, whose sin exceeded Webster's, yet was penitent and could say, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil," for "THOU ART WITH ME!" Christ said to those who keep his words, "We will come and make our abode with you." And again, "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end." This secures Christians, even when dying, against all EVIL.

"GATHERED TO HIS FATHERS," which was spoken of the Patriarchs in the Old Testament, did not mean gathered to the dead. Dead bodies were not "their fathers." Jesus and the Apostles teach that the spirits of the dead immediately enter upon that state which, from their previous character, they deserve. Luke 16: 22; and 23: 43; 2 Cor. 5: 1; Phil. 1: 21; Heb. 12: 23. And though much must be inexplicable in so vast a theme as our entrance into immortality, Moses and Elias in the Mount (Matt. 17: 3), and one of the old prophets in Rev. 22: 9, seem to have appeared, not as spirits but as persons. And dying Christians have often been met by their friends gone before. So the Spiritualist movement seems to have been the devil's version of a great but neglected truth, viz., that we are in the midst of the spirit world, and that angels are indeed our ministering spirits. But to seek knowledge or power from persons in the next world, as Saul did from Samuel, is to pray to them; and to pray to them is to worship them, which is forbidden, and becomes demon-worship. But if our pious ancestors and personal friends are to meet and greet us at our entrance into life, it is a rational solace and comfort to which Christians are entitled here.

THE JESUIT REVIVAL.—In 1776 the Dolores Mission was planted at San Francisco. The same year Protestants on the Atlantic coast made the Declaration of Independence. At the Congregational Club at Sycamore, Ill., a brother argued that since Protestants have covered the 3,000 miles of territory this side the Sierra Nevada with their improvements, and surveyed it into quarter sections, while the papists have lost their title to California, and their Spanish language has nearly vanished before the English, therefore the country is in no danger from Romanists.

This is mistaken reasoning. Popery is a mistletoe which strikes its roots into Christian countries, over-tops and kills the vigor which nourishes it. But as in Paraguay, Mexico and California, it dies when left to depend on itself.

In July 13, 1773, a papal bull dissolved the whole order of Jesuits, at the request of France, Spain, Portugal, Parma, Naples and Austria; and Charles III. of Spain gave their property on the Pacific coast to the Franciscans. But the Jesuits came back to life, and now have the University of St. Ignatius in San Francisco which reports 19 professors and 450 students. In 1814 Pope Pius VII. restored the fallen order. Nothing will extirprate this curse but the reign of Christ.

THE ANTI-PAPAL PRESS.

We have received some numbers of the Loyal American, a weekly, by Col. C. G. Minor, "devoted to the preservation of civil and religious liberty," and published at the Rookery, Chicago. This paper is an open battery against Jesuitism; a society formed by a Spanish grandee, Ignatius Loyola, in a cellar under the Convent of Martyrs, Mont Martre, Paris, A. D., 1534, just seventeen years after Luther nailed his thesis to the great door of the church at Wittenberg. This "Society of Jesus," or "Jesuits," swore a midnight oath to be true to itself, and, as Seward said of Freemasonry, "hostile to every government which it cannot control;" and no oath ever sworn for evil has been kept with more steady malignity, constancy and force. It stopped the Lutheran Reformation, and, in two or three principalities, turned it back, so that provinces once Protestant, are ruled by papists. In short, this counterfeit "Society of Jesus" is a chef d'ouvre, or chief work of the devil.

Pope Paul III., applied to by Loyola, sanctioned and confirmed his institution in 1540, six years after it was sworn into existence in the subterraneous chapel in Mont Martre. In fifty years the Jesuits had wormed themselves into the leading schools of Europe. They had their own college at Douai, which taught that it was no sin to murder Protestant princes. But in 1604, when Batesby and Piercy, who were Romanists, devised the gun-powder plot to kill James I., his family and nobles, by blowing up the Parliament House, they hesitated, because Roman Catholic members of Parliament would be killed by the explosion. They were assured by Tesmond, a Jesuit, and Garnet, superior of Jusuits in England, that the interests of religion required in this case that the innocent should be killed along with the guilty. They proceeded with the plot, and procured a desperado named Guy Fawkes to ignite the thirty-six barrels of gun powder under the Parliament House, beneath the king and royal family. But the plot was discovered, and Fawkes, Piercy and Catesby were executed. These facts are taken from Hume, "the regular apologist of the Stuarts," and the papacy. Of course they are authentic. And in 1767, in spite of these terrible facts of history, the Jesuits had wound their way into all the governments of Europe, and by their treasonable practices aroused the whole European population against them. All creeds and confessions arose against them as the enemies of the human race; and a papal bull dissolved the whole order July 21, 1773. They were driven from Spain even, and Charles III. gave their vast possessions to the Franciscans, who named San Francisco from their founder, and started their first mission, "Dolores," at that city in 1776, the year of the Declaration of our American Independence.

But the Jesuits have come back to life. And the huge building with two tall towers, now in San Francisco, from where the King of Spain expelled them, is now the College of St. Ignatius. In 1814, Pope Pius VII. restored and re-established this terrible order.

Fifty years ago, the writer was a pastor in Cincinnati, and Bishop Purcell was building his cathedral. He was a member of the school board, and lauded the free schools which were the pride of that city. At the very time he was acting with the school board and lauding the schools he wrote to the Society de propaganda Fide, in Austria, that his pillow was nightly wet with tears over those "twenty-four colossal school buildings" which were destroying the children of the church. His letter to Austria found its way back to this country; was translated and published in the New York Observer. It was copied by the Cincinnati Gazette, and the Jesuit bishop resigned his place on the school board. By uniting with German infidels the Jesuits procured a majority of the school board, and those schools were the first from which the Bible was driven.

We should advise every one to procure and read the Loyal American, but for the fact that it is the organ of secret societies, and attempts to revive the principles of the Old Native American party, which in 1856 nominated Millard Fillmore, and sought to thwart the anti-slavery cause. A secret political society, said Mr Seward, "is hostile to every American principle." And no truer words could be spoken. Two hundred years ago (1690), secret Orange lodges were formed in Ireland, after the Prince of Orange gained the Battle of the Boyne, to protect Protestants and promote Protestantism. It has proved a curse to both. The last exploit of Orangeism is getting up mobs against Gladstone in the city of Belfast. Col. Minor writes with singular ability, pith, point, and power. And we are sorry that one so gifted, and whose talents are so needed by the country against the ruining Jesuits, should lend his talents to the vain and hopeless task of benefiting the world by a secret order; which is direct disobedience to the words of Christ, who commanded his disciples to proclaim on housetops whatever was told them "in the ear" and "in closets." Matt. 10: 26.

THE PRESENT CONGRESS.

The first session of the Fifty-second Congress will soon close. It has been one of the most remarkable in the history of the nation, not only for its great length, but for the variety and importance of the measures that have been considered. Other Congresses have been as strongly partisan and heated in discussion, but none ever had such vast pecuniary resources under its control, and surely none has ever been so reckless in their expenditure.

Some of the more important measures that have been considered and either have or are likely to become laws, are:

The admission of six new States, the two Dakotas, Washington, Montana, Idaho and Wyoming. This will add twelve Senators and seven (soon eight) members to the House of Representatives. The admission of these States, embracing an area larger than the original colonies, is a marked event in the history of the nation. That two of them came in with constitutions prohibiting the liquor traffic, is an index of the drift of public conviction. The Dependent Pension Law, which has already added between 400,000 and half a million to our list of pensioners, makes an immense draft on our national resources, and necessitates the continuance of most exhorbitant taxation. The McKinley Tariff bill, which is about to become a law, has elicited a world wide discussion. It is the first measure ever proposed by which to diminish the public revenue, by adding to the duties on import, thereby making them, in some instances, practically prohibitory. It seems to us alike inimical to the best interest of the great mass of the people, and to that comity of nations that is the legitimate outgrowth of Christianity. The reciprocity feature is its redeeming clause. Mr. Blaine is to be congratulated for having caught the drift of public conviction in this respect.

But reciprocity cannot stop with American nations. It means free trade, and in spite of European and American exclusiveness, this is the conclusion to which we will come at last. Says the North American Review for September: "For our part we have more faith in the natural order which the great Ordainer of things has established, by his diversification of the productions of different lands, than in the artificial order which European and American politicians have instituted with the idea of benefiting themselves by hampering the free interchange of surplus commodities."

Of the Federal Election bill, which has been postponed, not given up, we may say, there never was greater occasion for the passage of a law protecting the elective franchise; since, in some quarters, the plainest provisions of the Federal compact are openly repudiated. Its details may be inadequate, but unless there is a great change in the election methods in the South, it is quite sure to become a law and to be enforced.

But with its many mistakes and shortcomings, we ought not to withhold the meed of praise for the Wilson Inter-State Commerce bill, which secures the regulation of the liquor traffic to the States, and the Anti-lottery bill, which saves our mail service from being made a party to the crime of robbery.

It remains only to consider the extraordinary methods of Speaker Reed, in securing a conformity to the will of the majority. Whether the power thus exercised was used for partisan rather than patriotic purposes we do not stop to consider. For years, both in our National Congress and in the British Parliament, needful legislation has been hindered by the factious opposition of minorities. Various expedients have been devised, but none has succeeded better than Mr. Reed's plan. He assumes that when a member is visibly present, he is present, and that his failure to vote ought to be no bar to the legislative fiat of the nation. It is likely that he will have the moral support of all the people, just as he has had in his own district. There will, however, be no adequate settlement of this question until all Congressmen are required, under heavy penalties, to be present, except when excused for disability.

It is in vain to forecast the coming Congressional elections. Should the Republicans retain their power in the House, a very grave responsibility will rest upon them. The people will not tolerate saloons in the Capitol, nor will they long consent to rule by partisan machinery, or to the dictation of the liquor traffic or the lodge.

THE BIBLE IN CHICAGO SCHOOLS.

Ever since Romanist bigotry and infidel assumption drove the Bible from the public schools of Chicago in 1875, there have not failed to be earnest protests from the real majority of the patrons and supporters of these schools. When parents found their boys ridiculed in their debating societies for appealing to the Word of God as an authority equal at least to Hume or Abbott, and found the teachers ruling against them because the Board of Education had proscribed the Book of books, it was cause for indignation as well as protest. When some of the more thoughtful and honest of the teachers found that because there was no Word of God allowed in the schools, no law of God was recognized as authority and Chicago boys and girls were growing up into blank anarchism, in a sense the pupils of Spies, Parsons, Lingg and Most, and preparing for a similar atrocious career.

When at length the graduating exercises of one of the high schools was to be held in Union Park Congregational Church, and the class arranged for an opening prayer on their program, their principal struck it out because religion was banished from the Chicago schools. The class protested against such a pagan decision, and even carried their protest and plea to the highest authority they could reach; but in vain. This shameful transaction caused some of the pulpits to speak out, and was noticed to some extent in the press.

Such effects following the rejection of the Bible have at length resulted in an organized movement of the Christian mothers of Chicago to restore to the place where their children are educated the Word of God as an authority and a benediction.

This movement originated, we believe, with Mrs. E. A. Cook, formerly connected with the Cynosure, who has given much prayer, labor and expense to the cause. The record of her efforts to interest other women, to reach the Board of Education and other school officials, and even to procure, if possible, the favor of the Roman Catholic Archbishop Feehan, would make a respectable volume. These efforts resulted in a mass meeting of women held in the First Methodist Church last Wednesday afternoon. The report in the Daily Herald is very full, and we take pleasure in copying a considerable portion:

Ringing applause greeted each speaker and the greatest enthusiasm was manifested. The meeting was opened with Scripture reading and singing. Mrs. Ezra A. Cook, who presided, said in opening the discussion, that the preachers at all times urged them to aid in sending missionaries to foreign lands to convert the heathen. Why should they not see the evil at their own doors and take steps to end it. From every pulpit, in every educational journal, at every social science meeting the assertion was made that the Bible is the basis and best standard of morality. There was no disputing that. Next came the admission that the school was the cradle of citizenship. Mrs. Cook continued: "Catholics say our schools are godless, and on this account decry them and denounce them. Let us aid in the effort to take that argument from them. Let us make the schools of our country godlike by introducing into them the Word of God." She remembered fifteen years ago what a different type of boy the public school turned out as compared with the pupil of to-day. The Bible was at that time read in the public schools; what was good then ought to be good now.

Mrs. E. Perrin next addressed the meeting. She said that the best element of the community favored the introduction of the Bible into the public schools, and if the meeting resolved to take practical steps toward giving effect to the idea it would be sustained by such an overwhelming public sentiment as would sweep aside all croakers and objectors. She urged the adoption of some definite scheme in regard to the formation of a permanent organization, the members of which should pledge themselves not to disband until their object should have been gained.

Miss Mary Allen West [editor of the Union Signal had no doubts from the earnestness shown by such a tremendous gathering that the time was ripe for taking action, as American wives and American mothers. It was the intention of the promoters of the meeting to confine their efforts at present to getting a petition to the Board of Education signed, but she thought "it would be a pity to allow such an opportunity as the meeting afforded to pass without forming a society." This statement elicited prolonged applause. Miss West proceeded: "Every day we see precocious criminals sent to bridewells and penitentaries to be confirmed in vice, many of whom would have been good boys and would become good citizens had they had the advantage of hearing the saving truth promulgated in the Bible." She admitted that the cosmopolitan nature of the community rendered it a difficult matter to satisfactorily arrange, but as the greatest objection would be received from Catholic quarters, she would suggest the dissemination of a little book of selections from the Bible prepared by the Catholic Archbishop of Toronto, Archbishop Lynch. With a determination to go on to the end, and inspired by the enthusiasm of the meeting, she would move that they at once proceed with the formation of an organization which would plan and agitate for the accomplishment of the purpose that animated them. This motion was seconded from all parts of the hall and a committee on organization was at once appointed.

The Herald reports a thousand ladies present at this meeting. They received the report of the committee organization with enthusiasm; voted to call the new society the Woman's Moral Education Society; elected Mrs. E. A. Cook, president; Miss Mary Allen West, vice-president; Mrs. E. H. Miller, secretary; and Mrs. J. H. Smalley, secretary. A petition was prepared for signatures which is being rapidly signed; over 300 names were taken at Dr. Goodwin's church Sabbath day. The petition reads:

To the Honorable Board of Education of the City of Chicago:—Whereas, The Bible is the great fountain of public and private morals, and contains the most exalted literature ever produced; and

Whereas, The effect of reading appropriate extracts therefrom, to and by the pupils in the public schools, would be to elevate their minds and strengthen their moral characters;

Therefore, the undersigned citizens of Chicago respectfully pray that the proper order may be made to require the reading of such extracts in the opening exercises each day of all departments of the public schools of Chicago. The undersigned regard the claim that such reading would be an infringement of just personal or religious liberty as wholly destitute of merit and insist that such reading would still leave the mind and conscience of every pupil entirely free from any improper bias.

Among the letters written to this meeting was one from Hon. C. L. Bonney, president of the City and National Citizens' League. Miss Frances E. Willard of the W. C. T. U., also wrote:

My Dear Sister:—I am to be in the Nebraska campaign for Constitutional Prohibition when your meeting occurs, but send you the assurance of my devoted interest, co-operation and prayers. That book of Scripture readings has come to light, and I hope it may be carefully considered by your meeting. There must be a basis on which all believers in Christianity may unite. Do your best to have a Catholic address the meeting by voice or pen.

Yours for Christ's Gospel as the guide of youth,
Frances E. Willard.

May God grant the completest success to the movement so hopefully inaugurated.

—The Baltimore American of Sept. 26 notices the "interesting lecture" of the Washington agent, "Prof. W. B. Stoddard," under the auspices of the Emanuel Young Men's Association in their hall. It was the first lecture of a course provided by the Association.

—Bro. J. P. Stoddard's letter reporting the New Hampshire meeting at Gilford Village came in just as we were getting the forms ready for press. We have only room to say that it is an enthusiastic letter full of good news of a good meeting. Look for it next week, and let every one be sure to read it.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Bro. John A. Todd, the Iowa evangelist, is beginning a very hopeful work at New Albany, Ind., for which he asks that all Christian people pray.

—Rev. L. G. Jordan passed through this city Monday, on his way to Pennsylvania, where he is engaged for a month's work for prohibition. He has been doing a grand work for the Nebraska amendment. Since last December he has spoken to average once a day on this theme, and for four months the work has been in a tent or the open air He is confident that the amendment will carry.

—Mrs. Jennie Torrence, of St. Louis, who has been two years returned from mission work in Liberia, West Africa, returns soon to a work that lies very near her heart. A companion, Miss North, accompanies her. A farewell service is to be held on Wednesday of this week in this city to speed them on their way. They wish the Cynosure to follow them to the mission field. Would that all missionaries had the same desire.

—Dr. J. R. Johnston, D. D., an associate editor of the United Presbyterian, died Sept. 12. He was pastor of the United Presbyterian church at Washington, Pa., since June, 1863, and was greatly beloved and respected. His work on the United Presbyterian was the editorial notes of the first page, in which in careful terms he often presented his objections to secret societies. He was widely beloved and respected in the denomination.

—The Tribune says that while Dr. W. T. Meloy of the First United Presbyterian church of this city, was preaching Sabbath evening on the folly of laying up treasures on earth, thieves were ransacking his house just adjoining the church. They emptied five trunks on the floor, upset the beds, pulled out contents of dressing-cases, and made a general overhauling. But they found Dr. Meloy true to his text, and got away with only a silver watch and a small gold pin.

THE PENNSYLVANIA CAMPAIGN.

York, Pa., Sept. 22, 1890.

Editor Cynosure:—I hope every Pennsylvania reader of the Cynosure will join us in the present campaign. The old guard never surrenders, and will of course answer the roll call. But will the recruits step forward from behind the trees? If "the woods is full of bears," every anti-secret hunter should bear his share, and not allow a few of us to "grin and bear it."

As corresponding secretary of the Pennsylvania Christian Anti-secret Association, I have already done much to enlighten the people of this State, by mail and otherwise, during the year 1890. This year should see a long step forward, and a strong State organization, backed by local organizations in many of the sixty-seven counties.

I have resolved that all I can do myself with purse, pen and tongue, shall be done promptly and without fail. All readers of Cynosure who would like to do something somehow, but cannot do anything, are hereby tendered my most sincere thanks for their good intentions. But all who have a dime or a dollar for our State work, are hereby requested to forward the amount to Rev. J. C. Young, Custer City, McKean Co., Pa., who will give receipts in all cases. All amounts collected by myself, as corresponding secretary of the State Association, in York county, are used by me for stamps, envelopes, paper, postal cards, tracts, anti-secret papers, printing, etc. Treasurer Young has his accounts for 1888 and 1889 ready for inspection by all members, and also for publication as soon as the Association obtains funds for that purpose.

If all the readers of the Cynosure residing in the State are willing to form county associations, or any sort of local auxiliary organizations, I will send a few collection sheets and all necessary information on receipt of name, address, and two red stamps. No funds collected by county or local societies need be sent to the treasurer of the State Association. A local anti-secret society can give as interesting and instructive entertainment as any other society in your locality.

York county will complete its organization in October, and we expect to hold a convention at an early day. I will be glad to hear from any of our friends in regard to any matter relating to State work. And I suggest that we all try to secure as many subscribers for the Cynosure as we can, as one means of arousing our lodgified and hoodwinked people.

The Jesuitic secret empire of Pennsylvania is very active this year; but its days are numbered, and purgatory cannot be evaded much longer. York commandery is there now.

THE LOVING KINDNESS.

Sitting alone in the shadow
Of a grief that was all my own,
Silently thinking it over,
Silently making moan,
Sudden there swept the music
Of a gladness great and deep,
Over the cords of feeling,
Till my heart forgot to weep.

"Because of my loving kindness"—
The words stole into my brain,
Like a cool hand soothing its fever,
And charming away the pain.
Because of thy loving kindness,
Better than life to me,
My life shall be keyed to the measure
Of praise unchecked and free.

Not always the path is easy,
There are thickets hung with gloom,
There are rough and stony places,
Where never the roses bloom;
But oft when the way is hardest,
I am conscious of one at my side,
Whose hands and whose feet are wounded,
And I'm happy and safe with my guide.

Better than friends and kindred,
Better than love and rest,
Dearer than hope and triumph,
Is the name I wear on my breast.
I feel my way through the shadows,
With a confident heart and brave,
I shall live in the light beyond them,
I shall conquer death and the grave.

Often when tried and tempted,
Often ashamed of sin,
That, strong as an armed invader,
Has made a wreck of the peace within,
That wonderful loving kindness,
Patient, and full, and free,
Has stooped for my consolation,
Has brought a blessing to me.

Therefore, my lips shall praise thee,
Therefore let come what may,
To the height of a solemn gladness,
My song shall arise to-day.
Not on the drooping willow
Shall I hang my harp in the land,
When the Lord himself has cheered me,
By the touch of His pierced hand.

TRIED AS BY FIRE.

Rev. Phineas Dustin, of Huckins, near Barnbury, found among his mail one evening a letter in a yellow envelope, addressed in an old-fashioned turned hand. It was from the clerk of the church at Poke Island. Would he hear the Macedonian cry and visit Poke Island, there to break to them the bread of life for one month, with a view to settlement? Rev. Phineas Dustin went home to his wife with glad heart, and that night they offered thanks to God for this providential opening. He had preached in Huckins many years and would have gladly remained many more; but the craze for a younger man had struck the parish. He was not so very old—only fifty-three or thereabouts—but he had not learned all the new and novel methods, useful and otherwise, which the younger generation were using. The young people and some of the older ones demanded a minister who should introduce all the new ways, giving little or no thought to such a thing as individual conversion resulting. So he had resigned, not with resentment but with sorrow.

That was four months before. The church had not settled a pastor, though there had been several candidates. Rev. Phineas Dustin had preached as a supply a few times here and there, but no hint of calling him had ever been made; so this letter from Poke Island seemed to him almost a call. It was Wednesday evening when the letter came, and the parson and his wife, after long consultation over the matter, decided that he should start for Poke Island the following Friday by the forenoon coach. This was done. Rev. Phineas Dustin took his departure with light heart and serene face, carrying his inseparable friend, the umbrella, and his hand-bag. This latter was facetiously referred to by the driver as a "gripsack full of Gospel;" but he meant no harm, as he gave the parson a free ride to the depot at Barnbury. It was only a two hours' ride by railroad to the coach connection for Poke Island, but it was nearly evening when he reached the end of his journey and was left by the roadside at a path leading to a house perched high above on the bluff which gave an unobstructed view of the ocean. This was the home of Deacon Purkis, who kept the "ministers' hotel," which in every parish some warm heart usually opens. The deacon and his wife were, from principle, the friend of the minister, and, having no children are still mourning over the death of the deacon's aged mother six months ago, were very glad to entertain Rev. Phineas Dustin. The next day our parson took a look over his prospective parish, a sort of bird's eye view, geographical and spiritual. It was a crooked, straggling sort of town.

Nearly every street began at a small wharf and, running back a little way into the country, ended in some farmer's door-yard. The one road worthy of the name was the old turnpike by which he arrived, which led along shore to the new settlement at the Bluffs. The people were plenty, hard-working, warm-hearted, many forehanded. Farming and fishing were the industries, and most families carried on both branches. Before he got back to the house the deacon met him and asked him to go and visit his mother's grave. It was on a bleak hillside, seaward, one of a few mounds composing the family lot, and very dreary because of its location. Over the maternal grave a plain marble slab had been erected, with this remarkable inscription following the name and age:

"Honor, virtue, love, combine,
This mother is mine. J. P."

It was original; the deacon's masterpiece, carved in marble, with his own initials added. In the eyes of the village and in his own eyes the deacon had at one stroke given honor to his mother and won fame for himself.

Sunday morning dawned bright and clear and Rev. Phineas Dustin entered the church in like condition. A little embarrassed during the preliminaries, he forgot it all during the long prayer, when he uttered the real longings of his heart. The sermon was somewhat lengthy, logical, and full of life and hope. In fact, the preacher thought that night if he had only preached that way in Huckins he perhaps would not now be candidating. The people of Poke Island were delighted. Just what they wanted, they said to one another. Several of the brethren told the preacher so; some of the sisters wanted to. He was invited to call at many places, and then and there made several engagements to dine during the week. Squire Davis became his supporter because of a reference the preacher had made to the Squire's Alma Mater, Tompkins Academy of Barnbury, now gone into a decline. In the Sunday-school and in the evening service our parson strengthened his hold on the people, and he in turn was charmed with them and their homely ways. He was astonished beyond measure that he who had been so snubbed and unappreciated at Huckins should be so admired at Poke Island. What wonder that he went off to sleep that night a happy man?

During the week that followed he faithfully visited among the many families of the parish, going by neither the poor-house at the East End, nor the great glaring white hotel at the Bluffs where the summer boarders congregated. Before the week was over there were none who had not seen and spoken with the sweet-faced minister, and there were few who did not love him. The parish of Poke Island had not drawn the "dead line" in the ministry nor had they harbored the "young-man-for-the-pulpit" craze. He was discussed, of course, and critically analyzed. Spiritually, there was no fault. Corporeally, an erect frame, graceful carriage, a bright, intelligent face, a pleasant smile and ready word for all; dignified, but not austere. Even his clothing was beyond reproach; to be sure it was somewhat the worse for wear, but it was neat and the fit was perfect. Besides, the good wife at home had supplied him so well with white ties and linen that he made these the central point of his attire, and all the rest did well as a setting. All these things were noticed and commented on by Poke Island, and the verdict pronounced on the new minister was a favorable one. The standing committee felt that the work of supplying the pulpit was nearly over, and glad they were to be relieved of the task.

On Wednesday of this week Tom Brierly, the local correspondent of the Jackson Ensign, went up to Jackson Junction and "dropped in" to see the editor.

Brierly had an insatiable love for gossip and even scandal, which made him not only the spice but the terror of the town. His persistency in gathering news for the Ensign had won him favor with the editor, and at the same time had led the people of Poke Island to believe that they were of great importance in the world because paraded so often and at such length in the public print. He was willing to write good of any one; but if there could be a little wickedness mixed into any story, it took on an added interest. The wicked tales were those the people talked about the most. Brierly appreciated this fact, and it was this that made him so eager in his work of gathering and culling his weekly news-budget for the Jackson Ensign.

As Brierly sat down the editor passed a box of cigars, and, with his feet on the desk, the two men settled down to a short smoke and gossip; two things which go together even though it be a man who pulls at the cigar. A few moments of silence and smoke—then Brierly began: "Got anything new for the folks this week? The Ensign's grown drier than a last year's codfish."

"Yes," replied the editor, talking in ejaculatory style between the frequent puffs at his cigar and paying no attention to the criticism on his paper. "There's a rich thing this week, column article, fresh matter, startling news, country wild over it, niece brought it from Barnbury. Ever been up to Barnbury?" Brierly nodded. "Remember stone church on square? Bird store underneath, opposite hotel?" Another nod. "Fun alive there." The editor winked and Brierly grinned. "Minister smart, handsome, built 'em up, big salary, imprudent, faction in church, jealous husband, suit for divorce. How's that? Got it all fresh. O, I'll wake things up on the Ensign this week."

Puff, puff, puff, and the sanctum is made blue and the men nearly invisible by the smoke.

"Editorial?"

"Of course," loftily; "sad occurrence, misused power of the clergy, wolf in sheep's clothing, and all that, you know." Again the editor winked and Brierly grinned.

"Where is he now?"

"Off on a forced vacation. Reported to be engaged to preach somewhere down along a shore."

Brierly's round eyes snapped when he heard this. "What sort of a looking man is he?" he asked.

"What's up? Have you seen him?"

"P'r'aps, we've got a parson at Poke Island that hails from Barnbury or somewhere near by." A silence of smoke. Then the editor drew from Brierly all he knew of Rev. Phineas Dustin. He decided that Brierly should work up the matter at home for the next week's issue, and in to-morrow's paper he would hint at "startling developments in a near-by town on the shore."

[Concluded next week.]

THINK BEFORE YOU STRIKE ANY CREATURE THAT CANNOT SPEAK.

I remember reading in my boyhood about a merchant traveling on horseback, accompanied by his dog. He dismounted for some purpose, and accidentally dropped his package of money. The dog saw it; the merchant did not. The dog barked to stop him, and as he rode farther, bounded in front of the horse and barked louder and louder. The merchant thought he had gone mad, drew a revolver from his holster, and shot him. The wounded dog crawled back to the package, and when the merchant discovered his loss and rode back, he found his dying dog lying there, faithfully guarding the treasure.

The following little story, told by a friend of mine, is not so painful, but adds force to the thought, think before you strike any creature that cannot speak.

"When I was a boy, and lived up in the mountains of New Hampshire, I worked for a farmer, and was given a span of horses to plough with, one of which was a four-year-old colt. The colt after walking a few steps, would lie down in the furrow. The farmer was provoked and told me to sit on the colt's head to keep him from rising while he whipped him, 'to break him of that notion,' as he said. But just then a neighbor came by. He said, 'There's something wrong here; let him get up, and let us examine.' He patted the colt, looked at his harness and then said, 'Look at this collar; it is so long and narrow, and carries the harness so high that when he begins to pull it slips back and chokes him so he can't breathe.' And so it was, and but for that neighbor we should have whipped as kind a creature as we had on the farm because he laid down when he couldn't breathe."

It was only the other day I heard of a valuable St. Bernard dog being shot, because having a wound on his head, concealed by the hair, he bit a person who handled him roughly.

Boys, young and old, please remember that these creatures are dumb. They may be hungry, or thirsty, or cold, or faint, or sick, or bruised, or wounded and cannot tell you.

Think before you strike any creature that cannot speak.—Geo. T. Angell in the Outlook.

DEADLY GROWTHS.

A celebrated surgeon, acting on the knowledge that epilepsy was frequently caused by the pressure of a tumor or extraneous growth upon the brain, recently opened the skull of an epileptic patient, and removed the tumor. Recovery was slow but complete. The patient retained the full use of his limbs, his senses became more acute, the convulsions ceased.

"Such an operation," the medical journals state, "is, of course, only possible in the earliest stages of the disease."

There is a curious analogy between the moral ailments of the soul and the body. The Jews always held leprosy to be symbolic of sin in the moral nature. First a small, scarcely perceptible, spot, not skin deep, then a subtle poison, attacking the whole man, lastly, the ruin and corruption of every member, making the victim a loathed outcast among his kind.

A more common sight than that of an epileptic patient is that of young men and women who begin zealously and sincerely the Christian life. Presently some hobby or taste puts forth a rank growth in their nature. It may be small and apparently harmless in itself—social ambition, personal vanity, and inordinate love of amusement, of study, of managing the affairs of others—but it is out of place, like the tumor. It begins to press on the seat of life. The victim becomes less earnest in his prayers, tires easily in study of the Bible and in daily duty. Spiritually he slowly becomes a cripple, an imbecile, and at last —as to his relation with God—is dead.

"I once was happy in heart," said a young man; "for whatever might happen, I obeyed God, and in that obedience felt the promise of a larger life than this. But I have grown selfish, and have become spiritually blind and deaf. I feel that there was something of infinite value in what I have lost."

If any boy or girl who is trying to serve God finds this moral lethargy creeping over the soul, it is a sure sign that some outward pressure is upon it; some unwholesome passion or appetite, which must be cut away. Do not spare the knife. Cut it off and cast it from you before it is altogether to late. "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey?"—Youth's Companion.

A DISCRIMINATING DOG.

A red-nosed man was making his way up Alabama street, Atlanta, heading for a bar-room, with a thin, yellow dog, affectionately following after him.

"Look at that dog," said Bailiff Nig Simpson. "That's a smart dog."

"Why?" was the natural question, there being nothing in the dog's appearance to indicate as much.

"Just watch now. The dog follows that fellow into stores and houses upstairs and down, through all sorts of weather, just like he is following him now. If that fellow ever gets drunk and falls off the bridge, the dog will fall off too. If the fellow ever gets run over by a train, the dog will too. But he won't go into that bar-room. He knows a bar-room as well as I do, and you can't force him into one. He'll stay outside and wait, and you can nearly always locate that fellow by standing at the corner of Alabama and Pryor and looking both ways till you see that dog in front of a bar-room, waiting. Now watch him."

The red-nosed man went on into the bar-room. The dog looked up sorrowfully at the windows, just as if he were reading the sign, and then settled himself disconsolately upon his haunches at the edge of the sidewalk. He gazed at the door in gloomy, mournful expectancy, never once tak his eyes away. He waited for fully ten minutes, and then when the man came out the dog resumed his place following at his heels.—Savannah News.

BENEATH THE GROOMING.

Tom Marshall, the brilliant Kentucky lawyer, in an after-dinner speech, once told a story which has a significance.

"My father, like all Kentuckians," he said, loved a good horse. When I was a little shaver of eight he bade me choose a pony for myself. I took a fat, shiny fellow, short winded and vicious. 'Ha, Tom,' he said, 'never choose a horse by his coat. His groom gives him that. Look beneath it for the real animal.' I have since learned never to choose a friend, either man or horse, by his coat or his manners. I go beneath the grooming."

Boys and girls are apt to judge of each other and of adults by some factitious accident which does not at all affect the character.

A teacher with a nose too big or too small for her face sometimes loses, for that reason, much of her influence over her more frivolous pupils, and a flaming head of hair has made the first year of school lonely and friendless for many a sensitive boy.

Carlyle wrote a whole book to prove that rank, birth, even education were but so many outer skins or "old clothes" beneath which we must look to find the real man.

If we do not judge of the staying power or temper of a horse by the satiny skin, which is the result of careful grooming, why should we like this man or dislike that because of their clothes or the house in which they live or the social rank into which they were born?—Youth's Companion.

TEMPERANCE.

IS BEER A WHOLESOME DRINK?

This question seems an unreasonable one in a total abstinence journal, but, says the Oak and Ivy Leaf, in order that our readers may have the benefit of experts on this subject, the following valuable testimonies have been culled from many sources. It is well to have ready answers to this question, and such as will be respected, for we are all constantly meeting it in one form or another. Thousands of temperate people are honestly deluded into believing that beer has medicinal properties and use it in the vain hope of renewing strength and building up tissue. To such spread the evidence of the following physicians:

"Alcohol is a poison. In chemistry and physiology this is its proper place."—Dr. Jas. Miller.

"All writers on materia medica now rank alcohol among the most powerful and fatal of narcotic vegetable poisons."—Dr. C. A. Lee.

In drinking twenty glasses of beer a man takes from one to two glasses of this poison. Besides this ingredient, beer contains the extract of hops which Hooper, in Medical Dictionary, says is "highly intoxicating."

"In addition to alcohol, which is universally acknowledged to be a poison, beer contains a narcotic principle derived from the hop, which can never be habitually taken, even in small quantity, without injury."—Dr. R. D. Mussy.

"The average quantity of hop used in the manufacture of beer is an ounce to a gallon of beer, or two pounds to a barrel."—Morrice on Brewing.

Dr. Chas. A. Lee, of New York, observes: "As a general rule I do not hesitate to aver as my settled conviction, that malt liquors are more deleterious in their effect on the system than ardent spirits. The latter are simply alcohol and water, perhaps slightly flavored; the former are deleterious compounds of alcohol, narcotic poisons, and mineral substances."

A medical journal calls attention to the relative evils resulting from the use of whisky and beer, and decides the latter the more injurious of the two. It says: "A whisky drinker will commit murder only under the direct excitement of liquor; a beer-drinker is capable of doing it in cold blood."

Judge White, of Pittsburg, has written a letter in which he says: "From thirteen years' experience in the criminal court I am thoroughly convinced that there are far more evils resulting from the use of beer than from whisky."

Sometime before his death, Mr. D. R. Locke—Nasby—interviewed a number of the leading physicians of Toledo, Ohio, as to the effects of beer on the drinker. The following are among their statements:

Dr. S. H. Bergen: "It kills quicker than any other liquor. Pneumonia, pleurisy, fever, etc., have a first mortgage on the beer-drinker."

Dr. S. S. Thorne: "In regard to surgical operations every physician dreads to have anything to do with beer-drinkers. It is dangerous for a beer-drinker even to cut his finger."

Dr. M. H. Parmalee: "Beer is worse than whisky, the hops contained in the beer producing congestion of the liver, dyspepsia, and kindred diseases. Habitual beer-drinkers seem to have no constitutional power to resist disease."

Dr. W. T. Ridenour: "Beer-drinkers are very liable to die of pneumonia, and when a confirmed beer-drinker takes pneumonia he dies."

Dr. S. S. Lungren: "Every part of the body of a confirmed beer-drinker becomes loaded down with morbid and poisonous matter, and every part will soon fall into ruin and decay."

Dr. J. T. Woods: "Lager beer, if used at all, should be used as a medicine, as ipecac, quinine, rhubarb and strychnine."

Col. Green, President Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, says: "What beer may be and what it may do in other countries and climates, I do not know from observation. That in this country and climate its use is an evil only less than the use of whisky, if less on the whole, and that its effects are longer delayed, not so immediate and obviously bad, its incidents not so repulsive, but destructive in the end, I have seen abundant proof. In one of our largest cities containing a great population of beer-drinkers, I had occasion to note the deaths among a large group of persons, whose habits in their own eyes, and in those of their friends and physicians were temperate; but they were habitual users of beer. When the observation began they were something under middle age, and they were, of course, selected lives. For two or three years there was nothing very remarkable to be noted among this group. Presently, death began to strike it; and until it had dwindled to a fraction of its original proportions, the mortality in it was astonishing in extent, and still more remarkable in the manifest identity of cause and mode. There was no mistaking it; the history was almost invariable; robust, apparent health, full muscles, a fair outside, increasing weight, florid faces; then a touch of cold or a sniff of malaria, and instantly some acute disease, with almost invariable typhoid symptoms, was in violent action, and ten days or less ended it. It was as if the system had been kept fair outside while within it was eaten to a shell; and at the first touch of disease there was utter collapse—every fibre was poisoned and weak. And this, in its main features, varying, of course, in degree, has been my observation of beer-drinkers everywhere."

ONE WAY TO CLOSE A SALOON.

At Terre Haute, Ind., Sept. 20, an attempt was made to blow up the saloon and grocery of Isadore Mulvaney, at Sandford, with dynamite. The doors and windows were shattered and the bar fixtures badly damaged. There is no clue to the perpetrators. The Mulvaney saloon has borne a bad reputation for some time, and a murder which was committed in the saloon recently aroused the citizens. They got up a remonstrance against granting the place a license, which had its effect with the county commissioner. Mulvaney appealed the case to a higher court and the continuance of business pending a final disposition enraged those opposed to the saloon, and the work of yesterday morning is the result.

The Pope has been ordered to drink beer instead of wine, and a quantity of bottles have been ordered from Vienna. It seems that the Pope's beer is to be prepared differently from the ordinary German beer. The Austrians are reported to be in high glee at the honor of thus providing for the Pope's table.

Religious News.

—The eighteenth Annual State Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of Illinois, will be held in Englewood, near Chicago, October 8th to 12th. Among those who are expected to be present and assist in the program are Rev. W. S. Marquis, of Rock Island, Rev. Robt. F. Coyle, of Chicago, Mr. H. F. Williams, of the Young Men's Era, and Mr. John R. Mott, International College Secretary.

—Three Sabbath conventions are to be held in Burlington, Iowa, October 21, 22, and 23. The first is the regular meeting of First Congressional District of Iowa. The second the annual convention of the Iowa Sabbath Association, and the third a convention of the Seventh District of the American Sabbath Union, which district comprises, Iowa, Minnesota, the Dakotas, Nebraska, Kansas and Missouri. Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts will be present as a leader in this convention, and such speakers as Rev. Drs. Herrick Johnson and P. S. Henson of Chicago and Dr. George P. Hays of Kansas City are expected.

—Africa has now within her borders 10 American, 12 British, and 13 continental missionary societies. There are more than 700 ordained missionaries, and more than 7,000 native preachers. It is estimated that there are, both white and native, about 175,000 communicants, and 800,000 adherents.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

—It is reported that there are 3,000 Japanese in this country, of whom 2,000 have been baptized by missionaries in their own land, or since they came to the United States.

—The last census in New Zealand reveals the interesting fact of a profession of religion on the part of no less than 95 per cent of the whole population.

—A society in Scotland, the Ayrshire Christian Union, has undertaken the work of sending out young men to Southern Morocco, to become missionaries after the plans advocated by Rev. E. F. Baldwin, going forth two by two, without purse or scrip, according to Matt. 10: 9, 10.

—Dr. W. M. Taylor, of New York, is paid $16,000 a year, the largest salary paid to any Congregational minister. Three in Brooklyn, viz: Drs. Lyman Abbott, Storrs, and Behrends, receive $10,000 each.

—It is feared that the rise in the price of silver may unfavorably affect foreign missions. For example, the treasurer of the Presbyterian Board states the advance in the rates on China has forced him to add about 15 per cent to his estimates based on the old rates of exchange, while in India a bill of £500, which yielded in April 6,832 silver rupees, in July yielded only 5,140, and at the present time yields still less. Similar reports come from the American Board and from the missionary society of the Methodist Episcopal church. The latter society estimates that the advance caused by the new silver law will cost it not less than $40,000.

—A missionary writes: "Evangelization among the South Sea Islands has been largely carried on by native converts. It is wonderful to see their devotion to the work. Hundreds have sacrificed their lives to carry the Gospel to the heathen. Sixty from one church in the Harvey group have been killed while acting as missionaries."

—In the Michigan conference of Methodist ministers a resolution was adopted requiring Rev. Washington Gardner, nominee on the Republican ticket for Secretary of State, and J. W. Reed, chairman of the State central committee of the Prohibition party, to withdraw either from the ministry or from politics. The passage of the resolution was by a bare majority vote. The discussion was turbulent and somewhat sensational.

—The novel sight of a native Chinaman, Christianized, but dressed in full Oriental costume, with a queue and shaven head, occupying a pulpit and preaching a sermon, was presented lately, at the Church of the Strangers, New York. The preacher's name, in his own language, is Tsche She Dge; the name given to him in baptism, and by which he is known now, is Charles W. Marshall. He was baptized and received into the Christian faith more than twenty years ago, and since then has done effective missionary work in China. The Tribune says his sermon was delivered in good English, and in it he gave a brief outline of his missionary work in China, the difficulties he encountered, often being in danger of his life, and the subsequent success attending his efforts. In Cucao, he said, twenty years ago it was not safe for a foreigner preaching the Gospel to show himself. He did so at the risk of his life. "Now there are churches of the true God in that city, as well as hospitals and schools. Often the preacher was without a congregation in his early days of missionary work, and was truly thankful when he could get a half-dozen together to sing and pray with. He prophesied the embracing of Christianity by the Chinese people at no distant day."

—It is somewhat singular, remarks the Congregationalist, that two men so well known as Prof. Drummond and Secretary Wishard of the Intercollegiate Y. M. C. A. should be on their way around the world at the same time, though in opposite directions, each with the purpose of interesting the young men of all nations in the Christian life, and of the Scotch professor, says further: "He has been spending three months in Australia, conducting meetings with the students there, and is expecting to reach Japan about the first of September, where he will spend a month addressing the college men in Tokio and Kioto, and will sail from New York, October 26, in season for the opening of his college at Glasgow. Mr. Wishard, on the other hand, started westward, going first to Japan; and he has latterly been in India and China. These two gentlemen met in the harbor of Colombo, Ceylon, clasped hands, and went forward with fresh cheer to their respective work. Truly the Christian life of the colleges in America and Great Britain is, through its representatives, influencing bodies of students around the globe. During the past summer there were no less than five conferences of Christian college students, three in America, one in Japan, one in Sweden, and probably a sixth in England. God speed the work for college men."

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

—Duelling in German universities has been abolished by order of the Emperor.

—In New York City there are 20,000 children for whom no school sittings are provided.

—Dr. J. T. McMichael of Monmouth College lately visited Rev. J. B. Galloway, of Vernon, Wis. On his return home he stepped into the office of the college treasurer and handed over a check for $1,000, given him as a donation to the college by a friend of the college in Vernon congregation.

—The fall term of Amity College, College Springs, Iowa, opened Sept. 2nd, with an enrollment the first week of 130 which has grown to 140 and will probably reach 150 soon. Dr. Kennedy, the president, expects to spend the winter in the South, and has leave of absence for a year.

—The new building of the Chicago Theological Seminary was occupied by the students on Saturday last. The old buildings, Keyes and Carpenter Halls' are fairly filled by students in the foreign departments.

—A theological seminary for the instruction of young men of Scandinavian origin will shortly be established by Paster P. C. Trandberg, late professor of Norse languages in the Chicago Theological Seminary. Prof. Trandberg, during his ministry in Denmark, was prominently identified with the free-church movement. He has been a resident of Chicago since 1882.

—The number of school buildings in the United States in use for public schools is 119,063, employing 347,292 teachers, of whom 28,314 are males. The average monthly salaries of the male teachers is $41.71 and of the female instructors $34.21.

—There are 147,516 children in the municipal or State schools of Paris; 61,294 in schools directed by religious orders; and 33,000 in free lay schools where religious instruction is given. It is also stated that attendance at municipal schools has increased by only about 700 in the last three years. The annual expenditures for the municipal schools is 26,500,000 francs.

—It is stated that Germany, acknowledged as having an unrivaled system of higher education, has, seemingly, no heart for the training of women beyond the elementary and normal school branches. While all the other nations of prominence in Europe, with the exception of Russia, have opened their universities to women, Germany has grudgingly granted them only the privileges of "visitors," not of matriculation, examination, or admission to degrees.

—Mrs. David Brown, of Princeton, N. J., in addition to her gifts to Princeton College, is erecting a fine chapel for Lincoln University. It will be in the Gothic style and built of pressed brick, with sandstone finish. The seating capacity will be nearly a thousand.

—The University of Illinois at Champaign, has a very large attendance this year. About 160 new students have entered this fall, swelling the number to 500. Dr. Selim H. Peabody is yet at the head of this popular institution, from which he has kept off the college secret society pest.

—Miss Lillian Blanche Fearing, the only lady in this year's graduating class at the Union College of Law in Chicago, is entirely blind. Her mother has been her constant companion during her course, and read from the books to her. It is no small honor, under the circumstances, that Miss Fearing was ranked as one of the four students whose record was so nearly equal that the committee appointed to award the scholarship prize of fifty dollars, decided to divide it among the four. The class had more than fifty members. Miss Fearing was admitted to the Illinois bar by the Supreme Court at Springfield, June 10.

—Professor W. W. Moore, who occupies the chair of Hebrew and Old Testament interpretation at Union Theological Seminary, Hamton-Sidney, Virginia, is to lecture during the month of August at the Bible Institute in Chicago, which is a part of the Chicago Evangelization Society organized by Mr. Moody. Prof. Moore, who is well known in the South as a man of eminent scholarship, has just returned from a visit to the Northfield Conference, where his addresses were exceedingly impressive, and students in attendance at Chicago have had thorough and stimulating instruction.

Literature.

Reformation Principles, stated and applied. By Rev. J. M. Foster, District Secretary to the National Reform Association. Pp. 448. Price $1.50. F. H. Revell, Chicago.

The readers of the Cynosure who have become familiar with the vigorous style of Mr. Foster will wish to place this book on their tables. As pastor and lecturer he has become familiar with a vivid and illustrative style which becomes very effective in an argument upon such topics as "The Moral Responsibility and Accountability of Nations;" Civil Government God's Moral Ordinance;" "Civil Authority from God, Proved from Nature, Scripture and History;" "Sabbath Reform;" "Divorce Reform;" "The Mediatorial Dominion of Christ;" "Christ's Headship over His Church;" "Relation of Church and State;" "The Rich and Poor, or the Labor Problem." Mr. Foster often writes eloquently, and he knows how to use a quotation so as to enhance its beauty and value as well as his own argument. He uses these best thoughts of other writers according to the remark of Dr. Donne, "Willing to go all the way with company, and to take light from others, as well on the journey as at the journey's end." The full list of topics discussed was lately given in this department, and need not be repeated. They include some of the most engaging themes that could be named to a Christian patriot. And in the present hour when such questions as the Bible in schools, the preservation of the Sabbath and the outlawing of the saloon are becoming foremost topics, this contribution to the discussion is very welcome. It may fairly be objected that in a few instances Mr. Foster's frankly stated views will be found too warmly filled with sympathy for the old Covenanter traditions to be approved in our more liberal day; but yet a restatement of these strong doctrines, which have in past years been meat for strong minds, will benefit the American reader. On the whole we wish to highly commend the volume to all American readers.

Scribner's Magazine for October contains articles of life and adventure in unusual places and circumstances. Herbert Laws Webb, who writes "With a Cable Expedition," was a member of the technical staff of a cableship, and from full experience describes the unique life on one of these vessels, which combines the "adventures of voyaging with operations demanding the highest scientific skill and knowledge, and with the most ingenious mechanical work." "The City House in the West" is contributed to the "Home" series by John W. Root, a leading architect of Chicago, who is thoroughly acquainted with the rapid development of the taste for good art in house-building in Western cities. Mr. Zogbaum's second article on the New Navy pictures life with the White "Squadron" in ports of the Mediterranean—Lisbon, Gibraltar, Tangier—each with its strange people, bizarre costumes, and peculiar life. Rev. Newman Smyth contributes "The Lake Country of New England" —an illustrated account of camping and canoeing in the Maine Wilderness in the lakes and streams about Mt. Ktaadn—down the West Branch and through Ripogenus. Mrs. Sylvanus Reed, who, after a successful career of a quarter of a century, has retired from the active management of a famous school, contributes "The Private School for Girls," an earnest explanation of the principles and aims which guided her in building up a school for "American girls of the highest class." Professor N. S. Shaler writes a second paper on "Nature and Man in America."

The Converted Catholic for September reports the Northfield conference which the editor, Rev. Mr. O'Connor, attended. Rev. Thomas Connellan of Ireland, who has written voluminously on the Catholic question, contributes an article on "How Catholics can be Saved." Bro. Gladwin, the Bombay missionary, writes of Catholicism on the Pacific Coast. "Gen. Lafayette's Warnings," "What is a Cardinal" and "The Church of Rome not the Church of Christ," are other articles of general value.

Dr. Brand, pastor of the old First Church in Oberlin, and successor of President Finney in that capacity, some time since prepared an essay on the tobacco habit, for the Advance of this city. The subject is treated carefully and fully in its various bearings on health, morals, cost, the effect on society at large, etc. The Advance publishes this able discussion of the weed in small pamphlet form for 5 cents per copy.

The Organ, published by Geo. Molineux, No. 106 14th St., New York, is published every two months, and contains a choice selection of selections for the reed or pipe organ, suitable for church or home use.

The Missionary Review of the World for October, opens with a scathing article on Cardinal Lavigerie and his Anti-slavery Crusade, by Rev. J. C. Bracq. Dr. Ellinwood follows with a graphic sketch of a Foreign Missionary of Old Testament Times. Prof. Hulbert of Seoul gives a fascinating and thrillingly interesting story of the introduction of Christianity into Korea by Roman Catholic Missionaries, many of whom suffered martyrdom for the faith. Undenominational Mission Work is a timely and able presentation of that subject, by Rev. James F. Riggs. The Prayer for Laborers, by Dr. Pierson, will touch many a heart and ought to evoke much earnest prayer. Dr. Laurie presents cogent reasons to show that the Results of Modern Missions will be permanent. That veteran African missionary, Lewis Grout, contributes a valuable article on Mahdism and Missions in the Soudan. The sad fate of several of the Soudan pioneers on their way to Soudan will add tragic interest to this article. Dr. Starbuck gives us the cream of all the Foreign Missionary Periodicals culled and put into English. Besides these papers in the literature section, we have a highly valuable sketch of the Foreign Missions of the Moravian Church, by the secretary of that Society in the U. S., and a terse and pretty full description of Missions and Sects in the Turkish Empire, by Secretary Ellinwood of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. It is a fresh and grand number, and proves that the cause of missions is alive and progressing the world over.

The September Statesman opens with a paper by Hon. Albert Griffin, in which he attempts an answer to the charges that unworthy means were used to secure President Harrison's election. He will be answered by J. Fanning in the October number, who will defend these charges. Charles Ferguson discusses "the heart of the nation" in which he holds that in every nation there is a central organism in the shape of a great city, whence flows its life. The heart of this nation he finds in Chicago. John Cameron Simonds writes against centralism in government. Pres. Charles A. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, discusses the Election's Bill; and the contribution of David D. Thompson in his History of Labor gives an account of the Knights of Labor movement.

The American Garden for September is a number of peculiar interest. "Then and now on the Farm" is excellent reading for the discontented farmer, who may find his reasons for fretfulness vanishing as he reads how his grand-father had to manage. But the various articles on the strawberry and the cactus with their illustrations will attract every reader. Vegetable gardening and flower raising as occupations for women are discussed in an entertaining way.

The Sanitary Era of New York commends highly the Hyatt Pure Water system, for the filtration of water for domestic purposes It is used by a number of cities and towns with success, and is warmly commended.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

Distress After Eating

Sick Headache

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would have a faint or tired all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." George A. Page, Watertown, Mass.

HOME AND HEALTH.

DRESS.

Know ye not that your bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost?

According to Carlyle, "the first purpose of clothes was not warmth or decency, but ornament. The first spiritual want of a barbarous man is decoration, as, indeed, we still see among the barbarous classes in civilized countries." If this be true, how many richly-bedecked are yet, at heart, uncivilized!

What is the true purpose of clothing? First, to keep the body warm and decent while allowing freedom of motion.

Second, to preserve and enhance grace and beauty.

Those who give the second requisite of dress the place of the first, wrong themselves under a mistaken conception of beauty, for beauty implies fitness, proportion and harmony. Fashion is evanescent; beauty permanent. One is man-made, the other God-made. It is the outward form of internal loveliness. True, the expression may exist without the principle. In that case it is a veneer, a mock, a sham. Not in externals alone ought the temple of the Holy Ghost to be fair and pure. Away in the depths of the soul let there be obedience to the laws of existence, and the body shall wear its garments, be they serge or velvet, as a queen wears her robes of state. She who thinks otherwise values a counterfeit more than the gold it simulates.

While hygienic dress is gaining ground, the compressed waist is still seen. The shoulders are thrown forward and upward, making a sharp angle at the belt, so that the figure is stiff as a milliner's block. All this is as destructive to artistic beauty as to health. Of all the crimes committed by Catherine de Medici that of inventing the corset was the worst. Made of steel like a soldier's coat of mail and secured under the left arm by a hasp and pin, it was the prototype of the glove-fitting corset of to-day, which is yet slaying its thousands. No matter how loosely it is fastened, the stiff bones press into the soft, elastic cartilages, forcing the ribs upon the vital organs underneath, which prevents the circulation of blood and nerve matter, and so helps bring on every form of disease to which woman is subject. A woman of forty, with plenty of flesh upon her bones, may wear a corset if she will; a growing girl dons one at her peril.

In fact, tight dress is the bane of womanhood. From her hair screwed into a wad upon the top of the head, leaving bare the delicate nerves at the base of the brain, to her skin-tight boots, woman knows nothing of freedom. Her arms are pinned to her side, her waist compressed by gathers and bands, her limbs entangled by fold upon fold, till her feet forget how to carry a body so pinched and distorted. A grand, heroic soul, instinct with life and power, needs an untrammeled frame, like that of the Venus de Milo.

It takes but little knowledge of physiology to learn that blood-vessels and nerves enfeebled from any cause can no longer obey the bidding of mind. Fainting fits, rush of blood to the head, short breath, bad breath, neuralgia, internal displacements, irregularities and congestions, low spirits, peevishness and chronic invalidism are the result.

"Would you have us look like frights?" pouts Daisy or Jennie upon reading these words. "Every girl wants to look stylish, you know."

Ah! that word "stylish," how much wretchedness it has to answer for! But, Daisy, you can look stylish and yet wear healthful clothing. Let us see how.

In the first place, beg, buy or borrow a pattern of one of those combination undergarments which covers the entire person from neck to ankles so as to preserve uniform warmth. They come ready-made in cotton and woolen, or they can be made at home. They dispense with bands and gathers, and so allow the overdress to fit neatly.

Over this wear a corded bodice, fitting easily and loosely, so that you can breathe away down to the bottom of the lungs. Just below the waist line sew on two rows of buttons with four in each row. To these, button a short muslin underskirt, and outside of that another, thick or thin, according to the season. Then come the stockings, also suspended from the waist buttons, compelling the shoulders to carry all the weight of the clothing. Could horses or oxen pull from a band fastened just above the hips? Neither should human beings.

In cold weather leggings should be worn, and over all shoes large enough to fit the feet; that is, following their outlines. The common sense shoe with a moderate heel is good. This style of boot allows a free circulation of the blood, and distributes heat, keeping the extremities warm, and so preventing those congestions which cause untold agony and a train of diseases. Then follow alcoholic medication and the whole system of artificial and perverted habits.

In making outer garments no modiste should be allowed to plait and drape fabrics upon heavy foundations and finish them with weighty trimmings, till the wearer could as easily walk when loaded down with a convict's chain and ball. So to do is rank blasphemy against the Holy Ghost within the temple which is desecrated when made unfit for its purpose.—Hester M. Poole in the Union Signal.

REMARKABLE OFFER!

Nearly everyone is familiar with the name, but it has been estimated that only one in every two hundred and eighty persons in the United States is fortunate enough to have access to the valuable information contained within the covers of the grandest work ever written by mortal man,

Webster's

UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words, we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent.

Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and seventy-five cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

In Brief.

Judge Ferguson, of Philadelphia, has, it is stated, decided that shaving on Sunday is not a work of necessity under the law, and barber-shops must be closed on that day.

Chicago has 365½ miles of street railway,—a mile for each day in the year. This closely approaches the mileage in New York, and in less than a year the extent of our system will exceed that of the Eastern metropolis by many miles.

During the year 1889 there were carried over the elevated railroads of New York 182,413,987 passengers, not one of whom was injured by carelessness or other fault of the management. This is certainly a wonderful showing and affords a marked contrast to the accidents associated with surface travel.

The tower of the Philadelphia City Hall is now 335 feet high, yet on the top of that 8,000 tons of iron and bronze are to be placed. There is to be a clock tower, the dials of which are to be twenty-seven feet in diameter, surmounted by a statue of William Penn, thirty-seven feet high, and there will be numerous other statues.

A powerful movement is on foot among the more intelligent Hindoos to put a stop to the evils of child-marriage. One of the worst forms of girl-marriage in India is known as "marrying girls to the gods." This means slavery to the priests, many of whom live upon the immorality of their girl-wives. Hundreds of thousands of children of twelve and thirteen are wives and mothers in India. The educated and intelligent natives of Madras favor fixing the age of marriage at fourteen years.

Emperor William made an important speech at a banquet at Breslau Saturday night, Sept. 20. In the course of his remarks, he said he hoped that other provinces would imitate Silesia in regard to the improving of the condition of workingmen. He agreed with the Liberals, who declared that state coercion was not the right way to oppose social democracy, and that society must help itself. Social reforms, he said, could only be introduced by the citizens themselves. He trusted the people would awake from their lethargy and not leave it to the state to struggle against perversive elements.

The residents of Mentor, Ind., are greatly excited over a mysterious disease which baffles the physicians and is about to annihilate the family of George Davidson, a popular citizen here. Last Tuesday the 7-year old daughter was taken ill and in eight hours died. An hour later a 9-year-old son was attacked and died in eight hours. Next day his only remaining children, three in number, were attacked one after another and died. All the physicians in the neighborhood admit they never saw anything like it and do not know what it was or how to treat it. So great is the sorrow and agitation of Mr. and Mrs. Davidson that it is feared they will not escape the fate of their children.

The interstate commerce commission gives some interesting labor data respecting the railroads in the United States. The statistics embrace 609 roads and 153,308 miles of railway. It appears that for every 100 miles of line in the union 459 men are employed, whereas in England for every 100 miles of line the number of employes is far greater. This shows one of two things. Either Americans are more capable and can do more than the average old country employe, or else the railroads are better kept up in England than they are in America, and employes are not worked so many hours, and the railroads here are insufficiently manned. One thing is certain—labor there does not cost as much as here. The total number of railway employes in the union is 704,743. Supposing each man's labor supports four individuals, including himself, we have an army of nearly 3,000,000 people directly maintained by the railroads. There are some figures not pleasant to read. During 1889 1,972 railway employes were killed in the United States and 20,028 were injured. That is to say, one employe out of every 357 was killed during 1889, and one out of every 35 was injured. This is frightful to contemplate. It looks like recklessness somewhere that is nothing less than criminal. The ratio of railway employes killed and injured in Great Britain falls much below these figures.

The most generally useful medicine is Ayer's Pills. As a remedy for the various diseases of the stomach, liver, and bowels, these Pills have no equal. Their sugar-coating causes them not only to be easy and pleasant to take, but preserves their medicinal integrity in all climates and for any reasonable length of time. The best family medicine, Ayer's Pills are, also, unsurpassed for the use of travelers, soldiers, sailors, campers, and pioneers. In some of the most critical cases, when all other remedies have failed, prove effective.

"In the summer of 1864 I was sent to the Annapolis hospital, suffering with chronic diarrhea. While there, I became so reduced in strength that I could not speak and was compelled to write everything I wanted to say. I was then having some 25 or 30 stools per day. The doctors ordered a medicine that I was satisfied would be of no benefit to me. I did not take it, but persuaded my nurse to get me some of Dr. Ayer's Pills. About two o'clock in the afternoon I took six of these pills, and by midnight began to feel better. In the morning the doctors came again, and after deciding that my symptoms were more favorable, gave me a different medicine, which I did not use, but took four more of the pills instead. The next day the doctors came to see me, and thought I was doing nicely, (and so did I). I then took one pill a day for a week. At the end of that time, I considered myself cured and that Ayer's Pills had saved my life. I was then weak, but had no return of the disease, and gained in strength as fast as could be expected."—F. C. Luce, Late Lieut. 56th Regt. Mass. Vol. Infantry.

"Ayer's Pills are

I have ever used for headaches, and they act like a charm in relieving any disagreeable sensation in the stomach after eating."—Mrs. M. J. Ferguson, Pullens, Va.

"I was a sufferer for years from dyspepsia and liver troubles, and found no permanent relief until I commenced taking Ayer's Pills. They have effected a complete cure."—George W. Mooney, Walla Walla, W. T.

We're both honest. Let us come together. You try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. If it doesn't do as represented, you get your money again.

The many remarkable cures of catarrh effected by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla is conclusive proof that this loathsome and dangerous disease is one of the blood, only needing such a searching and powerful alterative to thoroughly eradicate it.

The anti-slavery conference was opened in Paris Monday. President Keller welcomed the delegates. His welcome to the British delegates was especially warm. Great Britain, he said, was a great nation and had done much for civilization. He declated that the Mohammedan religion was incapable of civilizing Africa, and that only Christian missionaries could elevate the blacks. He urged the Congress to arouse such a movement throughout the world as would definitely end slavery.

So careful were the officials of the safety of the czar that at one point on the route a large number of passengers were locked up in a train for seven hours until the imperial train had passed.

The German authorities at Ragamoyo, Zanzibar, have published a notice permitting everybody to engage freely in the slave traffic, and only prohibiting the exportation of slaves by sea. The Arab slave dealers are also authorized to recover runaways. The Arabs are overjoyed at the license thus afforded them and are openly buying slaves at street auctions. In consequence of this action of the German officials an influx of Arab slave dealers is expected.

The Corn palace at Sioux City, Iowa, which is noticed elsewhere in this number; the Coal palace at Ottumwa, Iowa; and the Hay palace at Momence, Ill., are several advertisements to all the world of the prolific lands in which we have our homes. These structures are all of massive proportions and unique design, and each contains a valuable exhibit of machinery and the products of the neighboring regions. Truly this is "a land which the Lord God careth for: the eyes of the Lord thy God are upon it from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year." Deut. 11: 12.

The work on the railway around the rapids of the Congo, from opposite Vivi to Stanley Pool, began last spring; and while the great continent is being penetrated from the west by the iron lines, on the east a railway was begun about the same time from Mombasa on the main land opposite Zanzibar to the great lake Victoria Nyanza. Forty miles of this line was lately opened for traffic, and the occasion was officially recognized. These lines of travel must help redeem Africa,—our children will not hear of the "Dark Continent." They must be highways for our God. Only as such can the true light banish the darkness from the minds of Africa's millions.

Old soldiers, writing in the Inter Ocean, say that a Pennsylvania company was captured by a rebel colonel Polk at the opening of the battle of Gettysburg. Being pushed by the Union forces, so that he could not get away with the prisoners, this Col. Polk ordered them shot and eleven were killed and twenty-seven wounded. This man, L. L. Polk, of North Carolina, say these old soldiers, is now at the head of the secret National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, and his vice-president is B. F. Clover, of Kansas, an old member of the Knights of the Golden Circle, who was arrested in 1863 with Vallandigham. If this letter be true, our honest farmers are following a precious set of fellows into their secret lodge. Let them remember "old dog Tray," and that such company is always to be found in secret societies.

HON. EDWARD EVERETT.

ELIOT PROFESSOR OF GREEK LITERATURE AT HARVARD FROM 1815 TO 1825.

In connection with John Quincy Adams and the venerable John Quincy, Mr. Everett used his influence effectually to throw open the secret conclaves of students' fraternatics. He had much influence with the Phi Beta Kappa society, and the New England Magazine of September, 1833, thus mentions the result of his advice against its secret ritual:

"The mysterious name, oaths and injunction of secrecy, hieroglyphical characters, grips, medals and ribbons, appeared to him so exceedingly useless, that at his instance a special meeting was called, at which the secret character of the society was changed and the door of mystery unclosed."

Mr. Everett's opinion of the lodge system and especially of Freemasonry given in a public letter July 15, of the same year, reads in part as follows:

" 'The supremacy of the laws' is the fundamental principel of civil society. 'The allegiance due to his country is the highest human obligation' of all men who enter into civil society; and I conceive the institution of Freemasonry, in its tendency, to be at war with both these principles. With respect to this institution, I came to the conclusion, and expressed it repeatedly in public, several years before the present controversy arose, that its pretensions to antiquity are unfounded. It is probably the growth of the last century and a half. It has frequently been admitted to me, by respectable members of the society, that it is useless; and that as such it had better be abolished. Its only avowed objects—charity and knowledge—can be much better promoted by public associations. If it be useless, it must be worse than useless, because it occasions a waste of all the time, attention and money necessary to keep up its organization. The titular and ceremonial parts of it, as displayed before the public, appear to me strangely at variance with good taste, particularly in a republican country.

"But the great objections to the institution lie much deeper. All secret societies are dangerous, in proportion to the extent of their organization, and the number of their members. A secret society, so widely diffused and connected as this, puts a vast power, capable of the most dangerous abuse, into hands irresponsible to the public. The secret ceremonies and rites, as they have been disclosed, appear to me, on many grounds, highly objectionable, and the oaths and obligations are open to the most weighty exceptions, on the score of religion, morals and good sense."

The Bible-in-Schools movement among the Christian women of Chicago grows apace. At an adjourned meeting in Farwell Hall last week 5,000 names were reported on the petition. When presented at the churches hundreds signed. One lady obtained nearly a thousand signatures, and it is said that many Catholic parents are exercising the American privilege of the right of petition. A fortunate opposition has arisen among the so-called socialists, who, at their Sunday meeting, denounced the work of the good women in a series of resolutions which affirm that it is the business of socialists to raise society to a higher plane of morality, that secularism is the soil for the highest development, etc. Such opposition is to be welcomed, as a proof that the movement is in the right direction.

COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES.

BY REV. A. A. SMITH, D.D., LATE PRESIDENT OF NORTHWESTERN COLLEGE.

I have no personal acquaintance with college secret societies. I have never been connected with one as student or teacher; indeed, in my sixty years' experience as a teacher I could not have consented to teach where such societies existed. It is not my purpose to dwell at length upon the doings of these societies, for the reason that they are the natural result of the secretive principle on which they are based. The foolish and sometimes brutal initiatory ceremonies; the solemn pledge—sometimes profane oath—of secrecy; the waste of time and money; the midnight carousals, and the disturbance of the public peace which they occasion; their divisions, attended with trickery, wire-working, and the lowest kind of chicanery; the violations of college law, and sometimes of civil law by which they are characterized,—all these things are but the legitimate results of the fundamental principle, adopted as the basis of action.

In the days of slavery many fixed their attention upon the cruelties inflicted upon the slaves, such as the use of the lash, the branding iron, the gag, and the thumb-screw, and regarded these as constituting the great sin of slave-holding. Some thought if they could show that the slaves were well used, all objections against slavery would be removed; but those who took a proper view of slavery regarded the sin of slave-holding as consisting, not in these things, but, in the reduction of a human being to a thing,—the holding an immortal being as property. These cruelties were but the incidents of this "sum of all villainies," but the excrescences of the deadly upas tree. So we may say, the rowdyism, the brutal ceremonies, the midnight carousals, and the political scheming of these societies do not constitute the chief objection to them; but the great objection is their secrecy, which makes these deeds of darkness possible, and which has a tendency to corrupt those who thus associate, and to change their whole life, which should be that of frank truthfulness, into a lie or a series of deceptions.

A professor in one of our colleges, says of secret societies that "they cause a great waste of money and of time, stimulate petty intrigues, etc., and he continues:

"Yet it is not their secrecy which makes them an evil. . . . . It is what is known about these societies, not their secrets, nor their secret doings, which works evil among us. With regard to the influence of these societies on the intellectual standiug of those who compose them, I may say that about half of them promote intellectual activity, and would be a blessing to the college if they could be made truly secret and the rest could be destroyed without destroying them. But the other half are inert, existing mainly, so far as any results appear, for lounging, gossip, and college politics, with scarcely enough of intellectual occupation to serve as a feeble apology for their existence."

To my mind there are two strange things in these statements of the professor. The first is, that he can see no evil in secrecy when half the societies waste their time, and worse than waste their time; the second is, that it is the exposure of their secret doings which works evil, not their secrecy. A strange position for a professor. Students often take that position. Those who are inclined to violate college laws are very apt to think that the exposure of their misdemeanors is the great evil.

At a boarding school in Ohio, a student went out one night to the bee-hives of a citizen to steal some honey. The owner learning that some one was at his bee-hives, and suspecting students, called up a professor, who soon ascertained who was the guilty one. The criminal, without returning to his room, left for his home about thirty or forty miles away. A day or two after, a student, talking upon the subject with the professor, said with an expression of disgust in his tone, "What a fool he was to be found out." "What a fool he was to do the deed, to steal;" said the professor, "that is the folly of the transaction."

Not unfrequently a student of loose habits, when called to account for some misdemeanor, will meet the accusation with the question, "Who told you?" and perhaps accompany the question with a threat against the supposed informer. Now, it must be evident that the cultivation of such a secretive disposition among young men at college, stands in the way of the formation of a truly manly character.

A feeling of antagonism towards teachers often exists among students. In many of our colleges the so-called "code of honor" finds place. "This code," as Horace Mann says, "makes it the duty of the student to cover up offences, and defend any student against the perils of discipline. When such a sentiment prevails in an institution of learning, the offenders will evidently be freed from all salutary fear of detection and punishment. This security from exposure becomes a premium on transgression. At the very outset this code of honor inaugurates a reign of dishonor and shame."

Under such influences many a young man who knows but little of the world will be led astray by those who know too much of the world. The minds of students become so blinded that they cannot distinguish between virtue and vice. They are wont to stigmatize the exposure of the violations of law as tale-bearing; they do not see the moral distinction between maliciously revealing secrets to the injury of the community, and revealing violations of law for the general good. While tale-bearing is a vice which does much harm in society, and is a meanness to be despised, to cover up offences against law is a vice and meanness at the opposite moral pole, and equally to be despised.

The college secret society formally adopted this code of honor. He who is initiated pledges himself to keep the secrets which are intrusted to him by every member of the society, and to defend him against assaults upon his character or person. From the very nature of such a secret combination in college, it must embolden students in insurrection against good government whenever their inclinations are thwarted by faculty or trustees. Such covering up of iniquity must work evil to all concerned. It encourages the violator of law to go on in his vicious course, and prevents his reformation; it deadens the moral sensibility of him who covers up his friend's misdemeanors and thus becomes his accomplice; and its demoralizing influence is felt more or less through the whole school.

It is a hindrance to intellectual development, but that is not the main thing to be considered. Intellectual culture is not all, or the main part even, of a good education. It is far more important to imbue the minds of the young with just and noble principles, and to lead them to form correct habits, than to give them a thorough knowledge of all the sciences. "A handful of good life," says George Herbert, "is worth a bushel of learning." Honesty, truthfulness, moral transparency are essential elements of a good character. A young man who has been rightly trained, who is true whether at home or at school, will be open and frank in his intercourse with his parents and teachers. He will confide in their judgment, be thankful for their advice, and seek by good conduct to secure their approbation. But the student who joins a secret association to hide his doings from his parents, his teachers and the public, throws off the restraint which their approval of good deeds or disapproval of bad ones affords. He places himself where evil deeds have free scope, and where the unprincipled can extend their corrupting influence without any hindrance.

I do not think it possible for young men at the age of those who enter college, to organize a secret society with the design to keep all their doings from their parents and the public, without more or less demoralization of its members. Nay, the very design itself is, to my mind, evidence that they have already taken a step in the downward road, for it shows that they ignore the restraining influence of the public approval of noble deeds and the disapproval of ignoble ones. The desire for approbation is not the highest motive for action, but it does have a restraining influence, turning many a young man from the path that leads to vice, to the path that leads to virtue. Says Dr. Hawes: "A young man is not far from ruin when he can say, 'I don't care what others think of me.'" Every young man should have some respect for public opinion, and should not seek to disguise his actions from public scutiny.

All societies, all associations of men, it is said, are liable to become corrupt. This is true, owing to our fallen nature. Political parties become corrupt. Corruption creeps into benevolent associations. Even the church may become corrupt. But the fact that the transactions of these associations are open to the inspection of the whole world, and that thousands are looking on with a critical eye, ready to expose anything wrong, is a great preservative against corruption, and a check to their downward tendency. In the case of college secret societies, where this check is most needed, it is entirely removed. Nothing can prevent a vicious student from extending his corrupting principles throughout the society. It is said that vice naturally resorts to secrecy. True; and secrecy as naturally drifts to vice. The first wrong step of a hardened criminal is usually a slight departure from the right path; he secretly commits a slight misdemeanor, but finding he is not exposed, ventures to go on from one degree of criminality to another till finally he becomes the enemy and outcast of society.

The most potent influence in the formation of a truly virtuous character, is an impressive sense of the truth that He before whose eyes all things are naked and laid open, is ever present. The student who is deeply impressed with a sense of his accountability to Him who sees through all disguises, will seek to cultivate a truthful openness of character, and will be solicitous not to place himself where he will be tempted to do anything which would make him ashamed if exposed before the whole world, or would make him ashamed when he shall stand in the presence of the Infinite One and all the holy angels. Daniel Webster once said: "The most important thought that ever occupied my mind was the sense of my individual responsibility to God." Truly an important thought, one that can hardly find place in the mind of a student who seeks to disguise his actions in a secret society.

There was true philosophy in the reply of a little boy, who was told that he could take an article that did not belong to him and no one would know it. "Yes," said he, "I shall know it, and God will know it." Two very important reasons why one should not in secret do that which he would not be willing to have exposed. I shall know it and God will know it. How can a student, who is earnestly seeking to come into the light of knowledge, the light of truth, and the light of God, consent to veil his efforts in secrecy in imitation of those who choose darkness rather than light? How can he expose himself to the temptation to work deeds which will give his character a stain as long as he lives, and which will never be blotted from the page of memory?

At no time in our past history, as it seems to me, was it so important to look well to our methods for the education of the young, as at the present time;—so important that we eliminate what is wrong and supply what is defective in our educational work. I am no pessimist. I think the world is growing better. In this country we are advancing in many respects, while in others we are retrograding. With all our advancement in the means and modes of education, vice and crime are increasing, especially among the young. Major Laughry, for many years warden of the States prison at Joliet, says: "Statistics carefully collected show that there are nearly or quite half a million of criminals in the United States, and only about fifty thousand of them in 'durance' of any kind; and we are confronted with the startling fact that of this half-million, one-third are under twenty years of age, a little more than one-half are twenty-one, and something over two-thirds are under twenty-two."

Undoubtedly there are various causes for the increase of youthful crime. But the grand cause which underlies all others, is the want of proper training in the family and in the school. Our methods of teaching have improved, while our methods of training have deteriorated. There is less parental restraint than formerly. Many children of the present day early become their own masters; they go abroad and spend their nights as they please, become acquainted with the haunts of vice, and learn the evil ways of the vicious. They carry the evil habits which they form at home into the school; enter into secret combinations and perform their mischievous pranks; engage in hazing,—sometimes in hazing the professors;—they become violators of law, disturbers of the public peace, and ultimately the political tricksters, the embezzlers, who, if they can escape the clutches of the law in no other way, escape to Canada.

As a natural consequence, those who thus grow up unrestrained, will have but little reverence or respect for those in authority. Says a distinguished educator: "The greatest defect in the American character, seems to be want of respect for superiors." It must be admitted that there is truth in this statement. He further says: "In no part of the world is submission to the authority of law so important as in the United States. In this respect school must be a preparation for the society of the world. This is one strong reason why authority should be established, and laws strictly observed in every school."

Reverence seems to be fading out from the American mind. The young are growing up with little reverence for their parents, but little reverence for those in authority, whether in church or state. It shows a want of reverence for young men at college to form a secret society, to cover up their actions from parents and teachers.

We need more of the moral element in our educational processes. Napoleon Bonaparte, in conversation with Madame Campan, said: "The old systems of instruction seem to be worth nothing; what is yet wanting in order that the people should be properly educated?" "Mothers," replied Madame Campan. "Yes," said he, "here is a system of education in one word. Be it your care then to train up mothers who shall know how to educate their children."

We need mothers trained in the home and in the school, who can plant the germ of truth in the infant understanding, and can give their children while young a bent to the ways of truth and righteousness from which they will never swerve. We need mothers who will train up their children to yield loving obedience to their parents and cheerful submission to all rightful authority; who will inculcate reverence for things sacred,—"for high objects, pure thoughts, and noble aims—for the great men of former times, and the high-minded workers among our contemporaries." Children thus trained will make their parents their confidants, and will have no inclination to veil their actions in a secret society. We need also teachers in all grades of school, who, by precept and example, can inculcate the love of truth, of honesty, of purity of thought, of uprightness of life, and a hatred of all crooked ways, and of all secret vices.

In closing let me say in the language of Chancellor Crosby:

"College secret societies at best are pretences, and thus at war with truth, candor and manliness. However harmless in their actual operations and undertakings; however well composed in their membership; however pure in their meetings they may be, the fact of secrecy is insidiously weakening the foundation of frank truthfulness in the youthful mind."

He speaks also from personal knowledge, when he says, "Such a society is a temptation to vice.

College faculties have a great responsibility, in my opinion, in reference to the existence of these societies and other objectionable features in college life. It is time that college secret societies, the code of honor, and such practices as hazing, should be regarded as belonging to a barbarous age, and should be placed under the ban of public opinion, and, if need be, under the ban of college law. Probably moral influences alone, in most cases, will be sufficient to suppress these societies. Any intelligent, moral, upright young man, it seems to me, can be led to see that an open society is far preferable to a secret society. When such influences are not sufficient, the college authorities owe it to themselves, to the students under their care, to the cause of education, and to the cause of Christ, to see that these societies are suppressed.

Naperville, Ill.

THE JUBILEE OF THE MOSAIC ECONOMY.

BY REV. A. B. CURTIS.

If the seventh year was a year of rejoicing to the Jew, much more was the fiftieth. Its regulations went to the very foundations of the principle of ownership. There seems to be some significance in having the half century mark the time of these changes as this was the average life of man. When the father has reached the age of fifty, the sons are beginning to take his place in the field and the shop. It is time for him to prepare to give up work and hand over its responsibilities to others.

Let us see what the great Lawgiver intended should take place at this time: "And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land to all the inhabitants thereof: it shall be a jubilee unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family." It is impossible to form any estimate of the importance of this law, impossible because of the looseness with which it was enforced. Moreover, the Jewish wars and various intermarriages soon made it exceedingly difficult to enforce such a law. We must study it, then, in its intentions, and in the results of its probable workings, previous to the first captivity.

At the end of fifty years every man became a freeman. "All men were created equal," and for one year in fifty in the Jewish State all men were equal. All the prisoners of war that had been enslaved were allowed to return home. All those that had been enslaved for debt were set free. All men imprisoned for crime were declared innocent before men and allowed to go in and out among their fellows unmolested. In Rome in its palmiest days there were several grades of slaves, the serfs being so low down in the scale as to be scarcely worthy the name of human beings. Generations of abject servitude had sapped all the human instincts out of them and made them little better than brute beasts. At length this class grew so numerous as to overpower and offset the influence of the rich and the learned. Wars arose, the serf came to mastery, the cultured we either slain or subdued. What is the result? Civilization has to begin over again at the very beginning. Rome with all her wisdom did not foresee this, or if she foresaw it she failed to remedy the evil in season. The progress of civilization must make continued haltings so long as there is a state of affairs that fosters a widening of the breach between rich and poor, cultured and vulgar. At last, as history proves, the nobles run out, the stock becomes flabby and insipid and characterless, the lowest classes rise to power and progress has to be set back at their level.

Now the laws governing the celebration of the year of jubilee made all this forever impossible. Generations upon generations of enslavement were not allowed. If the father was a slave all his life, the son started as a freeman. If he took the downward path it was his own doing. Providence smiled upon him at the outset with encouragement. There was no class of people constantly being thrust lower and lower down until they finally get beyond all possibility of rising.

The enactment that still further prevented this result was that relating to the possession of the soil. At last the children of Israel had finished their wanderings in the wilderness, and I suspect it was the relics of old nomadic habits still lingering in the memories of the older generation that kept them during forty years from the cherished ideals of Moses and Joshua. At any rate, when the generation of shepherds had finally perished, the children of Israel crossed over and possessed the land of Canaan. And as we have seen, each family was given a farm to be its very own as an everlasting possession.

Each family was given the exclusive right of possession. They might sell a portion or the whole, to a neighbor, or they might buy more as the needs of the family might require. There was no law to hamper their freedom and independence. Everything was made favorable to the development of character. But at the close of fifty years all returned to their original possessions. This was a dead-lock on land monopoly. No one family could continue to buy land from generation to generation, until it should obtain possession of so large a tract as to be able to influence legislation. A weak-willed family could not sell its inheritance for a mess of pottage forever. After fifty years each family must or might return to its original farm. There was thus a limit set to greed. People had their attention turned to the fact that to earn a living was each man's duty, but beyond this righteousness and wisdom are of more value than great riches.

Moreover, there is something eternally unjust in our laws of inheritance which this enactment prevented. If a son would inherit his father's character and knowledge he must win them for himself by hard struggle. The same ought to a greater extent to be true of earthly possessions. For a son to inherit vast land or other values, without having shown in his make-up those sound business principles which would fit him to gain for himself such affluence, is demoralizing. It gives a man an influence and a prestige which are not his due. The man who knows not how the shekel is earned cannot know how it can best be expended.

If the law curtailed greed, selfishness and cruelty on the one hand, it fostered the growth of mercy and fellow-feeling on the other. A vicious and spendthrift father could not plunge his family into irretrievable ruin. If he found himself at the age of sixty or seventy without a shekel to his name, his sons were not compelled to reap his disgrace. If in those years of poverty they had learned the lesson of experience, when the year of jubilee came round and restored to them the land their father's mismanagement had lost, they would profit by the result and become careful, honest and thrifty in their habits. The law promoted a wholesome equality and tended to discourage the growth of those bitterly antagonistic parties in politics that sap the life out of so many nations, and drive the wisest men mad.

Any law can be made the servant of oppression and an excuse for idleness. No doubt, this law was abused. A man might say, When I die this farm will be returned to my family. Why should I work? I will run through it during my life time and have the good of it. And the greedy man might dispose of his landed property just before the year of jubilee came round and hoard the wealth until he could again safely invest in land. But as prices would vary as the year of jubilee drew near there would be little inducement to such a course.

It has been said that this law "did not meet the exigencies of the later development of the nation." I doubt if it was so intended. If the law was enacted to overcome the strong nomadic habits of the Israelites, as I think it was, it was eminently effective. The people had been wanderers, living in tents, and changing about continually without home or fireside. Now they are placed upon a particular piece of land to till it, and it alone. Many will be unable to overcome the old habit. Land used to be free; they do not know its value; they will sell too cheaply. To obviate the evil effects of this ignorance the sons may return to the original tract without expense. The law did operate until Israel learned the value of land. It did operate until definite social and religious customs arose upon which society could develop.

So, too, the first generation of emancipated slaves would be so ignorant of the very meaning of freedom as to prefer their old condition. Our own slaves in the South often illustrated this point. A perpetual emancipation proclamation was necessary. If the father was indolent or indifferent and reverted to his old condition of servitude, his son did not inherit his condition. Once more the year of jubilee sets all free. And again and again until no one wants to return to the old condition. This method was founded upon an educational basis that was in many respects better than our own method of ridding ourselves of a great national blot.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

Editor Cynosure:—Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, yesterday, to-day and forever. Wise, indeed, is the patriotic American who studies the trend of public sentiment for better or worse, on the great questions of the day. It tells the public-spirited citizen where to put his effort and influence to accomplish most for the present and future good of our great free commonwealth. The successful student must go beneath the surface and examine underlying principles and unseen forces, often far-reaching and powerful. The emotional and casual, or superficial observer, is often misled. The demagogue sees only one question and one side of the question at a time. The statesman sees all sides of every question, and his comprehensive knowledge and broad views enables him to determine unerringly the real from the apparent issue. Small minds cannot grasp and weigh great questions. Stupendous themes and tremendous issues call out the giant intellects and best talent of a nation.

It was so during the slavery struggle. The careless multitudes failed to comprehend the height and depth, width and breadth of that appalling evil. They saw only the popular, superficial movement soon to be swallowed up and lost in the one great problem. The same greatness of life and soul that led John Brown, William Lloyd Garrison, John G. Whittier, Wendell Phillips, and a host of such men, to see in Negro slavery the one paramount coming question, led them to see in this white lodge slavery a far greater one. John Brown himself was a seceded Mason. And almost all the old Abolitionists saw in the Masonic slavery and despotism of the lodge a more dreaded enemy than the Southern slave system. It was their judgment that determined our course, and fifteen years incessant investigation has removed every doubt but that the anti-lodge movement is to absorb all others. As in the slavery agitation other questions were persistently pushed to the front to postpone the inevitable, so in this. But no power can stay the oncoming tide. A momentary check only swells the volume of waters that override all obstacles.

God and the angels in heaven, Satan and his sable minions, good men and bad men (the whole moral universe), are intensely interested in this last great battle between light and darkness, liberty and slavery, right and wrong.

The able conference of churches in the First M. E. church of Chicago, and Joseph Cook's strong lecture there against Freemasonry and all oath-bound lodgery; Pres. C. A. Blanchard's "Age of Lodges" in Our Day, of Boston, and his radical arraignment of Masonic conspiracy and disloyalty in a recent issue of the influential Chicago Inter-Ocean; the entering wedge of this lodge discussion at the National Educational Convention (department of higher education) in St. Paul; the simultaneous opening of the columns of the Boston Congregationalist, Chicago Advance and San Francisco Pacific, to this great question; the increasing agitation throughout the Union; are so many multiplying monitions that the lodge must go.

CAPITAL, LABOR, STRIKE.

At the Calvary Baptist church in New York recently, Rev. F. K. Morse preached to a large congregation on the labor question and the labor unions. From a report of the discourse in the New York Tribune we copy:

The struggle in which labor was engaged, in part, had a long history. It began 1,000 years before Christ. Christ himself was a laborer. He had toiled in Judea as an example to the laboring class for all time. To-day he stood closely identified with the struggling poor. The disturber to-day was the man who hated labor. He was the factor which engendered strife between capital and labor. Years ago labor organizations had been unheard of in America. There had been no strikes. The people had lived contented and happy.

"Ever since the formation of labor organizations among us, there have been disturbances and unrest and strife. To-day, labor is uncrowned to a large degree. A man should be paid in proportion to the quality and quantity of work done."

The machinist who was only anxious to have 7 o'clock hurry to 12, and cared little about what he accomplished for his employer, was not a laborer in the true American sense. "But," asked the doctor, "is not our country rapidly filling up with the class of workmen answering to this description? Men who look upon capital as the enemy of labor, who are bound to drown the voice of reason and who persist in efforts which tend to embitter the relations between the employer and employed? It should not be forgotten that the industries that are dependent upon invested capital and the laborer hold a vital relation to our nation's life. To protect these industries means the perpetuity of our national life. . . . No doubt there are workingmen who have their grievances. I have mine. Where is there a person who works with brain or hand that has not just reason for a grievance? Who is ever overpaid for what he does? The statement made recently, that 'if capitalists could have their way laborers, as a class, would be no better off than slaves,' is unwarranted by the facts, and is not calculated to contribute toward a peaceful and permanent settlement of the questions which are sorely vexing us. I believe the class of capitalists suggested is small in America. American capitalists as a whole are among our noblest citizens. They neither desire nor attempt to reduce the working classes to the condition of slaves. They are, on the contrary, most friendly to them. Is it not true that workingmen here are better paid and have more opportunities for self-improvement and have better homes than in any other country? Many a mechanic has advanced by his knowledge and industry, and has himself become a capitalist. Such possibilities are open to all who live righteously and act honestly. Christ said 'the laborer is worthy of his hire.'

"The right of workingmen to organize themselves into various societies whose aim is mutual helpfulness no one can deny. If I mistake not, the organizations first started were intended as friendly or benefit societies. Such organizations whose affairs could be administered with little expense, might be of vast service to our laboring classes. I do not hesitate to say that the so-called labor organizations, as controlled to-day, are against the best interests of the laborer. See how he is taxed to support them! Hundreds of thousands of dollars taken from hard-earned wages to pay the fat salaries of their officers and committees, who hate work and are bound to have a living without labor. These organizations, through their official heads, have assumed the prerogative of dictation. They go so far as to say who shall be employed, and the price paid; they order the strike for no adequate reason; they force the whole body of workers to lay down their tools, and, in spite of the protests of the more thoughtful, often without cause, throw hundreds of thousands into idleness and bring hunger to multitudes of women and children. There is another feature nurtured in the organization of the so-called unions. It is that which limits the number of those who shall learn trades; which says to a parent that his boy shall not have a trade. The result is that we have armies of men amongst us who do not know how to work, and for the reason that no avenue is opened to them for self-support. Why has not every man a right to self-support through a trade or what he may choose to do? Long ago I had somehow supposed that Satan had exhausted his inventive skill. But in the strike and the boycott he has reached the pinnacle of his genius. They mean anarchy, they breathe anarchy, they work destruction of life and property. Humanity cries out against them. Where have the strikes ever been a public or private benefit? Here is a great railroad company, whose business is to convey passengers and freight to one point and another, and for a faithful discharge of their duties the public holds its managers responsible. For unfaithfulness or threatening conduct or lack of obedience to certain orders certain men are discharged. Did the managers of the road, who are intrusted with the interests of the public—not their own—do right? I say, yes. They would have been culpable if they had not acted as they did. A strike was ordered as bold as it was Satanic. Upon the scene appeared Master Workman Powderly, who began at once to explain the metaphysics of right and wrong and to take the attitude of supreme dictator as to how the company should manage its business. The good sense of the country asserted itself. The strikers will yet learn that the men who manage the New York Central road are better friends than the leaders of their order, who under the excitation of passion advised their acts of rashness. Those managers of the road are men of unblemished character and they have always acted generously toward their employes."

Dr. Morse ended his sermon with an arraignment of the bar-room and an eloquent appeal for the spread of God's Word.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Report of the Annual Convention of the New Hampshire Christian Association.—"Among the Hills."

Our New Hampshire conventions have always been spiritual Bethels, but the one from which I have just returned, at Gilford Village under the shadow of Mt. Belknap, had the advantage of being held where every scene of nature harmonized. The three miles ride from Laconia—where we found Dea. Rowe and other friends hospitably awaiting us with teams—will not soon be forgotten. The shadows of evening were falling fast over the beautiful winding country road; the musical tinkle of a cow-bell fell at intervals on the ear, and every new turn disclosed some fresh view of mountains and hills. One range which we at first took to be the White Mountains par excellence, we were informed was in Sandwich, recalling Whittier's lines,

"Through Sandwich Notch the west wind sang
Good morrow to the cotter."

Another range looming blue and misty in the far-off distance we were told lay over in Canada. Even-tide among the hills! To one who had passed all her life on the low lands about Massachusetts Bay, it was a revelation. But this was only the vestibule; there was more to come, and of this anon.

In thoughtful consideration for my physical infirmity, a home had been assigned me at the parsonage which is hardly a stone's throw from the neat little church where Bro. Hyatt ministers, and our convention was held. The address of the first evening was given by Rev. A. A. Hoyt of the Independent Christian, and was packed full of pungent Scriptural truths, an earnest of the good things to follow.

The morning of the next day, after worship and business, was occupied by our New England agent, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, who gave us an interesting talk on anti-secret work in the East. He began with a brief summary of the way in which he had been led to take this narrower but exceedingly important field. He felt that the Lord was going on before, and showing in a wonderful manner to the prominent ministers of Boston and vicinity that the church was losing her hold on the young men of our country, and that something must be done to save them from the clutches of the lodge before it is too late. Within a short time Boston has had eighty-five more secret lodges, while during the same period there has been an increase of only nine in the number of her churches. Remarks were made by Rev. C. L. Baker, on the importance of Christians having an accurate knowledge of the so-called secrets of the lodge in order to bear testimony against it. Bro. Francis, a young evangelist of much promise, who has been for four years studying under Dr. A. J. Gordon, remarked, that granted the genuineness of lodge charity, "all loving of our neighbor which does not make us love God is really opposed to him." The latter preached in the evening on full salvation, a sermon which it would do every lukewarm Christian good to hear.

The familiar and beloved figure of the Boston Common evangelist, Wm. F. Davis, was present through a large part of our meetings. One of the grandest discourses to which the writer has ever had the privilege of listening was given by him at this convention. He traced the record of the so-called "successful" nations of the earth, England, France, Germany, and our own America, and his conclusion that "the greatest success among nations is the greatest failure God knows anything about," could hardly be questioned by any candid mind which had carefully followed the premises on which he based a statement so humbling to our national pride. He gave a remarkably graphic illustration of the way God disciplines a soul, by the way men test a bridge—by piling upon it extraordinary weight. The pressure is taken off only to be repeated the next day until tens of thousands of tons weight can be piled on while the bridge remains firm and intact without a symptom of giving way. Thus, we are to "rejoice when we fall into divers temptations" or trials, for they are the sign that God is testing our souls. When the pressure grows overwhelming, and we cry, "Lord, I can bear no more," he takes it away to allow a rebound from the strain; and then he piles on more and still more with each repeated trial, until we stand completely tested, and able through him to endure all things.

In the afternoon Bro. Kimball's son, Hazen, read a paper which was heard with much interest, and as it was unanimously voted that it be published in the Cynosure, it will have the wide circulation among anti-secretists which its merits deserve, and make all the friends rejoice that our cause in New England is already beginning to send forth its advance guard of young men, ready and eager to smite the hosts of Baal. The old medieval legend of St. George and the Dragon, is an allegory that is constantly being repeated. There was never a crusade against any moral abomination that did not have its St. George; and nothing, as Bro. Stoddard remarked, is more noticeable or more wonderful about the New England work than the way in which our young evangelists and ministers are coming out on the line of outspoken antagonism to every form of false worship.

Bro. Frohawk made some excellent remarks on "How shall we reclaim our backslidden churches;" and he and others bore witness to the good results of Bro. Kimball's labors in those hill-country towns of New Hampshire, whose thresholds year in and year out are never crossed by a Christian pastor. It was voted that he be continued in the field, and funds for his support were unanimously and heartily pledged. But the necessities of the work demand that he be kept in the field the year round, and it is to be hoped that as the general interest increases, God will move on the hearts of his stewards to donate freely to this blessed cause of home evangelization. I not only hope, I firmly expect that our association will yet have its home evangelists, men and women who will go to New England's unchurched masses, carrying with them the bread of life, and awakening in their minds a spiritual hunger that will not be satisfied till a revival sweeps over our land greater than any ever known before,—a very deluge of Holy Ghost fire which shall utterly burn up the lodge and all its works.

Rev. C. L. Baker preached an excellent sermon on Separation, in which he gave many facts regarding the connection of the saloon and the lodge, which all W. C. T. U. women ought to know, and which, thank God, they are fast learning. He made use of one illustration that struck me as unusually forcible and vivid. Imagine a woven picture, that represents a cross, a crown, and the river of life, into whose filling enters every now and then a crimson thread. A man comes up and begins to pull out this red thread, and the crown commences to topple; he is warned to desist, but he pulls another thread somewhere else, endangering the cross. Warned again, he only repeats his experiment, and now he is taking away his chance of the River of Life; for the crimson thread of atonement runs through all the plan of redemption. This is what the lodge is continually trying to pull out, and with it all man's hopes of salvation.

The convention closed with an altar service at which a very tender and earnest spirit of consecration prevailed. Words fail me to express any due appreciation of the Christian hospitality with which we were treated during our stay in Gilford Village. I can only say that they carried out the apostolic injunction, both in letter and spirit, and entertained us royally. One of the brightest pictures in my memory will be of that little mountain village, and the dear faces that I met there for the first time, but which I hope to meet again,—if not here, in the heavenly Paradise above.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

—Rev. W. J. Gladwin passed through Chicago last week Tuesday, on his return to India work, which calls on him to return at an earlier date than he intended. He called on the Cynosure long enough to say "God bless you" and "Goodbye." He leaves his two sons with their aunt in Miles, Iowa, and while the father's heart struggles within him, he turns his back on America again to spend and be spent for the millions of India.

PRAYER ANSWERED IN BOSTON.

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE MEETING—THE GRACIOUS WORK EXTENDING—A DECEMBER MEETING.

The fourteenth annual meeting of the New Hampshire Christian Association is an event of the past. Not so with its influence, which will continue for years to come. The local attendance was excellent, considering the busy season, and the ladies in charge of the commissary department did great credit to themselves, and richly deserved the thanks of their appreciative guests. Bro. Isaac Hyatt was instant in season, abounding in attention to details and to the comfort of all, and his brethren and sisters were not one whit behind their pastor's devotion to the cause and its advocates. There was no "blare of trumpets" or "flaunting of finery" before "gaping crowds," such as Boston witnessed on Monday when a disgusting pageant of mimic savages, calling themselves "Red Men," hooted and tooted and tramped through the principal streets of "the most cultured and refined city" on the American continent.

Several who had been expected sent letters of regret that they could not be present; but the lack was not for speakers, but for time for all to be heard who felt burdened for utterance. "Knee drill" and Gospel songs were chief features of the program, and proved much more in accord with the spirit and taste of the occasion than any exhibition of studied oratory or fastidious uniforms could possibly have been. I shall leave details to Bro. Kimball, the secretary, and an analysis of the work and addresses to the New England correspondent, and speak of

ANSWERS TO PRAYER.

Sister Coverly was only one of a number present who told of most remarkable instances of bodily healing in answer to prayer, of which they were the grateful subjects. But what I have in mind relates directly to the anti-lodge work. We have been praying for young men who shall fill the places of those whose energies are waning or who "have entered into rest." There were seceded members of the secret orders who stood up in the strength of vigorous manhood and fearlessly spoke of the wicked abominations they had witnessed when chained or bound with "Satan's cable-tow;" and there were four young men of much more than ordinary promise, two of them at least accustomed to public speaking, who lacked neither zeal or courage or words to "cry aloud and spare not," to warn the people that the idolatries of pagan worships are subtly invading the churches and polluting the land with the mystic rites of Baal. Those older and longer in the front of battle could well afford to sit and listen to such indictments as were brought against the "beast" and his "false prophets" by our dear brethren Baker and Francis, and presented in a neat, comprehensive essay by Bro. Hazen Kimball. Their testimonies were answers to prayers that "the Lord of the harvest would send forth laborers into his vineyard," as marked as any instance of Divine healing given.

Nor is this progress limited to anti-secret gatherings. Reports in my mail just read are truly inspiring. One deacon, speaking of the grange, says his "conscience troubled him so that he could not sleep nights until he had shaken off the accursed thing." A brother writes: "Dr. —— read a paper at —— association in which he gave the most scathing condemnation of lodgism I ever heard." A pastor writes: "I read Pentecost's testimony in one of our meetings and it created a sensation. One man, a Royal Arch Mason, said aloud 'Amen' when I finished my remarks." He adds, "I tell you, brother, the leaven is working, praise the Lord! I never had so large congregations as at present," etc.

From Sioux Falls, Dakota, comes the encouraging word: "I have received samples of the Home Guard. I think it is just what we need, May the blessing of God rest on the reform and strengthen the reformers."

Are not these tokens of God's favor in answer to prayer? Brethren, let us be encouraged, both to work and pray. And especially let me say to the nearly one hundred readers of the Cynosure we want to hold a convention here not later than Dec. 16 next, and we want your co-operation in this work. You can aid by securing subscribers to the Christian Cynosure and sending direct to the office at Chicago, or to me at the New England office. You can help by sending to me names and addresses of parties who might be induced to become readers of the paper if I should personally visit them. We ought to treble at least the list of Boston readers before December. Will you help us in the effort? Call or send for tracts at 309 Tremont street and distribute them judiciously as you have opportunity. Contribute of your substance as the Lord has given treasures in trust to you, that the work be not hindered for want of means necessary to carry it on; but, above all, pray that God will bless and enlarge the work in his own way, and give his ministers no rest until they uncover these hidden pitfalls and give a faithful warning from the walls of Zion. Your fellow servant, J. P. Stoddard.

"DO DEVILS INSPIRE PEOPLE?"

Chicago, Oct. 4, 1890.

I wish to add to the Cynosure's argument of last week on this subject the testimony of Rev. B. S. Hobbs, of Little Falls, N. Y., who has left it on record for the benefit of all who are deceived:

"It is now about four years since I professed faith in the doctrine that spirits can and do hold intercourse with man. Then, for a season, I had little doubt of its importance and its truth. But it was not mine to profess and cherish this then to me most precious faith except for a short time, without falling a martyr to its profession.

"I was then regarded by some as a medium, and thus I verily believed myself to be, as I exhibited the various phenomena common to (I was about to say) that unfortunate class. But of that time, and its consequent results, I wish not now to speak further than to say that till that period I had never known sorrow and suffering in comparison to what I then was, most strangely indeed, compelled to endure. * * * *

"While on a visit to a distant part of the State from where I reside, I was called by a friend to officiate at the funeral of a departed neighbor. I had, as usual, went through the introductory services and commenced discoursing from my text, when, to my utter horror and mortification, my mouth was suddenly closed, and for a time I could not utter a word. Judge, reader, of my consternation and surprise when the influence of former times returned upon me with redoubled fury, and I was again powerless, in a terrible grasp, from which I in vain sought for release; and to add to my consternation, I was compelled, in spite of all my efforts, to speak the words: 'Spirits have power on the earth!' Oh, reader, that day to the writer of these lines was a painful one indeed. That strange power did not release its hold until I had acted in several places in the capacity of a spirit-medium, being, so far as I know, regarded as an undoubted one of that class. * * * *

"The following Sabbath I attempted to speak again; and now, reader, listen to the result: My mouth was again closed, and not opened until I was thrown into the same state as mentioned before, and then and there I was compelled to deliver an address to the audience, professing to come from the spheres. I had another appointment at another place for the following Sabbath, but it is now withdrawn; and I here freely confess that I have no desire to preach another sermon, if I cannot do so without passing the ordeal I did on that occasion.

"I come now to the main object of this letter, which is to ask, is what I have experienced spirit-control? and if so, why should my mouth be closed while endeavoring to preach the Gospel to my fellow men? Again, admitting this to be the fact, ought I to submit to such control as this, in so far as I have the strength to resist its severe and strange power? The truth is, I have little fellowship for much that I have seen, called spirit-influence.

"One thing is to me rationally clear—that much, very much, that comes through that supposed channel is scarcely worthy of the imperfection of earth; and of the little I have seen, there is still less that bears to me the evidence and the impress of truth!"

Comment: Mr. Hobbs was a preacher, but had studied his Bible so little or so carelessly that he seems not to have remembered those passages which refer to "the prince of the power of the air," or Paul's reference to the wrestling not with flesh and blood alone, but "against principalities, against powers, against rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."—Eph. 6: 12. It is these spirits of darkness against which we are warned, and against which we must wage a continual war. If we yield to sinful thoughts, we are in danger of their fellowship, their suggestions, and their influence. And then the devil himself can preach like an angel of light. Think of that, and then pray, "Let us not be led into temptation."

Devils do inspire people, and I know it.

A Spiritualist Saved by Grace.

AMONG THE BALTIMORE MINISTERS.

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 29, 1890.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Last Wednesday I visited Howard University, Washington, D. C. They had been in session one week and had 250 students. The president, Rev. J. E. Rankin, D. D., was well acquainted with our reform work and very willingly opened the door for a lecture.

The same day the Baltimore Medical College excluded two young men from the lectures because of their color. At the meeting of the Baltimore Ministers' Union to-day a motion was offered and seconded to ask the faculty to reconsider that action and admit those young men again. The chairman hesitated about the propriety of the resolution. The secretary read the constitution, pronounced the resolution foreign to the purpose of their meeting, and moved that it be not entertained. A colored man arose and asked that the constitution be read again, and held the floor while the secretary read. But before he could say a word, the chairman put the motion and it prevailed. The colored preacher protested and a white preacher denounced the chair as guilty of an outrage. There was spontaneous combustion enough there to have made an all-day fire. But the chairman smothered it. I never saw the race prejudice show itself so plainly in public.

The topic for discussion was "The Sabbath and the workingmen." Rev. C. H. Dixon, D. D., was to have opened. He arose and said, "Rev. J. M. Foster, District Secretary to the National Reform Association of the United States, is here. I have invited him to take my place. He knows all about the question." By a motion I was unanimously invited to address them. There were 150 present. They listened with the closest attention for an hour. They were in fullest sympathy and crowded around us at the close to shake hands and express their approval. God prepared the way here. J. M. Foster.

A MONSTER AT LARGE.

AN INCIDENT OF OUR LATE WAR.

Montdale, Pa.

Near the close of our great conflict, while a body of our men were on the road to Richmond, the following diabolical outrage occurred.

These Union men were nearing the city when one of the soldiers, whose name is John Cincibaugh, said to a colored man in the company, "Do you know what we are going to do with the niggers when we get into Richmond?" He said no.

Then said that demon in human form, "We are going to dig a hole and put in powder and put you on top and send you to heaven." The Negro replied he would like to go there, but not in that way. At this reply that brute cocked his pistol, and after putting on the third cap, shot and killed the poor Negro instantly. On being told that he had killed him, he, with an oath, said he believed he had.

This brutal man was arrested and court martialed and condemned to the Rip Raps to hard labor to the close of the war and forfeit his pay.

Now the sequel was this. He was put under a guard, and a saddle and bridle put at his disposal. The guard laid down and went to sleep. He took his choice among the horses on the ground and rode off. But a short time since this wretch was at large in a Pennsylvania city! My informant was a witness in the court martial trial, and is perfectly reliable authority.

But what was the cause of this Satanic act? The man was a Negro-hater, a copper-head, at home, no doubt, and his victim was black. Scores of just such men were in the Union army. But what of the men composing said court martial? Perhaps a pack of lodgeites sworn to defend a brother "right or wrong." My informant is a good and true man, but had no power in the case only to testify to the truth, which he did.

Now let me ask, is there no way of bringing such men to justice, even now? The witnesses are some of them living. Shall such wretches run at large? Nathan Callender.

GOOD FOR DEBATING SOCIETIES.

Sterling, Kans.

Editor Cynosure:—After the successive failures of crops here, we cut down all of our papers except the Cynosure, and Companion for the boys. Although you do not hear from us, do not think we are idle, indifferent and doing nothing against secret societies, for none of us lose an opportunity, either public or private, of speaking boldly against them. Last winter I was one of a committee for bringing in questions for debate, and I got one on "Secretism." It created quite a stir in our neighborhood, and two other literary societies debated the same question. Two of them gained the decision that they were unlawful and un-Christian. We utilized the reason, logic, argument and common sense always found in the Cynosure on the occasion,—and right here let me say, that there was not a question, whether religious, moral, historical, scientific or political debated that winter, but we could find some pointers by looking over our file of Cynosures. I say this because it proves that it is not merely a "one-idea" paper. I am glad to read of your success in your Western trip, and only wish it was in my power to do something tangible to promote the circulation of the paper.

The United Presbyterian Cooper Memorial College is situated here, and perhaps you would give them, as you have done to other institutions, an "Anti-secret Library."

The lodge is here, but we don't hear much about them. They don't seem to have the publicity they do in some places.

Mrs. N. R. Weede.

A COLORED PASTOR ESCAPES THE LODGE.

Abbeville, Ala.

Dear Cynosure:—I am glad to hail thee with another subscriber. There is something in thee that I want every minister to know. On Sabbath night I asked one of our ministers what he thought of Masonry. He said he did not know anything about it. So I thought it easier to save him from it, than it was to save him out of it, so I handed him a copy of the Cynosure. Then I prevailed with the St. Peter church, Abbeville, to pay for his subscription one year. So the deacon agreed to pay me the next conference day.

Dear Cynosure, as a traveling minister in the Methodist Conference for many years, I suffered beyond human forbearance the administration of Masons. I thought at times of joining the Masons, as some of them advised me to do. So the Spirit prevailed with me to seek a shelter of the Lord's. So I left the Methodist Conference, and came to St. Peter Baptist church at Abbeville. Finding no Masons in that church, I joined. I praise the day when Jesus washed my sins away. Though I love the Methodists, I do not love any church ruled by Masons. I am yours for Christ, H. J. Craddock.

THE BODY OF MOSES.

Millville, Aylesford,
Nova Scotia, Sept. 23d, 1890.

Editor Cynosure:—Bro. A. M. Paull, in Cynosure, Sept. 11th, gives the passages of Scripture which, he seems to think, establishes the fact that the body of Moses was raised from the dead or in some way translated to heaven at the time he died! Now, I have been familiar with all those passages for many years; had them all in mind when I criticised his article. But, I fail to see in them anything to lead me to infer that they even indicate a probability that the body of Moses has been raised from the sepulchre in which the Lord deposited it, in the land of Moab! It seems to me to be unwise to ignore a plain, positive statement of Scripture, like Deut. 34: 5,6, and select an obscure passage like that of Jude 9, and then suppose that it teaches what it does not teach! and build up a theory upon such a supposition, when that theory antagonizes the plainest and general teaching of the Bible! Bro. Paull and Dr. Pentecost must be able to produce a "Thus saith the Lord" for any doctrine or practice (professedly drawn from the Scriptures), or they must not expect a sincere seeker after truth to accept their theory. Inferences from obscure passages are not satisfactory, especially when there is much plain Scripture to the contrary!

I suppose Bro. Paull thinks because Moses appeared in bodily form, as a man, on the Mount of Transfiguration, that his body must have been raised from the dead. But the angels of God, in old times, appeared as men—to Jacob, Gen. 32: 24–30; to Joshua, Josh. 5: 13; and to Manoah and his wife, Judges 13: 20. And the saints in heaven are said to be "equal unto the angels," Luke 20: 36. If a spiritual angel can assume and appear in the likeness of a human body, surely the spirit of Moses might do the same! And that is what I suppose took place on the Mount of Transfiguration. R. S. Morton.

PITH AND POINT.

GOOD WORDS.

May the good work be magnified to the glory of God. —Mrs. S. J. Robinson.

I think the Cynosure constantly improves.—Pres. Chas. A. Blanchard.

I have the promise of quite a number of subscribers between now and New Years.—James McLean, Oil Springs, Ontario.

It seems to me the Cynosure has been more abundant in facts and interesting the last four weeks, than in any four consecutive weeks before since I have known it.—J. P. Stoddard.

SEE ROM. 6: 16.

I am sure that a preacher of the Gospel that has taken the thirty-two degrees in Freemasonry, has no more right to stand in the pulpit to preach Christ to the people than the devil has, because Freemasons have no Christ in their creed; and further, they have given the devil a mortgage on their souls, and I think properly they are the devil's servants.—O. C. M. Bates, Constantine, Mich.

"YE CANNOT SERVE GOD AND MAMMON."

Can intelligent, well-educated men be good Christians and at the same time enter into a modern tyled lodge-room, there to be stripped of his clothing, be hoodwinked, rope around his neck, bow on his naked knee and take those barbarous cut-throat obligations common in those lodges, enter into covenant relations and fellowship with a body of men, many of whom are known to be of that class spoken of by Paul in Romans 1: 28–30; "They did not like to retain God in their knowledge. Being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things." If they are, or can be Christians, that is all that God requires, and we should not fight against them. It is enough to be a good Christian. But if the Bible be true they cannot be. I have studied both systems sixty-five years, and this is my verdict.—Eli B. Williams, Cordova, Ill.

A HAND SHAKE FOR BRO. STODDARD FROM NOVA SCOTIA.

It affords me much pleasure to read in the Cynosure from time to time, the reports of the various anti-secret reformers. I rejoice in the fact that "New England" is beginning to awake; and that some of the leading ministers of Boston, and others, are beginning to speak out on the subject! I would love to shake hands with that dear old veteran, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, and bid him God speed in his great and good work. He and all others, who are "laboring together with Christ" for the overthrow of the kingdom of anti-Christ, have my earnest prayers and best wishes that great success may crown their Christ-like efforts. If I mistake not, the little anti-lodge leaven that has been scattered here and there in Nova Scotia, is beginning to operate; for which I praise God. —R. S. Morton, Millville, N. S.

AN ARROGANT DEMAND OF THE LODGE.

The lodge is a very arrogant, wicked thing. It causes men to be very unreasonable. Its members are to enjoy privileges which they would deny the church. A member of the G. A. R. says, "You cannot keep us out of the old U. B. church." It is an unreasonable and arrogant boast in the foundation principles of lodgery. It is the business of the church to let her light shine so as to save men from lodge religion; consequently they are invited to join the church after they repent of lodgery as well as other sin. The lodge says who its members shall be; why may not the church enjoy the same privilege? The G. A. R. receive none but old soldiers, and Freemasonry none but able bodied men. The lodge would be boss and deny the church the right to say who its members shall be. The lodge can say who its members shall be, but the church must not do so. Can anything be more unfair? To deny others the same privileges we enjoy would be a cruel absurdity, but no more so than lodgery.—Cyrus Smith, DeKalb, Iowa.

LITERATURE.

Fun and Finance. A discussion of Modern Church Novelties in connection with the subject of Christian Giving. By Rev. Newton Wray. Pp. 162. Price 35c. Boston, McDonald, Gill & Co.

The importance of the subject treated in this little volume nor the value and force of the argumented must not be judged by the size of the book itself. In 1875–80 the influence of the Moody revivals was felt all over the country, in a great quickening of the spirituality of the churches and a return to Scriptural methods of conducting their work. But we are again sadly lapsing into all sorts of suppers, feasts, fairs, and attendant devices for raising money. This book of Mr. Wray's though it is introduced with a facetious title, is a most earnest, able and severe rebuke of this development of worldliness in the churches, which follows very naturally wherever the lodge is accepted among the church membership. Dr. A. J. Gordon, the beloved pastor of the Clarendon St. Baptist church, Boston, writes an introductory that every Christian may profitably read. He maintains those fundamental principles which cut out the foundatio nof all sorts of worldliness in the church from the lodge down. Mr. Wray shows how the "fair" method stifles benevolence, is a violation of Christian vows, secularizes the church, and sets aside the Word of the Lord. He reviews favorably the tithe claim, and above all the Gospel claim to the "all that a man hath;" and shows in conclusion the responsibility and guilt of the pulpit in this matter. The book ought to be in the hand of every minister, and many of them would find it a very profitable investment to put a copy into every family of the church.

The "Marvelous Finger New Testament" is surely the greatest novelty ever made in testaments. This wonderful specimen of printing and binding exhibits the properties of the famous "Oxford India Paper," and weighs in limp binding about three-quarters of an ounce, is only one inch in width, three and a half inches in length, and one-third of an inch in thickness, yet it contains 552 pages (the whole of the New Testament), in a type which, though necessarily minute, is yet clear, distinct, and perfectly legible. Everybody who wishes the Word of God in so compact a form that it can be put in a watch-pocket, will thank Thomas Nelson & Sons, of the Oxford Bible Publishers, for this wonderful piece of workmanship.

A paper on "Leprosy in the East," writen by Mrs. General Lew Wallace, and originally published in the Sunday School Times, is to be included in a report of the Smithsonian Institution on the progress of Oriental Science in America during the year 1889.

Rev. Calvin Fairbank, one of the old Anti-Slavery heroes, is still living at Angelica, N. Y. He has written an account of some of the incidents in his career during the exciting years preceding the war, which will be published in book form by the Patriotic Publishing Co., Chicago. It will be out of press October 1st.

"The Whole World Kin," is the title of a history of the missionary life of Rev. Nathan Brown, which gives a thrilling account of twenty-three years pioneer work with his wife and children in the jungles of India; sixteen years as editor of The American Baptist, an outspoken paper on the sins of slavery, intemperance, secret societies, etc., and thirteen years as missionary and translator of the Scriptures in Japan.

The authors of the Life of Lincoln, just completed in The Century, Messrs. Nicolay and Hay, are to write several papers for the same magazine on Lincoln's personal traits. They are to appear during the coming volume. In the October number of this greatest of American magaziues Prof. Darwin, of Cambridge, England, contributes a paper of high and original value on "Meteorites and the History of Stellar Systems." A striking photograph of a nebula, in which a system like our own solar system seems to be in actual formation, accompanies this remarkable paper. "A Hard Road to Travel Out of Dixie," is the accurate title of a paper in the Century's new war-prison series. The present contribution is by the well-known artist and illustrator, Lieut. W. H. Shelton of New York. "Prehistoric Cave-Dwellings" is a profusely and strikingly illustrated paper by F. T. Bickford, on the prehistoric and ruined pueblo structures in Chaco Canon, New Mexico, the Canon de Chelly, Arizona,—the ancient home of the most flourishing community of cave-dwellers, —and other extraordinary cave villages not now inhabited. Miss Helen Gray Cone contributes a paper on "Women in American Literature," in which she reviews the whole field of American female authorship. Several articles have a general or special bearing on the fall elections—in the direction of reform and a wholesome independence. The leading "Topic of the Time" shows by a review of the political history of the country that there has always been "Partisan Recognition of the Independent Voter," and that State "calls" and conventions, and national "calls" and platforms have all along appealed to good citizens to take fresh and indepedent action in every election. The editor, in separate editorials, sustains the present Civil Service Commission, and citizen's movement in New York city.

The announcement is made of the early issue of a new and completely re-edited edition of our great American Dictionary, to be called "Webster's International Dictionary of the English Language." The old work has borne on its title page the words "An American Dictionary," but the international recognition of "Webster's" as an authority wherever the English language is spoken, certainly justifies its publishers in adopting the broader and more comprehensive description. The first edition of Webster's Dictionary that was called the "Unabridged" was an edition published in 1847. The edition of 1859 was the same book from A to Z, with a supplement. The legitimate successor of that work was the revised edition published in 1864 (still copyrighted), which soon superseded the older editions in public favor. To this supplements were subsequently added. No less than one hundred editors have contributed to the revised book, such scholars as Profs. E. S. Sheldon, August Fick, Samuel W. Barnum, Samuel Porter, R. H. Chittenden, Sidney I. Smith and Daniel C. Eaton being among the number. The publishers, Merriam & Co., of Springfield, Mass., promise that the new book will be on the market about October 1.

Noticeable in this month's St. Nicholas is the article "Through a Detective Camera," written by Mr. Black, the well-known amateur, and illustrated with characteristic bits of child life; the street scenes are as perfect as insects in amber. Another story with a sly moral administered in a well-flavored medium is "The Gwynnes' Little Donkey," by Kate Woodbridge Michaels. This tells of the substitution of a pet donkey for the overworked drudge of a tinker's cart. It is the sort of story that is sure to make young people think, and yet not set them to worrying.

The American Agriculturist for October talks with the farmers about the lamb market, the culture of the ramie fibre, storing potatoes (an important question this year), also of cabbages, the farm work-shop, the fertility and exhaustability of soil, celery blanching, horses in Spain, farming in Corea, etc., and vast store of profitable reading for everybody who has a plat of land to work.

The controversy over the moral character of "Father Damien", the leper priest of the Sandwich Islands, between the novelist R. L. Stevenson and Rev. Dr. Hyde of Honolulu has led to the publication of a pamphlet by the Boston Congregationalist, in which the leper priest is shown to have been no better than other "holy fathers" who are doomed to a life of celibacy.

The Converted Catholic reprints this month some choice portions of the Independent's long symposium on the Romanist parochial schools. The case of the priest Burtsell and Archbishop Corrigan is explained; and there are interesting notes about the late Cardinal Newman of England.

If you have catarrh, you are in danger, as the disease is liable to become chronic and affect your general health, or develop into consumption. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh by purifying and enriching the blood, and building up the system. Give it a trial.

Sioux City Corn Palace.

Sept. 25 to Oct. 11, 1890.

WHAT IS A CORN PALACE?

The Sioux City Corn Palace—and there never was a corn palace outside of Sioux City—is a palace covered and embellished, as with tapestry, outside and inside, with products of the field, corn predominating, ingeniously and fancifully arranged. In building the palace, a large structure is first erected of lumber, of a shape that will carry and show to advantage the multiform decorations with which it is to be adorned. It is in form lofty, with broken lines, pinnacles, buttresses, bridges, gables, ornamental windows, etc.

Over every inch of this wooden surface are laid corn and kindred plants, in architectural harmony, in a multiplicity of designs. The corn is employed in the stalk, the ear, the kernel, and even the husk has its decorative uses. All the grains and grasses of the field lend themselves to the beautifying of the palace. The walls are covered on the outside with ears of corn, cut lengthwise or crosswise, and nailed on in geometrical figures or other designs. The various colors of the cereal permit of a wide range of shading and coloring, while its artistic possibilities, developed from year to year in building the palace, admit of the production of effects that are as startling as pleasurable.

High over the entrance of the palace of 1889 was King Corn's crown as the nucleus of a sunburst, while below was the national flag in graceful folds—all wrought in vary-colored corn as true and as beautiful as if painted by an artist's brush. The roof is overlaid with corn leaves. Pinnacles and columns are capped with the sorghum plant, or with grains and grasses. The iridescent walls, seen from a near distance, seem to be a rich mosaic of polished woods, while with the

that

From its roof tree float and flow, the palace enraptures the beholder as one who looks upon a cloud-painted mansion that may dissolve before his eyes.

The interior work is finer and more elaborate. Here the kernel of the corn is largely employed, producing amazing and lovely effects. On the walls are wrought pictures, illustrating farm scenes, legendary and nursery tales, etc., with a fidelity that is calculated to raise a doubt that the material employed is the homely utilitarian growth of Western farms. Frescoes and flowers, figures of persons and animals, draperies, and thousands of surprising and beautiful things, are made of field plants, for the delight of the visitors to the palace, whose astonishment is succeeded by admiration of the genius that conceived and developed so much of art and beauty from such homely fabrics as are employed.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1890.

THE ARGUMENT

of Dr. Smith and the opinion and record of Hon. Edward Everett are a contribution to the college fraternity discussion which are to be highly valued. For next week we do not wish at this writing to promise what shall be given in this review of college secretism. Any mail may bring the contribution of President McFarland of Iowa Wesleyan University, which has been long and unavoidably delayed. It it does not reach the office in time we shall possibly give the views of a writer of some note in favor of these orders. No complete answer can be made to the defenders of the college fraternity system, unless we study their arguments.

The invitation is renewed to all college instructors and students who may see this notice to contribute their views to this discussion.

MINISTERING SPIRITS.—"Are they not all [the angels] ministering spirits?" See Heb. 1: 14. The angels fed Christ in the desert, and strengthened him in the Garden. And as, in Christ, we are come to "an innumerable company of angels," we are entitled to, and should ask for, angel ministries. And as Moses and Elias "appeared" on the Mount with Jesus, and spake of his coming death at Jerusalem, doubtless to comfort and strengthen him for that bitter agony, their coming and office seems to prove that the holy dead departed, being "equal to the angels" (Luke 20: 36), are also, as were Moses and Elias, ministering spirits, caring, as did Moses and Elias, for the things and persons for whom they cared and labored here. But we should not consult them, as Saul did Samuel.

PARALYSIS OF THE CHURCHES.—"A good minister, says the Standard (Baptist), who had labored in many churches in the West, assisting pastors during revival efforts, said: 'Our churches are decaying, dying out for want of efficient pastors'—those capable of really 'feeding the flock.' Assent was given to this, with the addition of another cause, the neglect of working for the conversion of children, and also of convert culture."

But what makes inefficient pastors? We answer, one great cause is church-organs, which stuff ministers' minds with goodish articles and sectarian news, but shun to declare the whole counsel of God against secret lodges and other popular evils.

The minister or church paper miscalled "religious" which avoids a reigning evil is not only weak but wicked. It is weak, because it carries its conscience in a sling which, persevered in, paralyzes an arm. It is wicked, because it suppresses truth which it is paid for teaching.

MR. BOWEN AND THE INDEPENDENT.

Many long years ago Theodore D. Weld and Henry B. Stanton were sent to Andover Theological Seminary by the New York committee to procure lecturers for the American Anti-slavery Society. One result was, the writer (the senior Cynosure editor) entered the field. The Tappans, Arthur and Lewis, leading Abolitionists, were prominent merchants in New York; and Henry C. Bowen was their clerk. Bowen and McNamee succeeded the Tappan firm; and when a general boycott was threatened them by Southern merchants, they published what became their famous announcement, "Our goods are in market, but not our principles."

Mr. Bowen must be near the age of Gladstone. He took the New York Independent, and, with some important drawbacks while he employed Henry Ward Beecher, Theodore Tilton, and Oliver Johnson, has made the paper a stupendous success. And as he began his public life with a testimony for principle at the expense of popularity, and God has sustained him, we hope that "God will be his guide even unto death," Ps. 48: 14.

The writers whom he now employs on the Independent lately used this extraordinary language concerning the swarm of secret lodges which they see and say is destroying the churches by drawing off the men, and leaving them to women and children:

> "We believe there is no more important question before our churches than how they can learn something from the lodges:"

and then they add:

> "The Congregationalist well says, 'The church should study to find out what makes the lodges so attractive to the average man, and then it should strive to give him that or its equivalent, so far as lies within its province.'"

Now all the standard writers of the mother and type of these lodges (to-wit, Masonry), declare and prove that it is derived from Egyptian idolatry, mystery, and sun-worship! These writers say, and prove too, that the sun-worship of Isis and Osiris were and are the Eleusinian and other mysteries which Paul commanded Christians to disfellowship, Eph. 5: 11; and therefore what "is so attractive in these lodges to the average man," is Gentile worship, or worship of devils; and the Independent and Congregationalist advise our churches to afford similar attractions to those afforded by the man-made mysteries, jugglery, priestism, and sorceries which have "attracted" and enslaved the "average man," in multitudes, from Cain's altar down to Salt Lake!

We implore Mr. Bowen, by the memories which surrounded him when we first saw him in Arthur and Lewis Tappan's store in New York, to give some thoughtful and prayerful investigation to this matter. Statistics will show that the Christian religion has built more hospitals, and now supports more poor, cares for more sick and buries more dead, than all the secret lodges on earth, a thousand to one. In five or six years after William Morgan's death 1,500 lodges died, containing 45,000 Masons, and no poor man suffered by their death! And if all the secret lodges in pagan and Christian lands were struck out of existence to-day, and their members should become Christians, it would make a heaven on earth to-morrow, weak and corrupt as the churches are. True, in Christian lands, secret lodge-swindles may spring up, and watch by the sick-beds of their members for a few days; but a candid examination of the secret lodge system will show that "their attractions for the average man" are similar to those that attract charmed frogs into a snake's mouth. The power of the lodge consists in spurious worship, lying legends, false promises, jugglery, incantation and direct charm or mesmerism of the devil.

THE A. M. A. AT NORTHAMPTON.

The American Missionary Association holds its anniversary this year in Northampton, Mass., Oct. 21. One said: "Neptune governs the sea, and Terra rules the earth; but what does Jupiter do?" His priest replied, "Jupiter spends his time casting down the haughty and lifting up the crushed."

The A. M. A. was born for a similar purpose. Two Spanish pirates, fifty years ago, shipped a crew on the Amistad schooner; went to Mendi in Africa and brought off a cargo of slaves, who rose and slaughtered the whole crew except Montez and Ruiz, the pirates. They lashed these to the mast, promising them their lives if they would take them back to Africa; but the pirates steered for the United States. John Quincy Adams took their case to the Supreme Court, which freed the Mendians. Lewis Tappan, their protector, sent the Negroes to school; raised money and started a mission in the Mendi country, as no existing mission board dared risk the unpopularity of taking them up.

This was the beginning of the divorce of American missions from American slavery. It resulted in the American Missionary Association, whose field is now the down-trodden races, the Negroes, Indians, Chinese, and two millions of mountain whites in the South.

Some years since it was proposed to hold an anti-secret meeting in the Town House in Northampton, and Pres. Seelye of Amherst said to this writer, "I will do all I can for your meeting except to speak, which I am unable to do." A conference of nineteen Congregational churches, met at Cumington, allowed a paper in behalf of such a convention to be read to them. And the pastors of four churches of that conference said they would allow collections to be taken to defray expenses

It is to be hoped the Northampton A. M. A. meeting will vote to send Joseph Cook's pamphlet on "Disloyal Secret Oaths" to all their missionaries. Northampton is in a charming region; and if faithful to Christ the meeting will be thrilling, joyous and magnificent.

THE "VOICE" AND THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

In commenting on the recent attempt of some Knights of Labor to wreck trains on the New York Central railway, and of the implication of Master Workman Lee, the Voice says:

> "If some way cannot be devised of preventing such men as these train-wreckers from entrance in any considerable numbers into the organization, and of preventing the elevation to office of reckless and conscienceless men, or, at least, of curtailing their power for evil when elevated, then the claims of humanity and the claims of the Knights of Labor are in direct antagonism."

We can safely assure the Voice that no such way will ever be found out. The difficulty is not in the men who make up the rank and file of the order, but in the nature of the system with which they are connected. Any organization for whatever purpose that swears its members to "secrecy and obedience" will inevitably, sooner or later, be used for selfish and evil purposes. The secrecy of the lodge is believed to secure men from ordinary responsibility to public criticism, and their oath of obedience makes them largely the tools in the hands of others. This was the evil of Jesuitism. The men who instituted the order of Jesuits were actuated by the highest considerations of Christian beneficence. Among its members have been those who were eminent for their self-sacrificing devotion to the good of humanity. Both its efficiency and its inherent vice lay in the fact that it was organized as a system of secret sworn obedience; and this is substantially true of the Knights of Labor and of all our secret organizations. Whatever may be said in extenuation of such obedience in times of war, which is a condition supposed to justify the suspension of the entire moral code, there is no excuse for such organizations in times of peace. No such organization can long escape the contaminating influence of irresponsible power. When the Voice shall find out a method by which slaveholders shall never become oppressors, and by which men who are free to sell alcohol shall never part with it but for beneficent purposes, it will doubtless find a secret order that can use evil methods for no other than beneficent ends.

—Soon after he is settled in Berea again Elder J. F. Browne promises for our readers a review of the work of the past season, in which many who have known his faithfulness and zeal will be interested.

—The Washington agent has returned home from Baltimore, and during the next few weeks will labor in the capital city largely among the colored churches. He hopes to have the Pennsylvania work in readiness for a good State convention in a few months.

—While lately writing to some brother about the Masonry of the Methodist bishops, we were not able to speak positively of Bishop J. P. Newman. We learn that in 1887, while pastor in Washington of the Metropolitan M. E. Church, a Masonic funeral was held in his church, and he paraded his connection with the order and highly commended it to his hearers.

—The Christian Statesman has arranged with Rev. W. F. Crafts, author of "The Sabbath for Man" and "The Civil Sabbath," and founder of the American Sabbath Union, to publish weekly for three months valuable chapters which he is preparing to supplement his "Sabbath for Man." The issues of the Statesman containing these articles can be had for twenty-five cents.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—It is proposed to erect at Pittsburgh a monument to Stephen G. Foster, author of "Old Folks at Home," and other songs.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman has been joined in Berea, Ky., by his youngest son, who has charge of the printing office belonging to the college.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard attends the meeting of the American Board this week in Minneapolis, ready to give a testimony against the paganizing of American churches by the lodge.

—Miss Lizzie Johnston, daughter of the late Rev. William Johnston, D.D., of College Springs, has been sent by the United Presbyterian Woman's Board as city missionary to South Omaha, Neb.

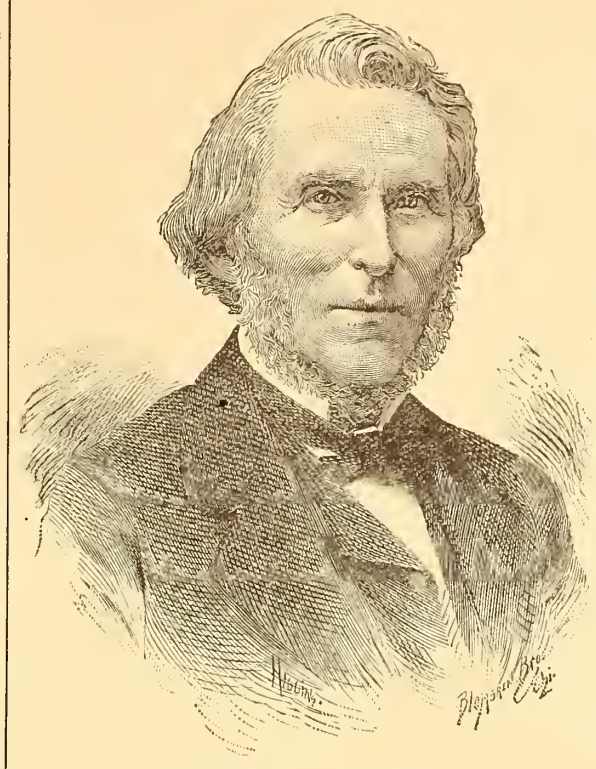
—Joseph Cook has just returned home from a long lecture tour in the summer schools. He is now at Cliff Seat, Lake George, engaged in editorial work for Our Day. But he soon goes to the Pacific Coast to fill engagements for thirty lectures.

—David Tatum, the Quaker temperance evangelist of Cleveland, Ohio, is now in Nebraska, where he will be in the thick of the prohibition conflict until November. His work is under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. He has been in the temperance work for many years.

—Elizabeth Comstock, the companion of Laura S. Haviland in labors of mercy for God's poor, now aged and infirm, is living at Union Springs, New York. The Woman's News says she has visited 122,000 prisoners, 195,000 sick and wounded soldiers, and 85,000 inmates of poorhouses.

—Rev. J. C. Keezel, son-in-law of Rev. R. Loggan, our late Kansas State agent, died at Philomath, Oregon, Sept. 26. He has been for several years president of Philomath College, and his sudden call in the prime of manhood was caused by a fall from the roof of the college building.

—Mr. W. B. Brown, of 114 Nassau St., New York, is a son of the revered Dr. Nathan Brown, who died a few years since in Japan. He is engaged in mission work in the Atlantic metropolis, and remembers when it was published of his father that he had killed the chanticleer of Freemasonry.



—C. S. Bullock, late of Evanston and Northwestern University, is disappointed after having made preparation for a work in Jamaica. Dr. Johnson, whose place he was to take in an independent mission to the neglected people of the interior, has changed his plan and will return to the Jamaica field himself.

—Rev. J. Franklin Browne, of Berea, Ky., and Miss Margaret Work, of Wenona, Ill., were married at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Sarah A. Work, Sept. 25, 1890, by pastor W. W. Coe. Miss Work was a teacher in Howe Institute, New Iberia, La., during the last year of Bro. Browne's stay there,—was the principal helper last year with Miss J. P. Moore in her school for the training of colored women for Christian work, at Baton Rouge, La. After spending a very few days with friends in Wisconsin, Illinois, Ohio and northern Kentucky, Mr. and Mrs. Browne go to Berea, Ky. Bro. B. will engage in evangelistic work among the mountain people near Berea, and will do editorial work on the Reunion. The Cynosure speaks for itself and readers a thousand congratulations, with the prayer that this new relation may be the beginning of a long, useful and happy wedded life.

GEORGE BARRELL CHEEVER.

Last Wednesday at his home in Englewood, New Jersey, Rev. Geo. B. Cheever, D. D., LL. D. died peacefully and conscious to the last hour. He was born in Hallowell, Maine, in 1807, and his eighty-three and one-half years of life have been remarkable in activity and zeal for the kingdom of God. While in college and theological seminary he began contributions to leading magazines and the compilation of works of literature. He began preaching with great fervor in 1833 in Salem, and powerfully assailed the Unitarianism prevailing in that city. He attacked the liquor power of the region also in the Dea. Giles' Distillery dream. For this he was thrown into jail for libel, and the case went to the Supreme Court of the State. His next labor was in the Allen Street Presbyterian church in New York, where his undaunted spirit was felt on all sides in pulpit, platform and press labors. In Europe for a rest, new books followed. The Church of the Puritans was organized on his return in 1846, and he was first pastor, being at the same time one of the editors of the Independent. He attacked slavery with all the invincible weapons of truth's armory, and with inspired and lofty courage. After the martyrdom of John Brown, however, some of the church could no longer endure so much Gospel Abolitionism, and during his absence in Europe, an ex-parte council, convenient tool for such creatures as assailed him, separated him and his church from the Congregational fellowship. God abolished slavery and the churches came over to the side of Dr. Cheever.

He continued to preach until 1867, when he retired from the active ministry and removed to the home where he died, thirty-three years later. But during all this time his pen has been actively defending the truth and condemning evils in church and nation. God made him an Elijah for his time, and in spirit and power he much resembled the great prophet of Israel. An extended review of his life will be found in the Cynosure of Dec. 30, 1886, written by his brother, Rev. Henry T. Cheever. Upon whom has his mantle fallen?

IOWA CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, is hereby called to meet in the Free Methodist church at Fairfield, Iowa, Tuesday, Dec. 2, at 2 P. M., to continue its sessions through the following day. Efforts will be made to secure some of the ablest speakers on the subject to address the convention. The committee hope to furnish free entertainment to all delegates. All churches and associations opposed to secret societies are urged to send delegates to this meeting.

C. D. TRUMBULL, Cor. Sec.

THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Let every church, every society, every citizen that believes the Columbian Exposition should obey the laws of God and of our country, endorse the following or some other protest or petition and send immediately to "Columbian Commission, Grand Pacific Hotel, Chicago, Ill." The Commission meets October 7th, and following days.

WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

To the Columbian Commission:

The undersigned societies, churches, and citizens earnestly petition you to decide at once that the Columbian Exposition shall NOT, by Sunday opening of any department, increase the toil and traffic and turmoil of Chicago's Sunday, which its churches and workingmen alike are seeking to reform; shall not break the Sunday laws of Illinois and disregard the Sunday laws of the States, which both Commission and Exposition are expected to represent; shall not trample on the rights of conscience and the liberty to rest of the exhibitors and the army of employees whose powers will be taxed to the utmost in transporting and feeding visitors, and working the Exposition on other days; shall not, under the shallow plea of gratifying workingmen for a Sunday or two, help to destroy their Rest Day altogether; shall not proclaim to the world that since the Centennial our country has surrendered the American Sabbath, the most distinctive of American institutions, and enthroned in its place the Continental Sunday, "the holiday of despotism;" shall not endanger its own success in the country at large by outraging the Christian sentiments of the best citizens to gratify the miserly greed for gold and the prodigal greed for amusement and the infidel hatred of Christianity that together make most of the clamor for Sunday opening.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 1, 1890.

Congress received a well deserved rebuke when Vice President Morton presented to the Senate resolutions adopted by the annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, requesting both Houses of Congress to refrain from holding any session for legislation on the Sabbath day. A little more than a week previous to the receipt of these resolutions (to be exact, on Sunday, Sept. 21) the conferees on the tariff bill, composed of some of the most eminent Senators and Representatives, devoted the greater portion of the Sabbath day to legislative work. There was no valid excuse for thus desecrating the Lord's day, and I am glad the rebuke has come so soon, and from such an influential body.

The Senate bill forfeiting the property of the Mormon church in Utah has been favorably reported to the House, and from talks with a large number of members I am certain that it will be passed if it can be gotten before the House during the short session, which is somewhat doubtful owing to the shortness of that session and the large number of bills upon which the House will be compelled to act.

Every temperance organization here has been invited to join the Catholic Total Abstinence Society in celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Father Matthew, which takes place Oct. 10, 1890. The details of the demonstration have not been definitely settled, but it is the intention of those having the celebration in charge to make it the most memorable temperance event that ever took place here.

Pool-selling is no longer legal in the District of Columbia, except during the races and upon the race track. The exception was by no means palatable to the ladies and gentlemen who have been working to break up this evil, but when they learned that unless they accepted the amendment, which was offered by a Senator who possesses great political influence, the bill could not be passed, they remained passive, believing it better to drive out the gamblers who remained here all the time, and trust to the growth of a healthy, moral public opinion to stop the gambling on the race courses sometime in the near future, than to kill the bill by active opposition to the amendment. The pool-sellers have now located on the Virginia side of the Potomac, just opposite Washington, and the evil done to the young men of Washington will not be greatly lessened unless the Virginia authorities are more vigilant in enforcing their laws against gambling than they have been in the past.

It has been decided by the Attorney General for the Post-office department that the anti-lottery law will exclude from the mails newspapers printing advertisements of raffles at church fairs or announcing the results of such raffles.

It is regarded as a good healthy sign indicating moral improvement to find members of Congress taking an active part in our local temperance work. Representative Morse of Massachusetts, delivered an able address on "Gospel Temperance" an evening or two ago to a large meeting held under the auspices of the Army and Marine Corps department of the Non-partisan W. C. T. U. He advised his hearers to practice total abstinence from tobacco as well as from intoxicating liquors. On the same evening Representative Kerr, of Iowa, was the principal speaker at another meeting. Mr. Kerr made an elaborate argument showing total abstinence as the underlying principle of prosperity.

The first session of the Fifty-first Congress, which ends this week, has been usually long, and a very large number of new laws have been enacted; but to the shame of American statesmen be it said, the number of bills passed in the interest of moral reform may be counted on the finers of one hand, and it will not require all of them. Why is this? Surely, no one will undertake to say that a great majority of the people of the United States are not earnestly in favor of the enactment of laws to aid in teaching the minority the value of moral reform, both to individuals and to the country at large. Why is it, then, that Congress has not done more in this direction? It is not my purpose to answer this question, though it would not be difficult to do so. Let every man and woman who reads this ask, "Am I in any way to blame? Have I done my duty in bringing good influences to bear upon Congress?"

TRUST.

BY REV. ALEXANDER THOMSON.

Alone to-night,—all, all alone!
Alone to-night with Thee;
While the low wind sings in undertone
Like the murmuring of the sea.

The moon shines in the dome of blue
With clear and mellow beams,
And stars like blossoms are shining through,
As in a land of dreams.

Now hope and fear like light and shade
Come fleeting o'er the mind;
And sorrow moves with heavy wings,
But hope flies close behind.

I know not what the future holds
Within her lap from Thee;
But well I know Thou wilt not take
The trusting heart from me.

The sun shall loose its golden beams,
And all the stars grow dim,
Before my Father leaves a soul
Whose trust is fixed on him.

Then here I bring the souls I love
More than my life to Thee,
And trust them to Thy mercies, Lord,
That have supported me.

TRIED AS BY FIRE.

[Concluded from last week.]

Friday evening there was the usual company of men and boys at the grocery when the mail arrived; and Brierly took advantage of the opportunity to read aloud the Ensign's news concerning the Barnbury scandal and also the editorial blast about ministers with damaged reputations and without proper credentials, forcing themselves on the people of the shore-towns. Loud and varied were the comments made on the affair by the by-standers. Brierly expressed no opinion publicly, but the chairman of the standing committee, who had listened intently to the reading, went home with his blood tingling at the insinuation the shrewd reporter quietly dropped as to where that minister might be now. In the Ensign there was no favorable notice of the presence and work of Rev. Phineas Duston, an omission which helped confirm the suspicion which now with rapid wings flew from house to house.

Late Saturday afternoon Rev. Phineas Duston had finished his preparation for the next day. He was resolved to do his utmost best for his Master, and strive not only to please, but to help the people who should assemble at the house of God. His meditations were interrupted by the entrance of the chairman, who bluntly announced his errand. There was a divinity student stopping at a hotel on Brant's shore, and the committee would like to have him occupy the pulpit tomorrow. It gave the parson quite a strong nervous shock, but he readily consented to stand aside and let the young man take his place.

Sunday saw a greatly diminished congregation in the church, and a certain restlessness in the people, which the young man, with all his eloquence, could not overcome. The older man sat in the pulpit, and at the request of the young man offered the long prayer at the morning service; with that exception he had nothing to do during the entire Sabbath. At the close of the service only two or three came forward to shake his hand, and they did so in a constrained, unwilling manner that puzzled and hurt him. The Squire was not out for the day. What it could all mean the parson could not imagine. He went to rest that night crushed, so great was the revulsion of feeling from that of last Sunday and all the week. But he laid the burden on the Lord, and laid himself down in sleep, hoping things would be explained on the morrow, if, indeed, it were not all a matter of his imagination, aroused by the fact that another man had been put in his place. He chided himself for such an un-Christian spirit.

The morning did not bring relief, nor did the days that followed. He found that wherever he went the women were shy of him and the men did not welcome him. So sharp was the contrast to last week that he was overwhelmed with agony. He asked himself many times: Shall I leave and go home? What reason can I give for doing so? Yet how can I stay?

By the middle of the week he found himself isolated practically by all except Deacon Purkis and wife. With them there was no change at all. Wednesday afternoon he returned from a lonely walk on the shore and sat down to supper with a heavy heart, though he tried hard to conceal it.

During the meal a neighbor's boy brought in the mail, which had just arrived. There were two letters for the parson. One was from his dear little wife; he knew the writing and put the missive in his pocket to enjoy when alone. The other letter he opened and read at once. He frowned, he smiled, and a tear started to flow down his cheek, but was quickly whisked away. He passed the letter without comment to the deacon, who read it aloud, as follows:

"Rev. Sir:—Your game is up. You are known. Poke Island if small, but not small enough for you to hide in. If you remain in town forty-eight hours longer you will be publicly exposed and denounced. A word to the wise, etc."

There was no signature.

Deacon Purkis and his wife were very indignant that such a letter should be sent their guest; but they begged him to excuse them from making such little explanation as they might make, for at least another day, at the same time assuring him of their sympathy and esteem in words and manner unmistakably sincere.

Soon after the parson went to his room and did not return for the evening. He was indignant—eager to go and challenge his unknown correspondent to tell his tale and let him meet it—then would come moments of bitter grief. What was this terrible thing the people believed him guilty of—he so innocent. He decided that he must wait with patience the forty-eight hours' time set in the letter, and then perhaps he could sift the matter. With prayers and tears, and not with sleep, he passed the night.

In all this time the chairman had not been idle. He thought that there must be some foundation for the rumor that the Rev. Phineas Dustin was a fallen and disgraced minister, yet he did not see how it could be true. He refrained from talking about the matter, but, as a cautionary measure, had employed the divinity student to preach the previous Sunday. Then he had written to several well-informed clergymen in the denomination, and had interviewed the editor of the Jackson Ensign. The editor could give him little satisfaction; but under the spur of certain remarks of the chairman volunteered to go to Barnbury and investigate.

On Thursday—it was a dark Thursday to Rev. Phineas Dustin—the chairman received several replies to his letters of inquiry, all speaking of Rev. Phineas Dustin as a man above reproach, standing high in the opinion of his brethren and never having been settled at Barnbury; that Huckins was his home and had been for years, and not a temporary asylum from Barnbury.

Then did the chairman's wrath rise high, and he hurried out to find Brierly. After searching for him in both the stores, in all the fish-houses and along the wharves, he finally went to his home, and, unexpectedly, found him there. It was owing to a sprained ankle which forbade him the pleasure of going out on a search for gossip. The chairman read the reporter the letters he had received. He listened with amused interest, and then coolly remarked: "Then our parson isn't the Barnbury parson, after all!" The chairman towered, he threatened, he showed the reporter how great was the injury done an innocent man, and also the church. Brierly only shrugged his shoulders, laughed a little, and blew a cloud of tobacco smoke toward the aroused church officer.

While this was going on the editor of the Ensign came in, having driven down from Jackson Junction to tell Brierly what a mistake had been made, and to forestall the indignation which he felt sure would be aroused when the whole truth came out. He did not go to Barnbury, but had telegraphed a friend there, and learned that the Poke Island minister was not the man he had supposed, so he had hurried at once to Brierly.

The editor viewed the matter from a different standpoint than did Brierly. He had more at stake in his paper, and he was more of a man. So, when he had read the letters the chairman had received he readily consented to go to Parson Dustin and explain and apologize. Brierly sneered at his weakness, but was a little disconcerted when his chief quietly informed him that he need send no further communications to the Ensign, as none from him would be received. He kept his word, to the joy of all Poke Island.

Rev. Phineas Dustin received his callers in the sitting room of Deacon Purkis, the deacon and his wife remaining by request. The editor told his story as we have here told it, and the chairman showed what had been his share in the affair and produced the letters. Both of them, like true men, sought to make amends. The parson was amazed. With tears flowing he took these men by the hand and begged them to forget it all, that he bore them only love. Then he prayed such a prayer of thanksgiving for deliverance from evil that he unconsciously showed the four how much he had suffered.

Now the clouds had cleared away and he was again to preach. Carefully did he prepare for the Sabbath services.

By Sunday the news had spread among the people, and that day they seemed to feel that as a matter of penance or apology they should attend church. The result was that when Rev. Phineas Dustin stepped upon the platform he faced a crowded house—and the faces were full of sympathy.

How sweetly did he beam upon them from over his spectacles. He was never so full of love—never so clear and logical and impressive in his sermon. He did not refer to the cruel matter of the past week publicly, and was quite displeased when several of the crowd, who came up after the sermon to shake hands, spoke of the affair shamefacedly.

The next night there was a parish meeting. "So sweet a spirit," "so eloquent," "learned," "gentlemanly;" such were the expressions heard at the meeting, which voted unanimously to extend a call to Rev. Phineas Dustin to become their pastor.

The call was accepted, and his labors began at once. He left town only long enough to get his wife and their household effects in Huckins and transport them to the Poke Island parsonage.

Last evening the people gave their pastor and wife a reception in the vestry of the church. All the town was there except Tom Brierly. He has gone out of the newspaper line. The chairman, the deacon and the Squire each made a neat little speech; but by request of Rev. Phineas Dustin no reference was made to the late unpleasant mistake in identity, and only once or twice was it mentioned at the supper-table, and then in a low tone by some of the young people who were glad that for once the male gossip of the place had fired a boomerang.—Independent.

WONDER TREES.

Is there any one who loves the strange, the rare, the curious, the terrible, the grand in nature? Let him come and walk through a grove of world's wonder trees, and the passion for the marvelous will, for a time at least, be sated.

The first tree in our grove is the Cowthorpe Oak of Yorkshire, England. Evelyn celebrates it in his Sylva. This tree is wonderful for size and age. It is fifteen hundred years old; its girth at the ground is seventy-eight feet; forty persons can stand within its hollow bole; one of its main branches, which broke off in a heavy gale, yielded five tons of timber; the branches shaded half an acre of ground; the circumference of this tree is greater than that of the famous Eddystone light-house, which was modeled on the pattern of an oak. This Cowthorpe Oak is not the largest tree in the world. There is a tree in South America with a girth of one hundred and twelve feet; and a California redwood tree measures one hundred feet just above the ground.

Australia is a land of wonders, animal and vegetable, and one of its curiosities is the next tree in our Wonder Grove, the bottle tree. The name comes from the shape of the tree, which is like that of a giant bottle. This tree is sixty feet high; the bark is a smooth, shining brown, like thick glass. The tree is largest at the root, being about forty feet in circumference, and tapers very little until forty feet from the ground, then it narrows suddenly into a shape like the neck of a bottle, and in this neck the branches have their base. The foliage forms the large fancy cork of this quaint bottle; the leaves are small and thin, of a light green, and spread out on the branches into a dome, shaped like an umbrella. These trees grow in groves of about thirty each, and stand a hundred feet apart, as regularly as if they had been planted by a gardener.

Our next tree is so low of growth you may call it not a tree, but a shrub. It is also a native of Australia, and is much dreaded by the people. It is in its nature a monster, and is named the "Stinging Tree." No wasp, hornet or tarantula ever had a fiercer sting. And yet it is a beautiful object, this stinging tree. It grows always in a cone shape, reaches twelve feet in height, and has dark green leaves, and clusters of flame-red berries. Each leaf is saucer shaped, and notched; at the tips of each projection on the edge of the leaf grows a thorn; in this thorn is hidden the tree's terrible sting. The least touch of one of these leaves fills one with maddening pain. Beasts act as if seized with hydrophobia; human beings are partly paralyzed, and suffer agony for days and even weeks. The dry leaf, wind blown, is able to affect with its sting as seriously as the leaf still on the cruel tree. Dogs and horses stung by this tree must at once be killed, as in their pain they become dangerous.

But the stinging tree is a mild, safe and amiable plant in comparison with its neighbor of the south Australian jungles, the "Devil Tree." Here, indeed, seems to be a demon in vegetable shape, hideous and dangerous as that famous sea-dweller, the "devil" or enormous cuttle-fish. This terrible tree is happily rare and grows only in the jungle. Its shape is that of a huge pineapple, twelve or fifteen feet high, and as many in girth at the base. It is not only called the "Devil Tree" but the "Cannibal Tree," and deserves both names; it is the head and chief of the happily small order of carnivorous vegetables. The leaves spring from the top of the tree, the apex of the pineapple. They are dark green, and as long as the height of the tree. They hang down to the ground like the folds of a closed umbrella. They are dark green, straight, fifteen or eighteen inches wide, and nearly twenty inches thick. Above the leaves, on the apex of the tree, are two concave discs, set one above the other on a fleshy rod. These constantly distil a thick, sticky honey which is very intoxicating. Around these plates are long slim tendrils or palpi, like arms. When any heavy object is put on these discs and moves, the palpi or tendrils are irritated and rising up wind about the object, and draw closer and closer until it is smothered in their clasp. Thus if any bird or animal reaches the plates and drinks the liquid there scented, the instant effect is intoxication of the wildest kind. Then the palpi begins to rise and wave above their victim, clasp it close, smother it like a knot of writhing green serpents over a common prey. And now a greater marvel follows. The huge leaves that hung so quietly toward the tree's root now rise up stiffly, draw together, close in a form like a great spire over the palpi and their victim, and crowding closer and closer, like a great press, with mighty force crush the inclosed body into a shapeless pulp. The increased fluid of the tree flows down mingled with the blood of the victim, but all the juices of the body are in a few hours absorbed by the cannibal tree, then the leaves fall back, the palpi contracts, the rejected crushed bones are blown from the discs, and the devil tree stands ready for another prey.

The natives worship this tree as a demon, and sometimes sacrifice to it human beings, forcing them to ascend to the discs, drink the viscid honey which maddens them, and the palpi and leaves soon finish the barbarous sacrifice. Next to the devil tree, we find in our Wonder Grove a small shrub, only a tree by courtesy, but one of the wonders of the world, happily also a harmless curiosity, if let alone. It is the electric plant. We have long known of the electric eel, the electric fish, both of which store up electricity, and can give a powerful shock to anything touching them. A French naturalist has investigated, in Indian forests, a bush or shrub, endowed with amazing magnetic powers. At a distance of six yards it affects the magnetic needle. If you break a leaf from the plant you receive a powerful shock. Touch it with the tips of your fingers, and you receive a shock as from an induction coil. No birds or insects ever light upon it; they have learned the result too well; it would be certain death. No electric metals are ever found in the vicinity of this shrub. The electricity belongs solely to the plant. At two in the afternoon its electricity is at its height. At night it loses its curious power. During a rain it loses its electricity, and one can break the leaves with impunity. But during electric storms its intensity redoubles, so that it is as dangerous as an electric wire.

The next tree in our Wonder Grove should be the joy of all boys. It grows in Nubia, and is called the "Whistling Tree." The formation of the leaves and the leaf stems is such that this tree is a shrill musical instrument, whistling loud and clear as the jolliest school boy of them all. Africa also affords us our next wonder, the famous "Rain Tree." This is a tall and beautiful tree with wide-spread branches, and is gifted with singular power of extracting moisture from the atmosphere and from the driest soil. While the earth seems parched, and the air is hot and dry, the rain tree draws from somewhere abundant moisture, which distils like a heavy shower from all its leaves, and saturates the earth beneath it. What could be more grateful to the heated, thirsty, weary traveler, than this beneficent tree, which draws blessed moisture out of the burning desert air?

Africa is especially rich in useful wonder trees. Next to the rain tree in our Wonder Grove stands the baobab or bread tree. This tree is seldom above forty feet high, but is larger by far in the circumference of its trunk and the extent of its branches. It looks more like a great grove than a tree. If we estimate by diameter and spread of limb, the baobabs furnish the largest trees in the world. The fruit or bread of this tree is of about the size and shape of a Hubbard squash. It needs no cooking, tastes like good bread, and is so nutritious that people can live upon it and water. The baobab tree never finds an "off year" in bearing. It is always laden with a plentiful supply of good bread.

As we have here a bread tree, it is proper to put a milk tree close by its side, especially as on the other side stands a water tree. Water, bread, milk, these three trees of our grove give us all that is needful to support life. The cow tree grows in South America on the dry plains of Venezuela where food and drink are alike hard to obtain. It is a tree one hundred or more feet high, with a smooth trunk, its limbs starting seventy or eighty feet from the ground. The sap is very abundant, and has the taste and appearance of new rich milk or cream. To obtain it the tree is tapped as we tap sugar maples. This milk of the cow tree is so nutritious that it can maintain life where all other food is wanting. Why not put a sugar maple as the next wonder tree? Water, bread, milk and now sugar are products of our Wonder Grove.

Next the beautiful and generous maple, we find in our grove a wonder tree from Ceylon, the Bo tree, worshiped as a god, and famous for its long life and for the reverence paid to it by its native worshipers.

For two thousand years the sacred Bo had been the idol of Ceylonese tree-worshipers. In October, 1887, this wonderful old tree was overthrown by a tremendous storm. The fragments were cremated by the natives with all the pomp awarded to dead kings.

Lastly, next to the mighty Bo, we find in our Wonder Grove a cherry tree from Japan. It is a perfect tree, with root, trunk, branches, leaves, fruit—and is only twelve inches high. How did the Japanese gardeners produce such a curiosity from an ordinary cherry tree?

We might have many more trees in our grove. Justly deserving a place there is the palm tree, out of the leaves and fiber of which houses, roofs, beds, clothing, cups and plates, all the garments, houses and utensils needed by them are made by the Hindoos. The banyan tree is not only a house but a whole village of houses for Buddhists who dwell beneath its shelter and call it one of the marvels and great gifts of God. Where can we find God's wonder-working in creation, his fatherly providence toward men more freely exhibited than in a walk among our wonder trees?
—J. Mc. N. Wright in Mid-Continent.

Louis Schade, attorney of the National Brewers' Association, editor of the Sentinel, Washington, D. C., says: "Of all the Democratic Senators, I know of only one who is an outright Prohibitionist, and that is Colquitt of Georgia. As to the Republican Senators it is still more difficult to say who are and who are not Prohibitionists. Positively we can only point out one, and that is Senator Blair.

TEMPERANCE.

BRILLIANT BUT DISSIPATED.

Every Yale man in the city of New York has probably at one time or another met Frederick B. Swift, and generally on meeting him has gone down into his pocket and been "out" from 50 cents to $5 and "in" just so much for humanity's sake. The poor fellow was a graduate of Yale, class of '52, and was a lawyer by profession, He was at one time counsel for the Adams Express company, and had an annual income of $20,000. September 20th he was found dead in the lodgings of the Second precinct police station. A bottle of morphine told the tale. He had probably died from an overdose of the drug. A few legal papers were found in his possession. Mr. Swift had unusual abilities. His fall came from drinking. His habits in that respect grew worse and worse, until he lost everything. He was reduced to virtual begging, and made his round regularly to prosperous Yale men, who always "chipped in" something.

The encouragement of drunkenness for the sake of gaining money is a more desperate form of assassination than has ever been adopted by the bravos of any age or country.—Carlyle.

Saloon men at Roca, Neb., threw an empty beer keg through the church windows where the W. C. T. U. were holding a Demorest medal contest, severely wounding a number of women and children.

An international premium of 1,000 francs is offered by the French Temperance Society, of Paris, for the best original work on alcoholism and its cure. The offer is open until the last day of this year.

We "cordially sympathize" with that school of politicians who have long denounced prohibition as a failure and are compelled to admit it is a success by passing and endorsing the original package decision.—The People.

Vice-President Morton visiting Washington last week and stopping at his hotel, the Shoreham, resolved that there should be no more retail liquor selling in that house. Nothing less than a bottle can now be served there.

The brewers declare that the beer they make is pure and wholesome, yet they are very much opposed to the bill introduced in Congress which prohibits with severe penalties any adulteration of beer. They are on hand in force at Washington.—Rockford Monitor.

A British liquor-dealer has offered John Burns, the London labor agitator, £20 for a straw hat of his which has become famous; doubtless John Burns is a poor man, but he refused the offer; he declares he would have refused £1,000 from such a source, since the hat would only be used to entice his friends into the saloons.

A Michigan pastor tells this: "I have come across a small boy who is a philosopher, and who has solved the problem of how to get safely by the saloon. Said he: 'Papa, I'll tell you how I get by a saloon. I walk on the outside of the sidewalk, as far away from the saloon as I can; then I hold my nose and shut my mouth, and when I get by I spit before I swallow.'"

At Point Isabel, one day last week, the drug-store and fixtures were damaged to the extent of $150 by Mrs. Sizlove, to whose husband the proprietor, Emory Shields, had been selling whisky. Mr. Sizlove, while under the influence of whisky, fell from the roof of a tile mill, sustaining serious injuries. The wife's demand for damages were ridiculed, and the poor, outraged woman took matters into her own hands and dealt out summary justice upon the governmental agent, the druggist. Where is the latent manhood of this nation?

The original-package bill has given a fine impetus to the Nebraska prohibition amendment campaign. A liquor paper declares its cause "beaten at every point in the campaign so far." Leaders now believe that prohibition will be voted in, but greatly fear that it will be counted out. It is desired, therefore, to spend a considerable sum in inspection of registry lists and in the large towns their verification by a house to house canvass. St. John, who deprecates any more non-partisan campaigns, believes that the amendment will pass if corruption can be prevented.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The preparation for the passover. Vs. 7–12. The passover was the one great feast which typified the atonement. But as it was only the mere shadow of good things to come, it was now to be superseded by the Gospel feast. Christ, the true Paschal Lamb, was about to be offered, and as we approach this most solemn and impressive scene of the institution of the Last Supper, we notice several important lessons. (1) We must prepare for the feast. And it being a spiritual one, our preparations must be spiritual—no less than the complete cleansing of our hearts from all that would defile. The old Jews used to take a lighted candle and search every corner of the house to see that there was no particle of leaven anywhere; and we should be equally careful when preparing to keep the Christian passover, that we harbor none of the leaven of worldliness. (2) We do not know what may hinge on our faithful performance of the most menial task. The man bearing a pitcher of water was a very important link in the chain, though he might have been and probably was unconscious of it. In doing the humblest duty we may be fulfilling some far-reaching almighty purpose; so that in the eyes of heavenly beings our position is more important than that of many a crowned head. Those acts which have changed the world's history have seldom or never been done consciously, but almost always in ignorance of all they involved. But if we try to perform every duty, small and great, with an eye to pleasing God, our opportunities will never take us unawares. (3) The necessity for simple faith. It might have seemed to the disciples a strange command, but they obeyed it and found everything as Christ had said. If we follow out the principles of Christian living in all their logical consistency we shall do many things that to the world will seem very foolish. But if we follow on one step at a time in simple obedience, when we reach the end we shall find as the disciples did, that all is just as he said unto us. If we submit to wrong rather than contend; if we let chances for worldly gain slip by rather than compromise our principles; if we stand up for the truth when she has nothing to offer us but reproach and perhaps bitter persecution, we shall find at last the heavenly mansions furnished and prepared for our reception.

2. The Last Supper and its lessons. Vs. 14–20. Christ did not despise ceremonial observances. Nothing shows this more emphatically than his anxiety to celebrate once more the passover feast before his death. His desire was to eat it with them. It was the one opportunity for seclusion and retirement in which he could utter his last words to his disciples, and institute that ordinance which should stand as a perpetual memorial of his sufferings and death. And thus it has always stood, though too often it has been degraded on the one hand into a mere perfunctory ceremony, and loaded with superstitious observances, as in the Church of Rome; and on the other made a terror to weak and humble souls. "This do in remembrance of me." It is Christ we are to remember, not ourselves. For centuries the emblems of his broken body and shed blood have witnessed to his atoning work in the midst of an unbelieving world. Infidels have made it the butt of their blasphemous scoffs, but they have never equalled in horrible blasphemy Satan's travesty of this sacred ordinance in the Knight Templar's degree. Every Mason who has gone thus far, and drunk wine from a human skull, has participated in a Satanic burlesque by which "the cup of blessing" becomes the cup of a double curse, self invoked on his own soul. Among many secondary lessons we notice (1) Christ's table should be a constant witness against all distinctions of class, race, or color, in his church. (2) The passing of the bread and wine may well symbolize our duty when any truth is revealed to us, not to keep it to ourselves, but to pass it along. And especially should we keep the love we bear to each other as Christian, passing from hand to hand in a blessed sacrament of helpful words and kindly service. (3) We are to show forth his death till he come. It is not the mere fact of his death that we commemorate. The Lord's Supper witnesses to his resurrection, and his final coming in glory as King and Judge.

Religious News.

—The meeting of the American Board opens in Plymouth church, Minneapolis, on the 8th, at 3 P. M., and closes on Sabbath evening. The sermon is preached by Rev. Arthur Little of Boston, Wednesday evening.

—Among the conferences which have lately reported resolutions against the lodge are the White River United Brethren Conference of Indiana, the Michigan Wesleyan Methodist Conference of Indiana, and the Free Methodist conferences of Iowa, Illinois and Minnesota.

—On Wednesday of this week the General Conference of the Free Methodist church begins at the new church, No. 16 North May street, and will last until Oct. 22. It is expected that about 100 delegates will attend this important gathering, and that many visitors from abroad will also be present. The new church in which the conference is to be held will be dedicated on Oct. 12. Rev. F. D. Christie is the pastor.

—Rev. B. Fay Mills, the evangelist, began a series of meetings at the Oak Park Methodist church last Thursday, in which all the evangelical churches of that Chicago suburb have united. When these meetings are discontinued he may accept the invitation that has been extended to him to conduct a series of revival meetings at the First Congregational church (Dr. Goodwin's), in this city. Mr. Mills is a Congregational minister, formerly connected with Dr. Pentecost in the publication of Words and Weapons. He began work as an evangelist about four years ago, and has met with marked success. He is about 30 years of age, of medium height, light complexion, and has a clean-shaven face giving him a boyish appearance. His work has been principally in the East, though he held exceptionally successful meetings in Indianapolis in which twenty-three churches joined.

—October 29 has been set aside for prayer day by the W. C. T. U. through the Western States, and the Central Union of this city will hold an all-day meeting at the First Methodist church, to pray for the success of prohibition in Nebraska. On the same day it is their request that all ministers in the city make the same cause a special topic for prayar in their prayer meetings.

—Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, has secured subscriptions amounting to $65,000, for a new university building. The trustees have adopted plans for a structure which will cost, complete and furnished, about $90,000. The building will contain a chapel seating 1,400 upon the floor, but with galleries and other rooms enlarging its capacity to 2,500. The building will also contain eight or ten reception rooms, rooms for study, administrative offices, etc. Ground has been broken and the foundation of the new structure will be laid this fall.

—The North Michigan Wesleyan Methodist conference was held in the Congregational church at Hart, Mich. Rev. M. A. Kelsey, pastor of the church, and his people freely gave the use of their building, and showed the conference many other kindnesses. Bro. Hart is president of the Congregational committee appointed at the the April Conference in this city.

—Mr. Peter Bilhorn, the evangelistic singer, began Sept. 21, a series of revival meetings at the Tabernacle Church in this city, Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Rev. Mr. McCord of Armour Mission, Prof. Samuel I Curtis of the Chicago Theological Seminary, and others have assisted. Mr. Bilhorn's singing is very effective, and his appeals are apt and touching. About one hundred have signified their intention to lead a Christian life.

—A branch of the Salvation Army appeared in Chester, Pa., a week ago last Sunday. The good people of the town did not like their methods of working, and the chief of police would not let them parade. Last Sunday a trio went forth with tambourines and a concertina to attract sinners to the Army's headquarters. The trio was arrested and confined in one cell. No sooner were they left alone than they began to sing and pray for the chief of police. They were given a hearing by Police Magistrate Allen, who gave them a lecture and cautioned them that they be not again returned. During the lecture one of the trio, according to the example set by our Lord, fell down on his knees and prayed once more for the chief of police. They were allowed to depart, and no fine was imposed.

—As the result of the recent revival meetings at Cleveland, Tenn., three hundred and fifty converts last Sunday joined the churches of their choice as follows: Methodist Episcopal South 101, Methodist Episcopal Church 78, Cumberland Presbyterian 76, Presbyterian 41, Baptist 34, the Christian Society 20. Rev. A. W. Orwig writes to the Evangelical Messenger about this revival: "We have been deluged with streams of divine grace and glory. The people here have never known such a great spiritual upheaving. So wonderful has been the interest that stores, shops, etc., have sometimes been closed. Yesterday, the last day of the meeting, the public schools were closed, and business was generally suspended during the services. One notable feature is that many old persons have been saved—the oldest was 86 years of age. Another conspicuous fact is that many very prominent ones who long and obstinately withstood the Holy Spirit's mighty strivings, finally yielded, and expressed their determination to become Christians."

Educational Notes.

—The University of Michigan opened Wednesday with the largest number of freshmen in the history of the institution.

—Sixty-seven seniors and ninety-two juniors at Yale University elect Old Testament literature, two lessons a week, for next year, the Old Testament being the only text-book. Oriental history, with special reference to the Bible, will be a required study in the freshman class. Prof. W. R. Harper will teach these classes.

—The University Lecture Course at Capital University, Columbus, Ohio, was inaugurated on the 24th ult., by Rev. D. Simon, of Prospect, O. His address was upon the necessity of introducing Christian principle into politics, literature and school life.

—At Hope College, Holland, Mich., about thirty new students have been enrolled for the fall term. In the Northwestern Academy about fifteen. Dr. Steffens, at the head of the institution, it is now announced, has accepted the call to the First Reformed Church of Pella, Iowa. He will not enter upon his duties until the 1st of April next.

—Mrs. S. V. White, of Brooklyn, N. Y., the wife of Hon. S. V. White, the great Wall street broker, has presented Monticello Seminary, of Godfrey, Ill., with $5,000 to endow a scholarship to be named in honor of her husband. Mrs. White is a graduate of the seminary.

—New York's famous institution, Cooper Union, for the advancement of science and art, has opened with an enrollment of 2,500 young men and women. On the waiting lists are more than 1,000 names.

—The school year at Mr. Moody's school, Mount Hermon, Mass., has opened with a fine outlook for the Y. M. C. A. work. At one meeting seventy-five of the new students joined the association as active members, and twenty-five as associate members.

—The Jewish Training School of Chicago will open its doors Oct. 20. The new building will be dedicated Oct. 19. This building is situated in Judd street, between Clinton and Jefferson. It is of brick, four stories and a basement, and has been designed especially for the purpose of giving the poor children of the neighborhood an education, in which it will be attempted to train their hands along with their minds. Between 800 and 1,000 children have already enrolled their names as prospective pupils, and the registration is not yet over.

—Senator Dawes, in opposing an increase to the appropriations to Roman Catholic schools among the Indians, declared that the one hundred and twenty years of Jesuit missionary work among the Indians of California had left them less capable of self-support than it had found them. This accusation seems to be well sustained by the facts. Mr. Henry A. Hinshaw in the August Science Monthly says, "At the end of mission-rule the Indian was really less capable of taking care of himself than at the beginning. He was found a free man; he was left a dependent. Driven to church by the whip, forced to kneel by being punched with goads, with no free or rational cultivation of mind or conscience, the religious instruction made up of scarcely anything else but ritual and superstition, and the idea of obedience to the priest, the result was what might have been expected." Why should the government continue to appropriate money to such schools!

—The Standard of this city thus notices the Memphis school founded by the labors of the beloved Prof. Woodsmall, and to which Bro. Countee has devoted much labor: "Rev. H. R. Traver, president of the Biblical Normal and Industrial Institute at Memphis, Tenn., passed through Chicago last Monday on his way from Saratoga to Memphis. About 400 were on the list for instruction in all departments last year—about thirty pastors and licentiates, some twenty-five or thirty married women, about a hundred young men and women in the normal department, and the rest in the grammar school and intermediate and primary grades. One result as showing the missionary spirit prevalent in the missionary training class was the effort of two colored teachers, who have been the means of organizing among the colored women of the churches in the region round about Memphis, some sixty to seventy Bible-reading and mission bands, which has been the means of a great transformation of the life of the colored churches. Besides the missionary feature, of special interest to the co-operation of the white brethren because of the attempt of the colored people in self-support, the colored people themselves last year, being the third year since the incorporation of the school, in tuitions and collection aggregated $3,000. All the white Baptist pastors in Memphis were regular lecturers in the pastor's class, two of the leading white physicians were volunteer lecturers in the nurse-training class, and Mr. Traver has assurances from leading business men in Memphis that the industrial department shall be placed on a good financial basis this fall," is a delightful month. Poets never weary in singing of the beauty and charm of nature before the storms of winter imprison her. Why should it not be better for our reform than for the poet. Good weather and good roads, a good cause, a good faith in it and a good courage to maintain and extend it. The Cynosure has not succeeded very well with premiums, so we do not offer many, but God does reward and bless those who for his sake help men to read the truth we publish.

BUSINESS.

OCTOBER

THE 25 CENT

offer for two months will help our friends in getting many names. Please work some on that line, and you will find it profitable.

ANOTHER OFFER

we make for all new subscribers, who will begin with November, is: that the Cynosure will be sent them until January 1st, 1892, fourteen months for the single subscription of $1.50.

LODGE NOTES.

The Rights of Labor is the new name of the Knights of Labor, a lodge paper published in Chicago.

The New York Evening Post, canvassing the Tammany Hall General Committee or Columbian Order, finds its actual membership 4,564; number allowed to vote, 2,567; rumsellers, 654; criminal rum-sellers, 565; not in the city directory, 1,266; no occupation, 147.

The University to Kansas is said to be honey-combed with secret societies, having no less than eleven different organizations, five of them for girls. The University of Michigan at Ann Arbor can hardly be surpassed in the world, having, it is said, twenty-eight college secret societies.

A circular has been issued by Third Vice President Webb, of the New York Central road, declaring that the management objects to its employes being members of the organization known as the Knights of Labor, on the ground that faithful and efficient service to the company is not to be expected from such employes.

A long struggle in New York between the brick manufacturers' association and the board of walking delegates of the building trades, began on June 14. The walking delegates declared a boycott on all brick manufactured by members of the manufacturers' association at Verplank's Point. The strike ended last week in a complete victory for the manufacturers, and a formal surrender of the board of walking delegates, who at the meeting to-day officially declared the boycott at an end. It was a case of surrender or die and the men chose the former.

It is doubtful if Chicago has had a sheriff of late years who has not been secretly approachable by means of lodge grips. Matson, the present incumbent, is loaded down with oaths and degrees in various lodges, and "Tim" Bradley, a former incumbent, was buried with all the lodge ceremony the Masons could get in from the Consistory of "Sublime Princes" to the Blue Lodge. The Democrats this year have nominated Frank Lawler, a demagogue, saloonist and Catholic. If he belongs to no lodge these other associations will go far to make up the deficit.

It is announced that the H. G. Frick Coke Company, of Pittsburgh, has sued its striking employes for $100,000 damages, alleged to have been received through the stoppage of work. The suit is based upon the ground of breach of contract. The Knights of Labor in the employ of the company struck for the discharge of seventeen non-union men despite the existence of an agreement, signed last February, that the company should have the right to employ and discharge whom it pleased. This agreement also called for six days' notice for settlement of a grievance before striking. Mr. Frick says the company is in earnest and its announced purpose is to withhold $27,000 in wages pending the suit. Labor leaders are puzzled to know whether the company really means business or "bluff."

Nearly everyone is familiar with the name, but it has been estimated that only one in every two hundred and eighty persons in the United States is fortunate enough to have access to the valuable information contained within the covers of the grandest work ever written by mortal man,

Webster's

UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY,

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words, we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent.

Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface.

In addition to the 100,000 words it contains a portrait of the author, together with his biography and a valuable table of 12,000 synonymous words.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and seventy-five cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. Home and Health.

DRESS.

Know ye not that your bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost?

The beauty of dress depends upon its freedom and fitness. Restraint destroys grace of motion; ease promotes it. The winsomeness of childhood comes from its unconsciousness; with the self-consciousness born of restraint, its grace has fled. As for fitness, how absurd to see a fresh, bright young creature loaded down with ribbons, bangles, pins and chains. Imagine how such a form will look in a picture ten years hence!

The young woman who studies a few rules of art and applies them to her dress will always be clad becomingly, for the principles of art are changeless, since they proceed from the one Great Artist who gave color and form to everything that exists. Among these rules are a few worth remembering.

Simplicity, symmetry and fitness are the first requisites of dress. Clothing ought to harmonize with the age, occupation, size and temperament of the individual. A short, dumpy figure can no more wear broad stripes or horizontal trimmings than a tall woman can use perpendicular effects. Symmetry is preserved only by allowing the waist to remain as nature made it, which is in proper proportion to the width of the shoulders. Every canon of art and of health is violated in the hour-glass form. The earth will rejoice and a nobler race arise when the soul of a Christian shall vivify the graceful antique form which treads the ground with rythmic dignity and beauty.

Folds or pleatings from the waist to the ankles may be broken by oblique drapery, never by anything cutting them at right angles. All trimmings should be subordinated to the dress, with which it should not form too violent a contrast. Narrow shoulders allow of sleeve trimming at the top but no contour allows constriction about the arm-holes. Too much decoration of any kind destroys unity and symmetry.

Rich clothing, like silks and velvets, suits only the middle-aged, or elderly, and valuable jewelry belongs never to the youthful. No violations of good taste and good sense are more glaring than these; too many of our girls are decked like slaves ready for the harem. Beautiful as the rose of June embowered in its leaflets is a healthy, happy maiden when clad with that tasterul simplicity which harmonizes with her youthful freshness. With experience and dignity comes the time when a woman may wear a more stately form of dress; even then wisdom will not allow too much, although wealth might permit. Expensive garments on the young are not only unsuitable, but they foster vanity and envy which ruin many a promising life.

Two colors at most are all that should be worn together, and they must perfectly contrast with one another. It is a mistake for the young to wear very dark colors even in winter, and black is especially unsuitable and unwholesome. The brunette can use deeper, richer shades than the blonde. Low shoes should only be used in warm rooms, since the feet and ankles need to be always warm.

Neatness is an indispensable adjunct of taste. Better a clean print than a bedraggled silk. In regard to every-day clothing, see that buttons and buttonholes are in good order, that the frill around the neck is clean, and that there are neither rips nor tears on skirt or waist. Above all, keep the underclothing neat and in place, and the hair properly brushed. An untidy woman, though she be a genius, is an abomination. There is then some radical defect of character to detect and overcome. A clear, clean-cut orderly mind invariably mirrors itself in the body it inhabits.

One thing more, earrings are a relic of barbarism. Whoso pierces the flesh in one place might as well in another, and so hang gold encrusted with gems from the lobe dividing the nostrils. Physical mutilation ought to be relegated to savages, among whom it originated.—Hester M. Poole in the Union Signal.

Permanent Results,

And not a mere temporary exhilaration, are produced by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine, being an alterative, and working constitutionally, through the blood, its effects may not be immediately apparent in all cases, but the gain in health and strength, through its persistent use, is real and lasting. It reaches every drop of blood in the body.

"I have none but good words to speak regarding Ayer's Sarsaparilla. All during the winter I was languid, tired, and without any appetite, until I commenced the use of this remedy. I took three bottles. Its effects have been revivifying, and I feel as if I had entered a new life. I did not think it was in the power of medicine to produce such a wonderful change, as has Ayer's Sarsaparilla in my case."—Mrs. C. Johnson, 310 Hicks st., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and also other preparations of a like nature, for the purposes of a blood-purifier, and, while receiving no good, but often positive harm, from others, I have always derived benefit from Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and have no hesitation in recommending it to any one in want of a reliable blood-purifier."—Mrs. M. C. Hopkinson, 110 Merrimack Corporation, Lowell, Mass.

☞The safest and most reliable tonic, alterative, and diuretic is

Ayer's Sarsaparilla —FOR— Debility.

"I was a great sufferer from a low condition of the blood and general debility, becoming, finally, so reduced that I was unfit for work. Nothing that I did for the complaint helped me so much as Ayer's Sarsaparilla, a few bottles of which restored me to health and strength. I take every opportunity to recommend this medicine in similar cases."—C. Evick, 14 E. Main st., Chillicothe, Ohio.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is one of the very few proprietary medicines that I can honestly recommend. I have seen it used in this place, in a number of cases, with very satisfactory results, and I have used it in my own family, for salt-rheum, with abundant success. I consider it to be the leading blood-purifier of the day."—Charles C. Davis, Nashua, N. H.

"I suffered from general debility for fifteen years. A few bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla completely cured me, and I now enjoy good health."—Mrs. J. F. McElhinney, Truro, N. S.

FARM NOTES.

CORN AS KING.

The great corn palace at Sioux City advertised in our columns this week, is one of the triumphs of agriculture of which every farmer may be truly proud. This is the fourth structure of the kind erected by the enterprise of Sioux City, and it is the largest—twice as large as last year—covering a space 264 feet square and 175 feet high. This year there is an auditorium seating 1,200 persons where one of the finest bands in this or any country, composed of seventy members, gives concerts every week day. Sioux City is itself an attraction—the city of the martyred Haddock, and a place or marvelous enterprise and growth. Such an exhibition in such a place furnishes an attraction well worth going far to see.

THE SILVER BILL AND THE FARMER.

The workings of the new silver law have, so far, surprised the expectations of its best friends. At the rate at which silver is advancing in price, the silver dollar will soon be on a par with the gold dollar. Then we can have the free, unlimited coinage of both gold and silver without the least disturbance of the financial or commercial condition of the country.

There was a very general demand among farmers for silver legislation, and since it has been accomplished, "things are going their way." The advance in wheat has kept pace with the advance in silver. Not all the rise in the value of our products can be attributed to the advance in silver; there are other causes, but, undoubtedly, the new silver law has been a great benefit to agriculture.

The bearing the advance in silver has on agriculture is clearly pointed out in the following able editorial of the New York Sun:

The advance in the price of silver from 94 cents to $1.20 per ounce has a wider bearing than seems to be generally appreciated. There is a general disposition to see in this new departure merely a variation in the amount of currency, or a speculative phenomenon incident to a great and sudden advance in the value of an important commodity.

We have heretofore, in round numbers, exported about 20,000,000 ounces of silver per annum, the remainder of our product being absorbed by government purchases and by use in the arts. For these 20,000,000 ounces there is now opened a market at home, and it would seem at first sight as if for their former export to pay our debts abroad we should have to substitute a corresponding export of gold but this is not the case. In our three staple exports, petroleum, cotton, and wheat, we come in competition with silver-using countries exclusively, with the exception of Australia. Egypt and India supply cotton and wheat to Europe, and with declining values of silver in terms of gold, so long as we were on a gold basis those countries were competing with us at a tremendous advantage. This is proved by the enormous increase in the exports of wheat and cotton from India during the last few years. By causing the appreciation of silver, as measured in gold, we make Indian wheat and cotton cost just so much more as the rise in the gold price of silver measures.

Of course, we cannot expect to get the full measure of this advance. The augmented price of wheat and cotton in India and Egypt must, to a certain extent, react in order to meet the increased competition from America. But European markets will rise in sympathy with the higher cost of these exports from those countries measured in terms of gold. Of our cotton crop we export in round numbers 5,000,000 bales, and of our wheat crop from 100,000,000, to 150,000,000 bushels. It is fair to assume that the advance under normal conditions in the price of the exportable surplus of these two staples would reach two-thirds of the advance in silver allowing one-third to be taken off the increased standard for Indian and Egyptian wheat and cotton, to enable those countries to export at all.

As against the export of 20,000,000 ounces of silver bullion we have therefore the enhanced value of the exportable surplus of wheat and cotton, to say nothing of oil.

Assuming that we receive two cents per pound more for our cotton out of the now inevitable 30 per cent rise in the value of silver, we should thus have $10 per bale added to the value of the exportable surplus of cotton, and thus the country would receive from Europe $50,000,000 more than it has received from this staple previously. The same calculation applies relatively to our surplus of wheat and oil.

We believe that it will be found that this new value of silver provides the true protection to our agriculturists. And the inferences to be drawn from these facts are plain. Given $100,000,000 more in the pockets of our farmers, and it is safe to argue that an activity such as we have not witnessed for years in this country must follow in all lines and ramifications of business.—Farm and Fireside.

No one doubts that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy really cures catarrh, whether the disease be recent or of long standing, because the makers of it clinch their faith in it with a $500 guarantee, which isn't a mere newspaper guarantee, but "on call" in a moment. That moment is when you prove that its makers can't cure you. The reason for their faith is this: Dr. Sage's remedy has proved itself the right cure for ninety-nine out of one hundred cases of Catarrh in the Head, and the World's Dispensary Medical Association can afford to take the risk of you being the one hundredth.

The only question is—are you willing to make the test, if the makers are willing to take the risk? If so, the rest is easy. You pay your druggist 50 cents and the trial begins. If you're wanting the $500 you'll get something better—a cure.

"Save who can!" was the frantic cry of Napoleon to his army at Waterloo. Save health and strength while you can, by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, is advice that applies to all, both young and old. Don't wait until disease fastens on you; begin at once.

WASHINGTON.

In the ten months of the session that closed Wednesday President Harrison sent to the Senate 3,837 nominations, of which all but twelve were confirmed. As many of these nominations represented more than one person, the total will probably be 4,500 appointments. Several hundred of these were postmasters at offices which had become Presidential through the growth of business. They also include the appointments in connection with the census, nearly all of which are temporary in their nature.

It is said at the Treasury Department that the decrease in the bonded debt of the United States during the last month—viz., $42,316,240—was greater than during any month since the period of refunding operations under Secretary Sherman.

Six Alabama papers are under the ban of the new anti-lottery law for, accidentally or otherwise, failing to remove from their columns the advertisement of the Louisiana lottery. The Georgia editors have been more successfully obeying the law. One Georgia editor, by mistake printing the advertisement, pasted white paper over the "ad" in every copy of the offending issue.

There is a general agreement in a late decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio that classes profane men with public nuisances. The Cincinnati telephone company removed their instrument and wires from the office of a man who used profane language in his messages, and the Supreme Court sustained them. But if profauity is a public nuisance, why is not Sabbath-breaking also. Much the same social reasons can be urged against both, and the laws of God and men are quite as severe against one as the other. If mere public sentiment is the basis of the condemnation and is to be the arbitcr in all such cases we are in a dangerous state.

The German Emperor lately ordered that women should no longer work at night in the government factories. This humane order was met by a declaration by the Socialists against the abolition of female labor in any form. They held that women, banished from the factories, would again become domesticated drudges, and cease to be interested in the secrct conclaves of so-called Socialism. The advocates of this movement are of late more bold since some of their number have returned from banishment. Their program includes proposals for the abolition of juvenile female labor, the regulation of the working day, the institution of free and compulsory State education, and the adoption of a single progressive income tax to replace all the other taxes. One of their leaders in a late speech in Berlin threatened to overthrow all the prcsent order of society if necessary to carry out their schemes.

The meeting of the American Board at Minneapolis last week was regarded with unusual interest, since about this oldest of American mission boards the "future probation" adherents have made their greatest fight. Two years ago at Des Moines this "liberal" party was sorely defeated, but at New York last year they reappeared with a vigorous one-third minority. With a view to conciliation and to stop the contention if possible, Dr. Storrs, the president, arranged for the appointment of a committee of nine on the general administration of the Board. This committee reported last Thursday, at length, and was followed by a sharp discussion of three hours which was largely of a personal nature. It closed by the unanimous adoption of the recommendations of the committee, but this action was followed by refusing to approve the report otherwise. The resolutions adopted look to a better financial oversight; to additional agencies to reach the churches whose interest is evidently lagging; but especially to a more elastic system of examination of candidates, which allows them to state their theological views more freely, instead of questions which might often seem rigid and perplexing. The discussion of the probation question was avoided; but the management of the Board was endorsed by a nearly unanimous re-election.

PROF. LEWIS DAVIS, D. D.

In a note reproving some of the critics of the management of the American Board, the Advance says: "The talk about the 'secrecy' etc., of the Prudential Committee can hardly be ingenuous. The Committee has no secrets; nothing is covered up. Its meetings are perfectly open to any one who may wish to be present. Its records are open; its correspondence is open; and any one wishing to examine any part of it is, and has always been, at liberty to do so, and will be surc of every courtesy in helping him to get at what he wishes to find." So it is with every honorable society formed truly for the good of men. Those that practice otherwise bear the badge of self-condemnation in their secrecy.

The Democrats of Chicago have arranged a very subtle and plausible scheme for the injury of the common school system of the city, and county. They need the Catholic votes, and hope to gain the favor of many good citizens who have urged in past years that capable women be appointed on the city school board. They have nominated for the responsible and important position of county superintendent of schools Mrs. Mulligan, the widow of the brave Irish soldier who fell early in the war while leading his "Irish Brigade." Mrs. Mulligan's sole qualification for the place is the fact that she is a Roman Catholic. She has had some experience in the pension office, but nothing that could aid her as superintendent of schools. The present incumbent, Mr. Lane, has for years conducted the office ably and satisfactorily. He has been renominated by the Republicans. The other nomination is a part of the conspiracy against the public school system in this State and Wisconsin, which we hope will be overthrown next month with a great defeat.

When Vice President Morton opened his new hotel in Washington a year ago there was much dispute about its temperance principles. Saloonkeepers' associations congratulated Mr. Morton on becoming one of their number, and the W. C. T. U. had to defend themselves for their use of the fact that it had a bar. Eminent Republicans in Washington denied with emphasis that it had a saloon attachment. Some admitted that Mr. Morton's agent admitted liquor, but the Vice President had nothing to do with it. Last week we printed from so good a Republican authority as the Inter Ocean of this city that the proprietor of the Shoreham had ordered no more liquor to be sold by the drink, but by the bottle only. The same good authority says again later: "Vice President Morton probably regrets that he ever allowed himself to take on an extra burden in the way of his hotel business. Discontent is rife in the Shoreham, at Washington. It grows out of Mr. Morton's late prohibition of the sale of drinks at or from the bar, save by the bottle, and the additional consequent friction between the manager of the cafe and the lessee of the hotel rooms." It is time the Inter-Ocean and a large part of the Republican party apologize with becoming humility for their abuse of the women of the W. C. T. U., for their Christian and patriotic condemnation of Mr. Morton and his original package saloon.

The governors of all the States are being urged by the anti-lottery society of Louisiana to enforce their local laws and thus give the greatest possible aid to the new law of Congress framed to suppress this great evil. Such enforcement would shut off the sources which supply its strength, and reduce the number of its patrons, or victims, amazingly. The Postoffice department is profoundly in earnest, and will use every advantage given by the act of Congres to choke the lottery beast to death. Last Thursday the postal authorities seized the weekly edition of the Atlanta, Ga., Constitution, which contained a prize distribution offer to its subscribers, to be settled by a "Christmas" drawing. The paper offered to give bond for any amount to cover any verdict which might be rendered, but the officers were obdurate and refused to let the papers go through the mails. Other publications with similar announcements were also stopped. It is found that the new law will effectually stop the gambling of church fairs, and we shall soon find the Jesuit lobby in Washington at work for a modification of the law, which cuts off a large revenue from the Romanist churches. The paltry methods of guessing, adopted by many daily papers to secure a circulation which genuine merit cannot give, ought to come under the same law and be suppressed. It is an odious and puerile imitation of lottery methods.

"SO RELIGIOUS."

BY ALBERT M. PAULL.

Miss Frances E. Willard, world-famed as the great leader of women banded together for the uplifting of humanity, does not see the evil in the Good Templar order, nor in the Alpha Phi. They are "so religious" in their meetings! Dropping out of sight at this time the feature of secretism, I wish to call attention to a few thoughts concerning the religiousness of these two orders.

The world contains two classes of people, and every living soul is in one class or the other,—the children of God and the children of the evil one. The children of God call God their father; they address him as "Our Father which art in heaven." The children of the evil one, however, have no right to address God as their father, nor to repeat the Lord's Prayer, nor any other prayer, which, while they still hold their allegiance to their true father, the devil, pretends to treat God as if he were their father. Such prayers are mockeries, they are blasphemies. The Jews attempted such a mockery before Jesus, as is recorded in John 8:41, 44: "We have, said they, "one father, even God. Jesus said unto them, If God were your father ye would love me. . . Ye are of your father, the devil." Thus Jesus rebuked them.

God never hears such prayers, for it is recorded in Prov. 28:9: "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination." Also Prov. 15:8: "The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord, but the prayer of the upright is his delight;" yea, even his thoughts are abomination, see 26 v., "The thoughts of the wicked are abomination to the Lord." See also Isa. 1:10: "Hear the word of the Lord, ye rulers of Sodom: To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me?" . . "When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hands, to tread my courts? Bring no more vain oblations; incense is abomination unto me." The only prayer a sinner has any right to take upon his lips is—"God be merciful to me a sinner."

This worship of ungodly men and women so abominable in God's sight, is a prominent feature of every secret society. The opening prayer in a meeting of Good Templars begins thus:

"Our Father who art in heaven, we thank thee that thy protecting care has been over us and ours during another week, and that we are permitted again to meet around our common altar under circumstances of great mercy. Do thou be pleased to pardon all our transgressions, and forgive us for having loved thee and served thee so feebly."

It closes with:

"Do thou guide us in our deliberations this evening through the journey of life ever lead us, and finally bring us to thyself in thine own kingdom; which we ask in the name of thy dear Son, our Redeemer. Amen."

Such a prayer, as we have seen from Scripture, is an abomination with God, akin to the strange fire offered by Nadab and Abihu, whom God slew before the sanctuary. Lev. 10:1. Yet the members of the order are taught to believe that such prayers are answered—that they are acceptable to God. Thus they are led to trust in a false worship, and lose their souls. Now Miss Willard tells us that this same religious worship is a feature of the Alpha Phi; then it follows that the same false worship, the same false hope, the same abomination to God appertains to it.

Is it a small thing to belong to a society, or to give countenance to a society, that turns thousands toward hell through the medium of a false hope? Is "the harm taken out of it"? Shall we oppose the saloon which wrecks man physically, and at the same time encourage the Good Templars or the Alpha Phi which wreck men and women spiritually? God forbid.

THE AMERICAN UNION OF INDEPENDENT WORKMEN.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

This is the title of an organization which has for its objects the promotion of the following principles:

"We propose to sell our labor to whom we please; when we please; where we please; and for what we please.

"We accord to all other men the right to do the same, without dictation or hindrance from any man or set of men. . . . We believe that it will enable a good skillful workman to obtain his full value in wages, and will relegate every poor laborer to his proper level for pay.

"We believe it will forever free us from assessments for strikers who must be supported in idleness when they could be earning wages by their own work; that it will promote self-respect; and that it will stimulate every man to make a better mechanic," etc.

I have long wondered why such an organization has not been instituted. Since only a minority of the American workingmen can ever belong to existing trades unions, there must be a large proportion that are held in practical bondage without any of the supposed advantages that these "unions" afford. The natural law, and the one that must ultimately prevail, in reference to all labor and all of its products, is, that of perfect freedom. Neither any legislative enactment nor any social organization has any right to put any restriction on the sale of labor or any of its products; provided always that such labor is promotive of the public good. This natural law will in the end work out the highest practical good, both to the individual and to the public at large.

Whether it is needful that there should be a society organized for the protection of the natural rights of workingmen, or whether the present system of state and municipal law, if properly enforced, is ample for this purpose, admits of a question. But surely it is high time that workmen demanded and secured their right to buy and sell labor as they choose.

AUF WIEDERSEHEN.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

(Auf Wiedersehen! German for Will meet again.)

Auf Wiedersehen! t'is this that we say when
With clasping hands and tear-wet eyes we part;
When feet stray far, and hearts grow weary, then
These words spring tenderly from lip and heart,
Auf wiedersehen! we meet again.

Auf weidersehen! is it so dreary then,
When stars are set and skies are overcast?
Is it so sad to think what might have been
In those bright days that are forever past?
Auf wiedersehen! we'll meet again.

Auf wiedersehen! Auf wiedersehen!
'Twill soon be past, the time will not be long;
The storm-rent hills of earth will shine, and then,
We part, but in the grand old German tongue,
Auf wiedersehen! we'll meet again.

A NOTE OF CHEER FROM INDIA.

BY REV. C. B. WARD.

Thank God for all the signs of hope in America. The Cynosure comes weekly, weighted with good news of reform and prayers. It is just to our friends that we note the encouragement we find in India.

A late Cynosure says some three hundred Masons have renounced the secret empire under reform influence. As my mind recalled the cases I had known who had been converted to God and renounced the lodge in India, I said, we have much to praise God for.

I have personal acquaintance of above a dozen public and influential men in India who for Christ's sake have come out of the lodge, and, without saying much of its secrets, they give unqualified testimony against secrecy.

Not long since we listened to a general at a public temperance meeting emphatically saying in his address that he left the lodge because he regarded it no place for a Christian. He unflinchingly denounced Freemasonry as inconsistent with a Christian profession.

Another prominent official under a native prince said he got disgusted with Masonry when he found others in possession of secrets at a cost of one dollar, that cost him many hundreds.

Very recently a friend who was beguiled into the lodge cut his connection with them, and tells me it is no place for a Christian.

A minister not long out in India told me the other day that when he saw Masonry in India he came to realize its anti-Christian character.

We are much encouraged. The little we have been able to do has accomplished much. There is an awakening of interest in the reform cause in India. A Zenana missionary recently sent for some of our Anti-masonic tracts. She said she saw the great need of showing some of her Christian friends how wicked were all Masonic associations. A retired Mason wrote recently thanking us for the exposures of a system he knew, alas! to well. He said, the young men of India should be enlightened.

Now let our friends in America take courage. Thank God and give us still further help in this cause, either in donations of money or anti-secrecy literature. But pray especially for the cause in India.

We may say that akin to this work is an effort to enlighten the public as to the real character of Roman Catholicism. In this our encouragement is very great indeed. There is a very steady demand for books and tracts in this line. Letters from many missionaries bespeak no little sympathy with us in this work. On every hand we see Romanism grasping for money and political power in India. There is great need that a close watch be kept on Jesuitical movements, and their deceptive schemes need constant exposure. Few people realize the character of Romanism. It is a baptized heathenism, utterly abhorrent to God and truth. Romanism appropriated the celibacy of the priests of Bacchus, the confessional and the secrecy of the Etruscan mysteries, and the Jesuits bequeathed the secrecy to Masonry in part, but still operate much of it themselves to this day. We need the sympathy and prayers of good people at home in all this unpopular but much-needed work in India.

THE USE OF MASONRY IN WAR.

BY REV. J. P. RICHARDS.

During the late Rebellion it was repeatedly said that Masonic favoritism was shown to Masons on both sides of the opposing forces. In the Chicago Tribune of September 21, 1890, is an interesting account given by Captain Charles Brewster, of Kansas City, Mo., of the release of a Masonic soldier. The account is taken from the Kansas City Star, furnished by a reporter for that paper. The article is entitled:

"Mosby's Death Lottery.—Thirteen Union men draw blanks, while seven are condemned.—The thrilling experience of Capt. Brewster with Mosby's Guerrillas in the Shenandoah Valley.—One of the condemned a Mason, saved."

If there are any readers of the Cynosure in that city, the account might be confirmed; but I presume it requires no confirmation, as we knew the general facts during the war.

The account condensed is as follows: Captain Brewster with twenty Unionists was captured by a squad of rebels wearing Union clothes, and were brought before Mosby. Gen. Custer had previously hanged seven of Mosby's men, who were spies, and who had been caught within the Union lines. Soon after they entered Ashby's gap Brewster was asked by Mosby his name and command. He was told that his name was Brewster and that he belonged to the Michigan cavalry brigade. "That is Custer's brigade," Mosby replied, "and I have a little account to settle with Gen. Custer."

Without entering into a detailed account of the affair, I simply give the closing act. One of the Union prisoners said to Brewster that Mosby had informed him that he intended to hang him (the prisoner). The poor fellow was young and was one of the number put to death two days later. Death tickets were placed in the hat to be drawn; those who had drawn them were brave men, although their faces paled before their impending doom. Brewster being placed at the extreme right, by virtue of his rank, drew a blank. Lieutenant Dissomay, last on the left of Brewster, drew the seventh fatal number, and simply said, "This is tough." Brewster said that Dissomay was a Mason, and he reasoned that a way would be found to spare his life. At the critical moment, Brewster informs us, one of Mosby's men asked Dissomay in a whisper if he was a Mason? He replied in the affirmative, and efforts were made for his release, which proved successful.

Now, then, we have the proof by a living witness, who relates the fact as showing how lucky it is, sometimes, to be a Freemason; and no doubt he coolly approved of the transaction; but if rebel Masons observed their Masonic obligations, how about Union Masons when rebel Masons fell into their hands? Were they not often released by the sign of distress?

But was it right? Perhaps the lucky Mason was a young man having no wife and orphans to mourn his loss, and in justice—if there could be justice—might he not have taken the place of one who had both wife and children? There were instances during the war, when a younger brother took the place of an older brother having a family.

The whole thing of Masonic favoritism is an outrage upon the rights of those who are not fools enough to invoke cut-throat penalties. If there is a drop of manly blood in the veins of any Christian Mason (if there is such a thing) he should investigate the principles of Masonry, and satisfy himself, and come out from the unclean thing. Everybody can know enough of the murderous system now to convince a reasonable person that Freemasonry is an enemy to our free institutions, "and ought to be suppressed by law."

Why is it that so many criminals escape the penitentiary and the gallows? Ask your sheriffs and judges; if honest, many of them can tell you. How long before men will open their eyes, and stand up and be counted as opposers not only of lodgery, but of the great mother of harlots, who is straining every nerve to destroy the free schools of our land?

Chicago.

"I honor the man who is willing to sink
Half his present repute for the freedom to think;
And when he has thought, be his muse strong or weak,
Will risk t'other half for the freedom to speak."

—Lowell.

THE COLLEGE FRATERNITIES AT YALE AND CORNELL.

In a letter written October 20th, 1881, to President E. E. White of Purdue University, Indiana, Noah Porter, D. D., LL. D., late president of Yale College, stated his views on the college secret societies and their standing in the institution over which he then presided as follows:

My Dear Sir: The theory which is generally accepted as the basis of the authority of our colleges, I suppose to be, that the college is a beneficial institution that confers favors on conditions. If it is a State institution, and the State undertakes to govern it directly by regents or the like, the regents have a right to impose whatever conditions they think wise or best, literary or ethical, or disciplinary, and always do, the citizens as such having no natural rights to avail themselves of the privileges of the institution except on reasonable terms.

If it is an incorporated institution, unless the charter forbids, the whole matter is intrusted to trustees, and the only limitation must come from evidence that the conditions are fitted to defeat the end for which the trust is granted by the State through the charter. In general, there is granted to the trustees unlimited discretion to make such laws, regulations, etc., as they may think best.

It would be just as reasonable to bring an action against a railway company which forbids passengers to ride on the platforms of their cars, as to bring an action against a board of trustees who of themselves or their Faculty make it a condition of remaining in the college, that the student shall not belong to a secret society.

The only question that can possibly arise is, whether and how far it is wise and salutary to interfere with the private associations of the students.

We have forbidden the so-called secret societies in the two lower classes because they involve riot and dissipation. We allow them in the junior and senior years, because, so far as we know, they are not objectionable in the senior year on this score, and we hold the question of junior year under advisement with reference to the same point. We do not like secrecy or affiliation, but do not feel justified for this reason alone in prohibiting them. * * *

We forbid the students to wear the badge, and should make it an affair læsa majistratis for students to confer or be known to accept or sustain membership in a society, transmitted from one class to another, which we had dissolved.

AT CORNELL.

Hon. Andrew D. White, LL. D., then president of Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, wrote to President White, October 21, the same year, in the following terms:

Dear Sir—Referring to your letter of October 16, I would say that the regulation of our Faculty to which you refer, was that no student should be allowed to enter any college society whose constitution had not been approved by the Faculty. This rule has been construed so that any society reported upon favorably by the committee of the Faculty is allowed to remain. * * * Our policy has rather been, through those members of the Faculty who were members of them, to exercise a direct influence for good upon those which were really good, and to drive out the others. This policy has been fairly successful. It enabled me to drive out one of the largest and most powerful of these societies, with the support of our entire body of trustees and Faculty, and of the other students, and I feel absolutely sure that if, at any moment, one of these societies should show that it is seriously and permanently injurious to our young men, I could drive it beyond our walls with perfect ease. * * * I am, of course, aware of the evils attendant upon such societies in general; but I think that, as they are conducted here at present, these evils are reduced to a minimum and balanced by considerable advantages. And yet I fully commend your course under the circumstances of your institution, as I understand them, in resisting the introduction of such societies. Your position, that what Indiana wants of Purdue University, is a strong technological institution, and that the change of the institution into a classical, or partly classical, institution would weaken, if not ultimately destroy it, seems to me irrefutable. That the Greek-letter societies would have a tendency to change it from a technical to a classical institution, is, to my mind, certain. Under your circumstances, it seems to me far better that your students organize literary and debating clubs—not only better for your University, but better for them. * * *

The above letters appear in the official report of Purdue University to the Governor of Indiana.

SKELETONS FOR GREEKS.

[From the New York Sun].

"The most successful initiation ceremony that I ever saw in a college secret society was one that was popular at an Ohio school until accident happened. Then part of it was dropped. That part was a skeleton."

The speaker was a dealer in society regalia. He continued:

"We were initiating a sturdy young fellow who said he didn't believe in spirits or anything supernatural, and this is how we did it. He was stripped to the waist, one foot was bare, and he was carefully blindfolded. Then we led him into the darkened lodge-room, where two guards grasped his arms firmly. As they led him slowly around the room one of them said, in a melancholy voice: 'My friend—for I cannot yet call you brother—the journey of life is before you. Consider it. Life is what we make it, but trial must come, and sorrow and distress. Look well to your pathway.'

"That injunction was rather aggravating to a man who was blindfolded and led by two strong companions who were guiding him to a short, smooth plank at an angle of forty-five degrees. 'Man rises suddenly in life,' said the guide as the victim stumbled up the plank, 'and quickly drops into a pitfall and is lost,' and the victim dropped from the plank to the hassock placed on edge, which rolled away and let him sit down on the floor.

"He was picked up and led on as the guide said: 'The path may be smooth for a time, but obstructions are sure to lie across it,' and then the victim stumbled lengthwise over a ladder supported three inches above the carpet, while his conductors moaned in unison. 'Even when in trouble himself he may be called upon to help a brother, and this he should do to the utmost,' said the guide, who helped himself to the victim's pocketbook. 'Last of all comes Death. He is terrifying at best, but should it be your fate to meet him alone show yourself a man, for a crown awaits you beyond.'

"The victim had been led through double doors, into the closet. The twine that held the hoodwink over his eyes was loosened. The doors closed noislessly, and the guide and other officers of the lodge placed their eyes at the peep-holes. For a moment the victim stood motionless; then the hoodwink dropped off. He rubbed his eyes with his hand, and then his jaw dropped. A blue light flamed in the skull of the skeleton before him, and poured out of the eyes and through the peculiarly marked teeth, that were opened half an inch. The air of the blue-lined closet seemed to wave and dance as the right arm of the skeleton was slowly raised until the fleshless hand rested on the young man's shoulder. Then the melancholy voice said: 'I am thy fate.'

"The victim drew his hand slowly across his forehead, and then over his eyes, and looked again at the skeleton more closely. Then he said: 'At last!' and fainted."

"Do regular business secret societies use skeletons in their ceremonies?"

"Certainly. There are several orders that use them. We keep them in stock constantly. They are packed in half-length cases, made of pine or walnut, and are shipped by express all over the country.

"Some skeletons are plain with steel articulations; others have silver-plated articulations, and where there is likely to be no strain the hinges may be made of silver. Some of these high-priced skeletons are carefully polished and glisten in the light of the lodge-room. Fine cases go with high-priced goods."

"How high-priced?"

"A fine skeleton, elegantly mounted, will cost as much as $60. One equally strong and able to stand the racket of the goat's attacks may be had for $30."

"Makes business for the resurrectionists?"

"No, it does not. These skeletons are all imported, and are taken from the catacombs of the old country. There is no tariff to protect home industry in skeletons, and we can import them cheaper than we can dig them here. The demand is very irregular, according as an order is spreading or not. They are shipped to all parts of the country impartially, and are very effective in awing a fresh candidate for light and instruction."

MUTUAL AID ASSOCIATIONS.

We are living in an age of many social and religious advantages. We are surrounded with societies which have in view mutual good to its members. These offer many inducements to persons who will unite with them. They solemnly pledge themselves to befriend each other under adverse and trying circumstances, and are a mutual aid association in many and varied ways. We cannot estimate the hundred and thousands of men who are thus associated with each other. The object of most societies is a temporal and social end These men seek. It is natural for men to desire such associations, and yet we observe that they too readily neglect the higher claims of a higher order than any human institution can afford. We wish here to present the claims of a mutual aid association that has an inexhaustible capital, and a source of revenue that is incalculable. This association is higher than man, because it is divine. Its claims are greater because it insures against eternal and spiritual loss. It is a society that not only secures the body, but the soul. It is a life insurance that shall endure after heaven and earth shall pass away. When this world shall be no more, and all the heavens shall disappear this association shall still prove invaluable to its members. Time cannot limit it. Eternity cannot measure it. It is beyond anything that man can originate. This association is the church of the living God. Here we have mutual aid given us of Him who is able to hold the waters of the sea in the hollow of his hand, and who can lift the mountains from their beds and cast them into the midst of the sea. Here is an association that is divine, and meets the inner spiritual nature of man. It comes to man's better nature. It lays hold of his soul and gives him the desire to live in a brighter, happier and holier relation than we can conceive of here in the world. What more can men wish than to have Christ who pledges himself to be a friend in every trouble, a comforter in every sorrow, a defense in every danger, a deliverer from every snare, a joy to every heart. Well may we ask with Peter, "Lord, to whom shall we go but unto thee, for thou hast the words of eternal life?"

Could men realize what they miss by remaining out of this mutual aid association which God has founded, they surely would put forth greater efforts and would be more deeply concerned about being life members. The object is such that all men should seek the communion and fellowship of God's church. There is no greater claim than this, and yet men allow the world, the flesh, and the devil to crowd this out and give others a preference. What sad mistakes we make. How slow to act upon that which is intended for eternal salvation and our everlasting joy.—Christian World.

—Dr. H. H. George is now with a son in St. Paul, Minnesota. He has for a year been troubled with nervous prostration, and his physicians have at length ordered him to postpone all literary work and devote himself to out-of-door exercise. This command shuts him off from his contemplated mission in this city for the present, but we sincerely hope the postponement will not be long.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The recent Abolitionist reunion.—"Poor Richard's" Bequest to Boston.—The brewing business and the churches.—Lodge badges.—The Odd-fellows at Worcester.

Not many more reunions of the early Abolitionists can be held like the one which was recently gathered in Tremont Temple. "Everything comes round to him who waits," says the proverb, and these gray-headed reformers of a past era have proved its truth. A more impressive sight could scarcely be imagined than these aged men and women who stand with the light of eternity already gilding their silver locks; and surely no better lesson to the young people of to-day than their noble lives. A generation ago the papers either ignored their work, or ridiculed them as "fanatics," "agitators," pestiferous cranks!" while the "best society," or that which called itself such, shut its doors against them. Now the daily press publishes whole columns with big headlines in glorification of these same anti-slavery heroes and heroines,

> "Who forgot their own souls for others,
> Themselves to their neighbors lending;
> They found their Lord in his suffering brothers,
> And not in the clouds ascending."

Such reunions have a peculiar value. They emphasize the great truth that they who stand fearlessly for the right shall have their reward, and they keep the historical facts connected with this early moral struggle before a generation that knew not Joseph. If the early Anti-masons could have had their annual reunions, and talked over the scenes of the Morgan tragedy, it would not have been so easy for lodge historians to consign it to oblivion. One popular error into which the writer must plead guilty to having fallen herself, was ably refuted by Rev. Dr. Wordsworth in his address on this occasion; namely, that New England ministers, with few and rare exceptions, refused to put themselves on record against the crime of human slavery. On the contrary 3,000 New England clergyman of all denominations sent a solemn protest to Congress against the infamous Nebraska bill, which was entrusted to Henry M. Dexter to carry to Washington, and by him given to Charles Sumner to present; an honor which, however, fell to Everett, who, being decidedly week-kneed on the slavery question, I am afraid did not accept it with unmixed delight. Douglass, the champion of the bill, made one of his violent and abusive speeches on this occasion, advising the protesting clergymen to confine themselves to their legitimate business of saving souls instead of meddling with politics. I wonder if there were not some who advised Elijah to confine himself to his legitimate work of a prophet, and let outside issues like Baal worship alone.

Dr. Wordsworth gives the credit of the final abolition of slavery to a body of men whom we have been apt to stigmatize as conservative and half-hearted, followers rather than leaders of public sentiment. But perhaps the ministry as a whole does not get due honor for its real share in bringing about unpopular reforms, and it is quite likely that a protest against the lodge system as ruinous to the churches and subversive of justice would roll up a list of ministerial signatures that might surprise many.

The curious action lately commenced in the oourts of Philadelphia by Franklin's heirs, to recover the $100,000 to which the bequest he left that city has now accumulated, reminds one that Boston was also liberally remembered by "poor Richard." The Franklin medal given to boys who are distinguished for the best scholarship in the English and Latin High schools, comes from a fund of £100 sterling which he left for that purpose. It is not a very creditable thing on the part of his descendants to thus seek to render abortive at this late day a part of their great ancestor's "last will and testament," and it makes one understand better why Providence has written so many great men childless,—that their memories may not be disgraced by those who are heirs in name but not in spirit.

Portsmouth, N. H., everybody knows is the seat of the New England brewing interest, as represented by Frank Jones; and the awful Heine tragedy which has sent such a thrill of horror through the land, shows some of the fruits of the business, for Heine himself was an employe in the Eldridge brewery. So says the Weekly Times which further states that the senior member of the firm, along with his fellow brewer, Frank Jones, "are the aristocratic moneyed nabobs of Portsmouth," whose influence is so great even in churches and Sunday-schools "that no one can long remain in that city and earn an honest livlihood who dares openly to denounce the infamy of this business." No wonder the Y. M. C. A. and other similar organizations who court such men for the sake of their money, are lacking in spiritual power, and devoted more to entertaining men than to saving them. Boston's new census allows 113 additional licenses, and nearly a thousand different parties have applied for and are willing to pay $1,500 for the privilege of supplying her thirsty surplus population with liquor among them, Col. Sinclair, a son-in-law of Frank Jones,

There was a time—and not long ago—when the papers never mentioned secret societies; or if they did, made only remarks of the most general and laudatory character. Bro. S. A. Pratt, whose genial face I met at 309 Tremont St. recently, drew my attention to a passage in the Advertiser—that most conservative of papers—to the effect that never was there a day when secret society emblems were so largely worn as now; but it notes the fact that it is the minor orders, as a rule, whose members are so anxious to make themselves known to the world, the Freemason unless of high degree, seldom wearing the insignia of his order, though the three links of the I. O. O. F. are more common. In every street-car may be seen perhaps half a dozen men wearing the insignia of some of these orders more or less conspicuously, and it notes one gentleman who sports a large symbolic scarf pin, a collar button, a watch-charm, a ring and a badge inserted in the lappel of his coat. "It would require an expert to decipher it all," says the Advertiser, "but he wears his honors proudly."

Any one who was in Worcester, and saw the grand parade 10,000 strong of the I. O. O. F., on the occasion of laying the corner-stone of the new Odd-fellows' Home, would have seen many amusing displays of the exaltation which one of these small devices for tickling human vanity can cause in the average man. The daily papers give whole columns to a report of the proceedings, but the Prohibition convention which met on the same day, if noticed at all gets a meagre paragraph, scarcely an inch in length. The streets were roped in, and cars and private teams prohibited from running; and any one who mingled with the crowd of Prohibitionists, patiently or impatiently waiting for a chance to get home, might have heard some expressions regarding this overbearing and constantly encroaching lodge system that were given with a vim. What beside a powerful secret organization would have thus been allowed to delay and inconvenience the public? It is worthy of note that such expressions of individual opinion are much more common than they were a year or two ago. Bro. Stoddard's work is beginning to tell. Elizabeth E. Flagg.

"What do they mean?" is the perplexed question of the Episcopal Recorder, in relation to the significance of the words, "Lead, Kindly Light," with which a much-admired poem by the late Cardinal Newman begins. Praise of them "has been universal and unqualified. As poetry, we are quite ready to join with all in recognizing their excellency. They are an embodiment of beauty. But when we come to consider them from a devotional standpoint—as a hymn, as words to be used in worship in our church service, the question arises, What do they mean? 'Kindly Light.' Who, or what is addressed? 'God is light," and Christ is 'the light.' But there is no positive indication that either is referred to. It has always seemed to us a hymn more suited to a Parsee than to any other religionist."—United Presbyterian.

This generation in the church, says the Christian Inquirer, has been very successful in casting off the yoke of Puritanism, and trying to take off the sharp edges of the cross. Very true is the following: "A Toronto paper says that the sentiment that the devil should not have all the good music has been extended to about everything that the devil ever invented, and has about driven him out of all his old lines of business, but the devil is the most generous of inventors. He never patents anything—makes everybody welcome to anything that is his."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 8, 1890.

"Despise not the day of small things," has been ringing in my head ever since I heard a story of how a drunken tramp was reformed by the thoughtful kindness of a dear little girl. The story was told at a child's Temperance meeting, and believing it to be worthy of repeating I present a synopsis of it: Two little girls playing in a park discovered a drunken man asleep. One of them said: "O dear! the hot sun is shining right in the poor man's face," and taking her dainty little handkerchief she carefully spread it over the swollen and sodden features of the sleeping drunkard. An hour later the man awoke and putting his hand to his face discovered the child's handkerchief, which he spread out on his lap and wondered where it came from, and whether he could get a drink in exchange for it. Suddenly the tears arose in his bleary eyes. He had noted a name in one corner, Nelly Blank. Once he had had a happy little girl named Nelly, but that was years ago, before the rum fiend had owned him. After a long struggle with the emotions aroused by the name of the owner of the handkerchief, the man jumped to his feet determined to again assert his manhood and defy the liquor demon. Placing the handkerchief in his bosom he started in search of work. After trying in many places, and being refused on account of his dissipated appearance, he found himself in a large store arguing with the porter to let him see the proprietor. That gentleman happened to overhear a part of the conversation, and being struck by the earnestness of the tramp's voice he invited him into his private office. The tramp took advantage of the opportunity, told the story of his determination to reform and produced the child's handkerchief as an evidence of his good faith. As the merchant took the handkerchief and observed the name thereon, his hand shook and he turned away his head to wipe the moisture from his eyes. After engaging the tramp to work for him and giving him a small amount of money to provide for his immediate necessities, the merchant said he would like to carry the handkerchief home, and promised to return it the next morning. Can't you guess the rest? Nellie Blank was the merchant's little daughter, and that handkerchief is to-day the most highly prized souvenir in the possession of that reformed drunkard, who has for some years been a member of the great mercantile firm of Blank & Co.

Two hours after my last letter was mailed the President vetoed the bill prohibiting pool-selling in this District because of its excepting the grounds of the Washington Jockey Club from its provisions. Mr. Harrison thinks this form of gambling should be prohibited everywhere. I agree with him, but judging from past experience it will be extremely difficult to get a bill through Congress to do it.

Rev. Charles W. Baldwin, who has given the subject a most careful study, says the people of Washington spend more than $6,000,000 a year for liquors, which is at the rate of about $20,000 for each working day. A new temperance organization to be known as "The Total Abstinence Union of the District of Columbia" has been organized. It is non-partisan and non-sectarian and starts out with a membership of about fifty. The growth of temperance in Washington is practically illustrated by the Gospel Temperance Society which this week celebrated its ninth anniversary. It now has more than six hundred members.

Mrs. Flora Adams Darling is to organize the National Society of the Daughters of the Revolution next Saturday. All ladies are eligible to membership whose forefathers aided in any manner the American cause during the Revolutionary War. *

Ruskin in a letter to young girls says: "Keep absolute calm of temper under all circumstances, receiving the thing that is provoking or disagreeable to you as coming directly from Christ's hand; and the more it is like to provoke you, thank him for it the more, as a young soldier would his general for trusting him with a hard place to hold on the rampart. And remember it does not in the least matter what happens to you—whether a clumsy school-fellow tears your dress, or a shrewd one laughs at you, or the governess doesn't understand you."

Reform News.

A FORTNIGHT WITH OUR WESTERN AGENT.

Dear Cynosure:—From Rose Hill, Iowa, I went to Monroe, and then to Newton, where I gave an address. I had expected on this trip to get in some lecture work, which did not open to me as I had hoped. So I returned to Oskaloosa and attended the Friends Iowa Yearly Meeting.

A committee had been appointed a year ago to revise their discipline, and to report at this meeting. They reaffirmed their former testimony without any change. Had they proposed a stronger or a weaker testimony, there would have been a lively discussion, and I should have remained to hear it, and if need be, strengthen the hands of those who stood for Christ against the lodge. But the proposal to continue the former testimony without change would, it was thought, be accepted without debate. So I departed and spent some time in canvassing in the vicinity of Washington for the Cynosure and for donations to the N. C. A., and then went to Burlington, where I spoke twice on the Sabbath.

I then came to Mediapolis and Linton and called upon Rev. T. P. Robb, and spent some time canvassing his congregation, among whom I took sixteen subscriptions to the Cynosure, besides donations to the N. C. A. I love the sturdy conscientiousness of the Covenanters. They do not hold their convictions lightly; nor are they merely filled with beautiful and holy sentiments which do not materialize when an appeal is made for financial aid to the reforms they profess to favor.

From Linton I went to Oskaloosa, where I spoke twice, and then went to Monroe and returned to Sigourney, the county seat of Keokuk county, and arranged to preach and lecture on the coming Sabbath. I then went on to Washington where I took one subscription of $5.00 to the N. C. A., and then spent two days in Ainsworth canvassing in the U. P. congregation with very good success. There are men in this Ainsworth congregation who mean business in their opposition to the spread of heathenism and infidelity through the secret lodge system.

On Saturday I returned to Sigourney and found the city had been billed with a notice that I would speak in the Advent church at 3 P. M., on the Lord's day. About two hundred bills were left which I distributed among the farmers who were in the city Saturday afternoon. I preached in the morning in the Free Methodist church, and spoke at 3. P. M. in the Advent church, on the Religious and Moral Character of Freemasonry and kindred orders. The house was well filled and close attention was given to the truth presented.

One little incident occurred. A friend was telling me of a time when he and another gentleman were examining an illustrated exposition of Freemasonry, and an English Mason, fresh from the mother isle, came up and joined the group. Seeing that they were studying Freemasonry, he innocently supposed that they were members of the craft.

Turning to the Englishman my friend said, "This is Freemasonry as it is worked in America. How does it compare with your work in England?"

The English Mason examined it carefully and replied, "I don't see any difference. As far as I can see it is exactly as we work in England."

I said, in my lecture at Sigourney (when about to analyze the obligations of Freemasonry to determine its moral character), those Masons who say, "if you have not been made a Mason you cannot know anything about it," are ignorant of the fact that the oaths of Freemasonry have been repeatedly proven, in our courts of justice, to be as revealed, adhering Masons of the highest character being the witnesses; or they are grossly dishonest and untruthful when they make such a statement.

At the close of my lecture several men came up and expressed their sympathy with the truth, and the craftsmen, convicted by their own consciences, silently retired.

Let us unitedly pray that Christ may rebuke Satan, and break the spell of darkness that he has brought upon the minds and hearts of those who worship at the false altars of the lodge.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

—Simon Yandes, a millionaire of Indianapolis, Ind., donated $20,000 in cash to Wabash University, located at Crawfordsville. This makes a total of $120,000 which he has given to the institution within the last year.

—Princeton College opens with the largest Freshman class that she had in all her history. The class had to be divided into many sections. For instruction in English, there are four sections, for mathematics five, and in the classics six. Three new instuctors have been appointed.

—Mr. James M. Gamble has assumed the indebtedness of the Wesleyan Female College, amounting to $28,000, and thus prevented the sale by foreclosure of this old institution. It is the leading Methodist college for women in Ohio. Mrs. Lucy Webb Hayes was one of its early graduates.

—Miss Jane Graydon, of Indianapolis, Ind., has succeeded her older sister, Miss Kate Graydon, as professor of Greek at Hastings College, Hastings, Neb. Miss Graydon is perhaps the youngest instructor of Greek in any college; she is twenty-four years old, and a graduate of Butler University.

—The trustees of Dickinson College have, through the munificence of a number of Philadelphians, established the "Chair of the English Bible," and elected Prof. A. W. Rogers, of Philadelphia, to fill it. It is to be hoped that such a chair may soon be established in every institution of learning in the country.

—The enrollment for the fall term of Penn College, Oskaloosa, Iowa, reaches 150, of whom 80 are in the college department. The Freshman class numbers 43. The new wing is now completed, containing four class rooms, two society halls, library and room for girls' gymnasium. The chapel has been enlarged, and several other improvements have been made. All the rooms in the building are now furnished with steam heat.

—It appears that the California trip of the President, Cabinet, and various prominent people, will be made in the spring of next year rather than the summer or autumn, seeing that Senator Stanford hopes to push construction on the Leland Stanford, Jr., University, so that its dedication, the event the President's presence is to distinguish, shall fall upon May 14, the twenty-third anniversary of the birth of the Senator's dead son.

—Dr. G. H. Schodde writing in the Theological Magaznie on "The Student Volunteer Movement" for foreign missions, says that the Lutheran institutions are least affected by it. He regrets that this indifference in their colleges is proportioned to the neglect of the mission cause by the churches sustaining them, and says; "The next generation of American Lutherans must do more for the spread of the kingdom of God than ours is doing."

—Something like a quarter of a century ago, that is in 1866, Mr. Garfield stated in a speech in the House of Representatives at Washington, that a just estimate of the amount of money contributed in this country for educational purposes by private individuals, would probably at that time place it $50,000,000. Lately it has been estimated that considering what has been done in the founding of Cornell. Johns Hopkins, and other universities, with the numerous other gifts to institutions old and new, since the date above mentioned, the total since the original planting of this nation might now without extravagance be placed at $100,000,000. This matter of private benefaction in behalf of such objects is a good deal an American peculiarity, similar institutions in other countries being endowed and built up in large degree by public funds.

IOWA CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, is hereby called to meet in the Free Methodist church at Fairfield, Iowa, Tuesday, Dec. 2, at 2 P. M., to continue its sessions through the following day. Efforts will be made to secure some of the ablest speakers on the subject to address the convention. The committee hope to furnish free entertainment to all delegates. All churches and associations opposed to secret societies are urged to send delegates to this meeting.

C. D. Trumbull, Cor. Sec.

—Bishop Taylor, of Africa, said recently in New York, that eight of the hardest African missionary stations were managed by women, of which the most difficult was carried on by a little Canadian. He did not give her name, but stated that she was among the wildest tribes, and doing the best work of all.

—The Missionary Herald says: "We find in the English papers a report that the Ottoman Government, in connection with the Deutsche Bank has authorized a loan for the building of a railway into Anatolia, the revenues of four districts being guaranteed for the payment of the government share in the outlay. A railway already runs from Scutari to Ismid, fifty-eight miles, and it is now proposed to continue it to Angora, a point 215 miles east-southeast of Constantinople. Work has already been begun on this extension, and the contract calls for the completion of the line by October, 1892. Such a railway would be a boon to our missionaries in Asiatic Turkey, and if completed to Angora it would probably be continued to Diarbekir and ultimately to Bagdad.

INTEMPERANCE AND LODGERY.

A POINT FOR THE W. C. T. U. PRESIDENT.

Editor Cynosure:—The letter of Miss Willard in a recent number of the Cynosure breathes the spirit of candor and generosity, and I can easily believe her statement, that from nature and disposition she is opposed to secret societies. But Miss Willard has been engaged heart and soul in the temperance movement, and can have had but little time to make herself acquainted with our reform work. There is a point in her apology for a little secrecy that I wish to notice.

She is at the head of a reform movement, and can understand how circumstances sometimes make radicalism necessary. I wish her to see our reform work in the light of her own. Miss Willard cannot prove that a little wine, or beer, or even brandy, is necessarily harmful to every one, soul or body, nor that it is opposed to the Bible regardless of circumstances; still she believes in total abstinence and absolute prohibition, and bases her principles upon the conviction that this is the only way in which we can rid ourselves of the evils of intemperance.

Taking this ground, she would hold that a professed temperance person who uses a little wine or beer is doing wrong; not because of any particular harm in it, but because of the moral effect of his example. Neither would she excuse him if he should say playfully, as she herself speaks about some secret societies—that the secret of the intoxicating element in his drink was, that it did not intoxicate anybody, at least not him. It would be easier to prove by Scripture and argument that there is positive harm in all secret societies than it would be to prove the same in regard to the moderate use of wine. It is not the secrets of these societies that we object to particularly, but their systems of morality and religion, which is something else than Christianity, their tendency to partiality and injustice, and their idle display of sham and ceremony.

Friends of the Cynosure will not censure Miss Willard for her appreciation of good qualities in some or all Good Templars. We do not war with persons, but with ideas. But the lodge work of the Good Templars has nearly all the evil features of Freemasonry. They have a system of morality and religion, with show and ceremony peculiar to themselves. They have a special grand lodge above, where they send their members, not because they are Christians but because they are Good Templars. Not long ago there was a notice in our local papers congratulating a departed sister upon her entrance into this grand lodge, simply as a sister in the lodge. If this grand lodge is considered the same as the Christian heaven, how can they consistently promise and expect an entrance without complying with the conditions of Christianity, or at least pretend to? Years ago I was member of a temperance society—not a secret one either—and I remember just one verse in a song we used to sing. It ran thus:

"Forever, then forever, pure water be our cry,
Till over Jordan's river, we pass triumphantly;
Then where the streams of glory, through Eden's bowers flow,
We'll tell our temperance story, of heaven begun below."

This is pretty much the way with all such organizations. They pass over Jordan triumphantly and roam the Elysian fields, all on the strength of the practice of some one virtue, no matter how much they be lacking in the spirit of Christ and the principle of Christianity; no matter if they do not profess to be Christians at all. Is it a small matter thus to controvert the teaching of Christ, and promise eternal life regardless of the requirements of the Gospel? R. P. Brorup.

HOLINESS AND MASONRY.

Dear Editor Cynosure:—Feeling a deep interest in the cause which the N. C. A. are laboring to promote, I am impressed to make some inquiry as to the doings of the National Holiness Association. Of late years I hear or read but little of their victories and triumphs. Some months ago I wrote to Rev. Geo. Hughes, of the Guide to Holiness, inquiring as to the position of the Association in regard to Masonry. In reply he informed me that the Association had not pronounced on Masonry, and advised me against controversy. I do not consider it sacrilege to pursue Freemasonry wherever it is to be found.

At the national camp meeting at Round Lake in the year 1871, one of the speakers brought up the subject of Masonry, when it was promptly tabooed and put down as a side issue. As I knew nothing definite about the institution at that time I did not much wonder at the proceeding. I recollect distinctly that I did not find the unction and power at that meeting that I expected. It is all plain now. But nineteen years have passed since that time. Masonry is thoroughly exposed, weighed in the balance and found wanting. It is a perfect wonder to me how any man, who has holiness as his profession or aim, can face an intelligent community, either adhering to Masonry or astride the fence in regard to it. It is as great a wonder how a body of preachers can claim the respect of the community as Christians, to say nothing of holiness, while neutral in regard to that heathenish institution. J. Marsh.

Note.—Rev. W. W. Kelley, writing to the Free Methodist, speaks of the same subject thus:

"It is true the love of God in Christ alone feeds his children; but even they are to be guided as well as fed; yea, and often physicked too; and the bulk of our hearers must be purged before they are fed; else we only feed the disease."—Letter to Joseph Cownley. Wesley's Works, Vol. VI., pp. 729. Can it be said that times have so changed that these words of the founder of Methodism do not apply with equal force to-day?

To specify: has not that false system of religion, Freemasonry, crept into the M. E. church, compassed her altars, and ascended very many of her pulpits? If the leaders of this holiness movement strike it with the sword of the Lord, the blows are light and but seldom given. In fact, so far as my observation has gone, if a blow is given this religion of Satan, it is done in such a manner that it almost carries with it an apology. Of course there are a few noble exceptions, but if this is not the rule I stand willing and anxious to be corrected.

When brother Fowler, in the sermon referred to in a former article, called Unitarian and Universalist churches the devil's churches because they defeat the work of Christ, I heard a faithful M. E. minister—who was once a Freemason, say—"And the Masonic church." Although said in an undertone it is worthy the voice of a Luther. And do not these things demand a plainer and closer declaration of the law of God, or as Wesley plainly terms it, a physicking and purging by means of the law of God?

ABOUT LAKE WINNIPISOGEE.

Wellesley, Mass.

A good sister in Gilford Village, whose thoughtful act of kindness will not fail of its reward, lent her horse and carriage, after the State convention, for a drive to Locke's Hill, a point from which there is an especially beautiful view of the lake and its surrounding hills. Our way led for quite a distance beside Gunstalk river, a leaping, brawling, but lovely stream, and as in Whittier's "Among the Hills,"

> "We held our sideling way above
> The river's whitening shallows,
> By homesteads old, with wide flung barns
> Swept through and through by swallows."

I never knew before what "whitening shallows" meant, but I know now that I have seen Gunstalk river. As for the "homesteads old," they are quite a feature in a New Hampshire landscape. They look picturesque, but could some of them speak they might tell many a bitter tale of struggles with poverty, and the farmer's worst enemy—cider. At last we reached the Pisgah for which we were bound, Locke's Hill; and magnificent was the view that burst upon us. Who can describe one of Beethoven's grand symphonies? So before the highest in art or nature human language is powerless. It stands like St. John before the indescribable glories of another sphere, with only that sublime expression on its lips: "And I John saw." Winnipisogee with its wooded isles—the popular account says there are 365, one for every day in the year—lay in sapphire clearness, and all around, rising like an amphitheatre, those guardian hills! Now for the first time in my life, I thought exultingly, I have seen mountains, real mountains; and all that the poets have sung of their grandeur and their majesty will be no longer a sealed book to me, like beautiful words in an unknown tongue. And above all, what a new sense of calmness and peace, beyond all power of the world to disturb, will come into my heart when I think that "as the mountains are round about Jerusalem so the Lord is round about his people." But there was still another revelation to come, the crown of all, when between a gap in the hills I caught—my first view of Mt. Washington. From childhood I had longed to see it; and there it rose, silverwhite against the blue, etherial as a dream. Harriet Martineau's expression recurred to me, on looking at a singularly beautiful landscape, that "she was afraid to take her eyes off from it for fear that it would melt." But God be thanked that he has let down here and there such foregleams of the infinite beauty yet to be revealed; a pattern as it were of things in the heavenly Mount, that shall stand firm when what we fondly call "the everlasting hills" shall melt with fervent heat, and all their glory and strength pass away like a forgotten dream. Elizabeth E. Flagg.

A COLORED PASTOR HELPED.

Poplar Bluff, Ark.

Dear Editor:—Permit me to say a few words in your valuable paper. I have been (as many others, I suppose) greatly fooled by the talk and action of secret society men that they had the "key" of the Bible, and I was almost converted by their doctrine. But, thank God that the Cynosure reached me in time to save from the pit among the workers of darkness. God has no part with darkness; and the proof is that he calls or demands all truly awakened hearts to "come out from among" the wicked, to "touch not the unclean thing." Therefore, every Christian who belongs to societies (as Masons, Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, and other similar societies), they are among the wicked. They are bound to protect such persons in every circumstance when they want help. They must help them rather than an own beloved brother in the Lord who does not belong to the order. This is wrong, for the religion of Jesus is to do good unto all men; help those who need your help, especially the poor, and those of the "household of faith". This is or should be the vow of every Christian on entering the church.

Through all of my travels as a minister for twenty-one years, I find that two-thirds of the church members have left the commandments (as of old) and are gone following after Baal, thus giving room for the enemy. Here and in many other places the secret societies are doing great harm to the churches.

May the Cynosure find a welcome place in every home throughout this wide world. God bless your efforts and crown your labors with success.

A Watchman.

PITH AND POINT.

SEND ON THE NAMES.

Your September plan strikes me as being a good one, and I will send you several names and their address. I do hope, and think, some of them will subscribe for the Cynosure. I so often wish that it could be in many more families than it is, but we must work and pray. I hope that you may get a good many subscribers from among these names, and that this may be a little help in the overthrow of this gigantic evil, this hindrance to the spirituality of the church of Christ.—Mrs. M. A. Gamble, Detroit, Mich.

REMEMBERING OTHERS.

We enclose $3 to renew our own subscription and the price of another copy for a year to be sent to some one you may think best A few weeks ago I saw the name of some one who wished to continue his subscription, but had to give it up, but I have forgotten the name and don't know where to find it. I send all our Cynosures to I. R. B. Arnold, Marietta, Ohio. With kindest wishes for the success of the cause.—Wm. Whittemore and H. M. Whittemore.

FROM BEULAH SEMINARY, CLARKSVILLE, MICH.

We will be glad to join in with you in the fight against secrecy. Also the address of the Holiness Record will be Clarksville, Mich., hereafter. You can make a note through your valuable paper concerning the school if you desire. Prof. J. J. Sadler, one of the strongest anti-secret men we have, is professor of mathematics and book-keeping. We have a strong force here against secrecy.—N. S. A. Eastman.

THE RIVER MISSION—WHO WILL HELP BRO. ARNOLD AGAIN?

I send the names of four colored preachers to whom you may send the Cynosure. Have just completed another $100 payment on the boat. Will soon begin to turn the tide toward the Cynosure office. I admire the ability with which the Cynosure is conducted; would like to see its endowment doubled, to enable it to increase its usefulness. I have received from all sources about $600, which I paid on the floating chapel., leaving $1,000, which I am paying myself—$200 now, in the last sixty days, leaving only $800 to complete paying for the boat. I need $300 more for seats, paint, etc.—which I am paying for and getting as I earn the money. As soon as that—the seating, is done I shall pay as fast as I can into the ministers' fund. The M. E. preacher at Williamstown, W. Va., said, "I have been urged to join the Masons, and I thank you for that lecture. It is just what I wanted to know." Our work is well received—both Anti-masonic and prohibition.—I. R. B. Arnold.

THE ENEMY OF THE COLORED RACE.

I have seen a copy of your paper, and I esteem it for its effort for the destruction of one of the gravest evils among my race,—"secret orderisms." I would to God that we had more such papers. I am an African Methodist preacher, and am daily confronted with the evils resulting from these secret orders, which I think detrimental to the morals of my race. I would like to receive your paper if it is favorable. God grant you abundant and unbounded success.—J. M. E. Wallis, Texas.

GOOD WORDS.

I love to support such a paper as the Cynosure.—J. F., Bloomdale, O.

Some have expressed a desire to subscribe, but are not ready yet. I expect to keep giving them a chance.—S. P., Sternerton, Kan.

I cannot well do without the paper. Wishing you success in your noble work, I am, etc.—J. M. P., Salem, Iowa.

LITERATURE.

Jottings from the Pacific. Life and incidents in the Fijian and Samoan Islands. By Emma H. Adams. Pp. 160. Pacific Press Publishing Co., Oakland, Cal.

The agreeable narrative style of this book, and the interesting character of its information will make it popular with young readers. Until a comparatively few years past the Fiji islanders have practiced cannibalism, and their horrid orgies were only suppressed since the English took possession of the islands in 1874. The account of Samoa is of nearer interest because of the recent diplomatic arrangement between our own country, Great Britain and Germany. The character, habits, governments, and social life of these island nations are pleasantly described, and we doubt not faithfully. The author has a conception of the difference between heathenism and the true religion which it is quite the fashion to set aside in our day. Quoting from a recent writer who says that the devil-worship of the islanders, though dying hard, is passing away, and "all that is good" in it "is being carefully adapted so as to be in harmony with the Christianity now professed." Our author replies with just indignation, "Why should the 'good things' of devil-worship be engrafted upon Christianity? Is not Christianity without the slightest admixture of their old heathen worship, the very best thing in the form of religion that can be offered the advancing Fijians? Christianity with the choicest of their former rites 'carefully fitted into it' is not Christianity. It is something else. Christianity needs nothing fitted into it to improve it or to help it make its way." Let Christians in our own land remember this when the god of this world entices them with Christmas and Easter and other notions of baptized paganism.

Love, the Supreme Gift; or the Greatest thing in the World is the title of one of Prof. Henry Drummond's best addresses which has been put in neat form by F. H. Revell, publisher of New York and Chicago. Prof. Drummond takes up Paul's matchless thirteenth chapter of 1st Corinthinans and argues by contrast, by analysis, and by defense or justification. It is a writing of great power and eloquence which will strengthen the faith and quicken the zeal of every believer. Price 20 cts.

That excellent book, "Fishers of Men," by Rev. B. T. Roberts, editor of the Free Methodist, is to be translated and issued in Bombay. The remarkably successful book and tract missionary, Rev. A. W. Pratch (formerly of Chicago), is translating it into Marathi. It is a grand book, widely commended. Dr. Cullis says, "It is full of the Gospel, and must be a help to those who would win souls." It will do a blessed mission work among the natives.

In Vick's Magazine for October, passing by the beautiful frontispiece, the work of the October flower garden is taken up directly and practically, and the Holland bulbs have such attention as will please all lovers of their beautiful flowers. The Cactus family has a prominent place in this number; also the grape vine and the Black Currant, which has friends who are anxious to bring it back into old-time favor with house-keepers.

In Brief.

A recent official statement makes the farm mortgages in Ohio to amount to about one-sixth of the value of the farms, and about one-eighth of their value in Michigan and Illinois. This certainly is not a bad showing for the farmers in these States, and does not accord with the exaggerated statements that have been made as to the extent of these mortgages.

At Norristown, Me., a horseshoer made nine miniature horseshoes from a silver ten-cent piece. Each shoe has the number of holes usually drilled in horseshoes of the ordinary size, but, strange to say, the smallest needle is too large to be used as nails for these little wonders. He has made affidavit that each and every one of the miniature shoes were made with the same hammer and punch used in making the largest-sized real horseshoes.

Prof. Charles F. Down, the originator of standard railroad time, has presented a novel suggestion regarding Federal control of railroads. He proposes to organize the railroads on a system modeled after the national bank system He would have all transportation companies chartered by the Government, each road depositing with the Government unquestionable securities for its bonds up to a certain amount, which the railroads could sell. By this plan, it is said "the railroads would be able to reduce freight and passenger rates from twenty to twenty-five per cent, and be as well off as they are at the present rates. On the basis of ten per cent. of the securities deposited in Washington, the Government might issue a system of national mileage tickets for transportation of freight and passengers, good on all railroads, and securing uniform rates. Each company would take up its share of the mileage tickets, which would be redeemable for cash at any Government railroad ticket office."

Prof. E. W. Thwing, of Brooklyn, a specialist in mental diseases, has recently returned from China, where he went about a year ago to investigate the need of an asylum for the insane. Prof. Thwing comes back fully convinced of the pressing need of such an institution in China, where there does not exist a single insane asylum to-day. Many of the insane there commit suicide, some are murdered to be gotten out of the way, though the fear of their spirits returning after death in a great measure prevents this, and others are chained or left to suffer in strong cages, without any care, except being given a bowl of rice each day. The project of an asylum was endorsed at a recent conference of Chinese physicians in Shanghai, but the majority of the people are too apathetic or superstitious to encourage the benevolent scheme and some are even opposed to it. The relief to these suffering unfortunates must therefore be international. It is hoped that $20,000 can be raised in the United States and much more in England. It is proposed to build the asylum just outside the walls of Canton. Nearly all the representatives of foreign powers reside in or about Canton, and they are in hearty sympathy with the movement. "Not only the Chinese," says Dr. Thwing, "but missionaries and others become insane. The church has its hands full in caring for its own people, and there is great need of such an institution. Dissection is not allowed in China, so the physicians there have no opportunity to study the diseases of the brain. Then their Asiatic apathy and tendency to fatalism is unfriendly to medical treatment. Japan has insane asylums for those who can pay the fees, but there are none for the indigent." Dr. John Y. Kerr, who has been a resident of Canton, China, for thirty-five years, is at the head of this effort to secure funds for an insane asylum, and contributions sent him will be gratefully acknowledged.— New York Times.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, Editor.
HENRY L. KELLOGG, Associate Editor and Publisher.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1890.

The College Discussion receives in this number the contribution of two reviews of Miss Williard's article, both of which are given in a courteous spirit. From an undoubted authority we borrow the opinions of the former presidents of Yale and Cornell. These gentlemen might be presumed to be favorable to the fraternities. It appears they are not so without large qualifications.

Our portrait is of the late Prof. Lewis Davis, D. D., of the Theological Seminary of the United Brethren church at Dayton, Ohio, an eminent theologian and instructor in his denomination, and uncompromisingly opposed to all secret societies whatsoever. He was for some years president also of Otterbein University at Westerville, O., and had all educators been of his fervent Christian spirit there would have been no call for a discussion of College secret societies, for there would have been none to discuss.

The eccentric Dr. Talmage, in his late visit to Palestine saw Jews in numbers wending their way to Jerusalem, and speaks of it as fulfilment of prophecy. In 1816, eighty-four years ago, Mr. Buckingham visited Jerusalem, and in his lectures in this country gave a graphic description of the Jews, who then, and long, long before, were making pilgrimages to Palestine; and, in wretched abodes, were poring over the Hebrew prophets in hope that Christ was coming to set up his personal reign there.

But Christ now fills the throne of David; and the Jerusalem in which his kingdom of "righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost" is to be set up, is the heavenly Jerusalem, the abode of God, descending to earth; of which that Jerusalem in Palestine was only the outward and material type.

The Millerites' "Second Advent," and Jews flocking to Palestine are devices of Satan to turn off our attention and keep us from "seeking first the kingdom of God," which, when come, will illumine the whole earth.

Incantation is singing or chanting a formula to raise the devil,—the arts and methods of witches, hags, sorcerers, and sorceresses. Fifty years before the American Revolution, the French inhabitants of Nova Scotia (then Acadia) were driven from their homes for refusing fealty to the English government, to which France surrendered the territory in 1713. Eighteen thousand of those poor people, with their priests, found their way to Louisiana and New Iberia, eight miles from the Gulf of Mexico, on the road from New Orleans to Texas, and still speak the language of those French exiles. We spent some months in that town three winters ago. Two whiskey-drinking priests led their funerals to the low, wet graveyard, chanting through their noses Latin incantations for the repose of the dead. That interesting people have thus worshiped devils for two hundred years.

EXPULSION OF THE BIBLE FROM SCHOOLS.

It is now twenty years since the Bible was expelled from the schools of Cincinnati, by the united votes of Romanists and infidels; Romanism being tantamount to atheism in practice, for it subjects the Bible to the interpretation of the church and so substitutes the words of priests for the Word of God. Stanley Matthews (since Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court, and now deceased) made the strongest argument for the exclusion. He was a Presbyterian; exceedingly able and intensely sincere in his belief that the Bible ought not to be read in the schools as an act of worship, because:

1. The schools must be national.
2. Therefore, Jews, Romanists, and atheists must be taxed to support them; and
3. It is injustice and unconstitutional to take their money to support schools and use it to support schools in which the Bible is read as worship, and thus support a Bible-reading religion.

If Judge Matthews were now alive, he would see that he made one fearful, fundamental mistake. He held that if the Bible were put out of the schools, the priests could not compel their people to support or send children to their parish schools. But where the Bible is now put out, the priests denounce the free schools as "godless," and compel their people to send to and support their parish schools; and they already clamor for a division of the school fund, giving them, of course, the lion's share. This was their object from the first,—to expel the Bible; denounce the schools as "godless;" draw their children away from them; create as they have done and are now doing, parish-schools run by priests; then divide the school money, and destroy the national free schools. And, as theirs is avowedly a political religion, by giving their votes to the party which will grant their demands, they can, and unless God prevents it, will support their colleges, universities, foundling hospitals, convents, nunneries (which are houses of women of which unmarried men have the keys) by the money which was given to support unsectarian schools, free to the children of the United States.

"But, how is it to be helped?" Judge Matthews would ask. "Will you tax Roman Catholics to support Protestant worship? and infidels to support religion?"

This question has for years been answered in Canada. A book of Bible selections has for years been used in their public schools to which Protestants, papists, and Jews have given assent. Archbishop Lynch (Roman Catholic) gave the volume the sanction of his church; and, so far as we can learn, the book gives universal satisfaction to all receivers of the Bible, as the standard of law and morals. If there are atheists, who object to the worship of God, their objection is against all government as well as all religion. For no government ever existed on earth without some recognition of God; and the oath is the highest and most solemn act of worship. And if there are men who would forbid us to swear in our Presidents upon the Bible, or to administer oaths to witnesses in courts, and that on the plea that the oath offends their consciences, the sooner the question is settled with such disorganizers the better.

We see by Chicago papers that a woman's Union, with Mrs. Ezra A. Cook for president, has undertaken to awaken public sentiment and call attention to the debasing moral effect on the character of children of banishing the Bible from the Chicago schools. The Advance gives the Union a favorable though brief notice; and says the movement promises enlarged dimensions. It is to be hoped that the ladies will meet with success, and either restore the Bible, or secure the use of a book of Bible selections in the schools of Chicago. If the Roman Catholic masses can be thoroughly informed, and be made to see that the simple, brief worship of God by a Scripture reading without comment is all that is desired, there are enough intelligent American citizens among them who will join (the Protestants) in this movement, to defeat the crafty priests who prefer union with atheists and unbelievers, to free schools which are no more Protestant than they are Catholic, but simply Christian.

THE MORMONS ASTIR.

Wilford Woodruff, president of the Mormon church, issued a manifesto, Sept. 24th ult, "To whom it may concern," in which he says:

"Press dispatches have been sent from Salt Lake, saying that the Utah Commission allege that plural marriages are still being solemnized; and that forty or more such marriages have been contracted in Utah since last June."

And he adds:

"Therefore, as president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, do hereby, in the most solemn manner, declare that the charges are false."

He says that one such marriage was reported in the spring of 1889, but he had not been able to "find who performed the ceremony," and adds:

"Whatever was done in this matter, was done without my knowledge or authority. In consequence of this alleged occurrence the Endowment House was, by my instructions, taken down without delay. * * * I now publicly declare that my advice to Latter Day Saints is: Refrain from contracting any marriage forbidden by the law of the land."

Two days after the above manifesto appeared, Gov. Thomas was interviewed (Sept. 26.) and said, "It is impossible now to give a definite opinion of the purpose or effect of this proclamation. If it is put forward and hereafter observed in good faith, it is an important step, and will do much to remove one of the political objections to Mormonism."

At the General Conference, representing the whole Mormon church (Oct. 6.), about 10,000 persons being present, the Woodruff manifesto was reconsidered, and the dispatches say, the whole multitude, apostles, bishops and elders included, "by a unanimous vote recognized the authority of the president to issue the manifesto, and accepted it as authoritative and binding."

In the Deseret Weekly an article is republished from The National Democrat, Washington, D. C., written by A. B. Carlton, appointed on the Utah Commission by President Arthur, who held that post seven years, half of which time he was chairman of the Commission. This Mr. Carlton says:

"Sagacious men among the Mormons have long foreseen that the practice of pologamy must eventually be abandoned, and since the death of Brigham Young in 1877, there has been a constantly increasing disposition among the people to unload the incubus from their shoulders."

Nauvoo, Ill., was founded by Joseph Smith in 1840, ten years after the sect was formed in Manchester, N. Y. A few months since, the senior editor of the Cynosure, being in Salt Lake, heard two Mormon priests in the Tabernacle, who said they were intimate companions of Smith; and that he received his first revelation at the village of Palmyra during a revival of religion, in which different denominations united, but contended in the reception of the converts. Smith, they said, received a revelation by an angel, who told him there were golden plates in the hill of Cumorah, not far off. In about a year the sect removed to Kirtland, Ohio, and built a temple and a bank, which failed, and the Mormons were driven away. They attempted to settle in Missouri, but being driven out settled in Nauvoo in Hancock Co., Ill., as above, in 1840. Here the sect grew rapidly. A paper was started in Nauvoo against Mormonism. It was suppressed and the building destroyed. Smith was sued, but refused to obey the court warrant. Gov. Ford called out the militia to enforce the warrant, but persuaded the Smiths (Joseph and his brother) to stand trial. They were taken to jail in Carthage, where Joseph and Hiram Smith were shot by a mob in 1843.

These three years were eventful. Stephen A. Douglas was just rising into political notice. He joined the Freemasons and was Grand Orator of the Grand Lodge of Illinois in 1840, the year when Nauvoo was settled. Joseph Smith was a Freemason in New York. He was an idle loafer and was well known by Samuel D. Green, when he kept the Park Hotel, Batavia, N. Y. This information was given the writer by Mr. Green, who seceded and renounced the lodge after the murder of Morgan. A Masonic lodge was formed at Nauvoo and by the aid of Douglas received a dispensation. Joseph Smith said he had received a revelation that Stephen A. Douglas was, or was to be the greatest man in the United States. The Mormons increased rapidly and voted the Democratic ticket. But as Smith found it necessary to receive or pretend to receive a revelation in favor of polygamy to cover his debaucheries; and rogues, thieves and counterfeiters, as well as sincere enthusiasts, gathered in Nauvoo and were sheltered by its fanaticism, the Grand Lodge of Illinois was divided in opinion, and sent committees to labor with the Nauvoo lodge for alleged irregularities. Grand Master Helm suspended their dispensation and interdicted their work. But Nauvoo lodge was restored and the injunction removed in 1842. The lodge soon came to have a majority of all the Masons in Illinois, and it was proposed to divide it into four local lodges. But Smith made the Nauvoo lodge "clandestine" by instituting a stop degree; so that while Mormons could enter other lodges outsiders could not get into Nauvoo lodge. Polygamy, horse-stealing, counterfeiting, etc., did not cause the Nauvoo lodge to be dropped, but Smith was shot May 27, 1844, and the Grand Lodge sent a committee to Nauvoo to demand the surrender of their charter. The lodge treated the demand with contempt, and told the committee they should go on with their Masonic work. So the Grand Lodge in October, 1844, after Smith's death in the previous May, passed the following:

"Resolved, By this Grand Lodge, that all fellowship with said lodge and the members thereof be withdrawn."

The Nauvoo lodge, as they said they should, went on with their work. In 1847 they erected their temple in Salt Lake; called it the Endowment House, whose oaths are now declared by the Supreme Court of Utah to be a bar to naturalization and citizenship in the United States.

The Endowment House is now "taken down" by order of President Woodruff, and the treasons, Mountain-Meadow massacres, assassinations like that of Dr. Robinson, and hundreds of others, are, of course, put where they will not be read, till the day of judgment. And the National Democrat of Washington, it seems, is proposing to renew its early alliance with this terrible Latter-day movement. Surely, "In the last days perilous times shall come."

APOSTASY.

We insert below an account of a funeral in Dayton, Ohio, which must call down the wrath of God on the corrupters of the church of the United Brethren in Christ. When Edmund Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, Chicago, exhibited the abominations of Masonry to a crowded hall in Dayton, W. J. Shuey, long agent of the Book Concern, was with us professing to oppose the lodge. Where is he now? Look below at extracts from the Dayton papers:

(The Dayton Herald.)

"Yesterday afternoon the funeral of the late Stephen J. Rigler occurred from the First U. B. church, Fifth street. The attendance was notably large, the services were impressive, Rev. Dr. Berger preaching the funeral sermon. At the conclusion of the services Rev. W. J. Shuey gave a succinct sketch of the life and character of the deceased, and offered a high eulogium on him. It may be said properly, in this connection, that the Masonic fraternity, of whom Mr. Rigler was an honored and conspicuous member, had charge of the funeral; and it was the first Masonic funeral ever conducted in the First U. B. church. Reed Commandery, No. 6, led the sorrowing procession to the cemetery. St. John's Lodge, F. and A. M., Old Guard Post and the Typographical Union were also in line. An unusually long line of carriages completed the cortege. It was one of the largest and most impressive funeral occasions ever witnessed here."

(From the Dayton Journal.)

"The funeral of the late Stephen J. Rigler, held yesterday afternoon, was quite largely attended. The funeral ceremonies were conducted largely by the Masonic bodies, of which he was a member. The procession to the residence was headed by Reed Commandery, Knights Templar, followed by Old Guard Post, G. A. R., Captain John N. Bell. Next came the Typographical Union and employes of the U. B. Printing Establishment, followed by St. John's Lodge, F. and A. M. The remains were received by the officers of St. John's Lodge and conveyed to the hearse. The procession then moved to the First United Brethren church in the order named.

"Notwithstanding the inclement weather, the service at the church was largely attended by personal friends and members of the various societies of which Mr. Rigler was a member, including St. John's lodge, F. and A. M.; Gabriel Lodge, A. A. Scottish Rite; Reed Commandery, K. T.; Knights of Honor; Old Guard Post, G. A. R., and the Dayton Typographical Union. Music was furnished by the Masonic Quartet. Rev. Bookwalter invoked the Divine blessing, and was followed by Rev. Dr. Berger in an excellent sermon, and at its conclusion Rev. W. J. Shuey read a short biographical sketch of Mr. Rigler, in which he paid an eloquent tribute to Mr. Rigler's character as a man, and feelingly spoke of his valuable services to the publishing house in the past thirty-five years. The Masonic bodies performed their offices for the dead, the services of St. John's Lodge being conducted by Worshipful Master W. S. Kemp, and those of the Scottish Rite by Grand Master Allen Jeffers in an impressive manner, concluding with the presentation of the ring, emblematic of the order, to the widow. This concluded the services at the church and the procession wended its way to Woodland. At the cemetery the beautiful Masonic funeral ritual was impressively rendered by Dr. W. S. Kemp, Worshipful Master of St. John's Lodge, and the remains of Stephen J. Rigler were laid to rest."

—Rev. A. H. Springstein of Michigan asks for an explanation of the statement in our columns, that the passage of the dependent pension bill makes necessary an exhorbitant taxation. He will find it in the official statements that the expenses for pensions amount to nearly one-half the total outlay of the government, or about $400,000 for every day of the year, Sundays included.

—M. L. Scudder, Jr., a writer of some note on financial topics, contributes to America an article on "Dark Lantern Companies," in which he attacks a number of business corporations which conceal their affairs from the public scrutiny. If regularly and legally organized business is obnoxious to such a term, how much more the lodge which is constituted on the basis of conccalment!

—The great Temperance Temple foundations in this city are being rapidly prepared for the corner-stone laying, Nov. 1. There is to be a grand procession of singing children, and addresses suitable for the occasion, one to be by ex-Senator Palmer of Michigan, president of the National Commission for the World's Fair. Joseph Cook was invited, but regretted that the demands of lecture engagements in Oregon would prevent his attending so interesting an occasion.

—We call especial attention to Bro. I. R. B. Arnold's brief note on the 6th page. It appears that not quite enough has been raised to furnish the boat and chapel, although it is now in use. There are many of our good friends who could lift a little at this work. Bro. Arnold, remember, promises to return to our Southern fund for the colored ministers every cent which is sent him in the name of the Cynosure. Lift a little at this burden, brethren.

—Not long since some Evanston, Ill., students were discussing on the train the forthcoming annual "cane rush" at Northwestern University. They were anticipating the melee with a kind of savage joy which might well have caused a pang in the heart of a pious mother. We are well pleased to note in the daily paper just begun by the students of Michigan University, that this "cane rush" is condemned as a relic of barbarism by both faculty and students, and will probably be discontinued at that great institution.

—The Catholic Review has quite adopted the Knights of Labor, and under its fostering wing, Powderly may be able to save a remnant of his order. The Review advises the Knights to take a new start, and keep their power gotten by secrecy, in these words: "Would it not be well for the organization to call a halt, reconsider its methods of recruiting its ranks, and devise some means by which none but sober and honest men be admitted as members? By all means let labor organize, and protect itself against such exactions of capital as may be unjust; but let labor remember that every member coerced into its organization and every member who is unworthy of its protection are both a source of weakness."

—The Christian Instructor announces that early in November, at farthest, its publishers propose establishing a Chicago department of their paper, to be under the management of a resident editor. The junior editor, Rev. J. A. Collins, will remove to this city, and take charge for the present, and will engage in active mission work, for which there are wide openings. "We are impelled," says the Instructor, "to this enterprise by the fact that all eyes will be turned toward Chicago, now the second city in the land, during the preparation for and progress of the World's Fair, and vast influences will be centered there, and go out thence to mould the moral and spiritual, as well as temporal, affairs of the world." The Cynosure will most heartily welcome again the Instructor to Chicago, hoping that it may permanently abide with us.

—The Free Methodist General Conference opened in the new building of the First Church on North May St., in this city, last week, and will continue until next Wednesday. The attendance is good and the work of the conference progresses harmoniously under the supervision of the three superintendents, Revs. B. T. Roberts, E. P. Hart and J. W. Coleman. Last Sabbath the church building was formally dedicated to the worship of God, Bro. Roberts preaching a powerful sermon from the text, Rom. 14:17: "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." He spoke in severe condemnation of the lodge system in its opposition to the churches of Christ and the true worship of the only true and living God. After the sermon Rev. C. B. Ebey, formerly pastor of the church, but now of Los Angeles, Cal., took charge, while over $3,000 was raised to make the last payments on the church, leaving about $1,000 yet to be raised. A large congregation of some 1,000 persons was present, among them Mrs. James Vick, widow of the founder of the great seed house of Rochester, New York.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Mrs. J. P. Stoddard on her return to Boston spent a few days with daughter and son in Oberlin and Washington.

—Rev. R. N. Countee of the Living Way, Memphis, returned during the last of September from his trip to England. He was joyfully received by his people and gave them last week a lecture descriptive of some of the scenes he visited in Great Britain.

—Edmond Ronayne, whom many of our readers well remember, yet resides in this city and continues his private school. He has grown plainly older during the last few years. He still maintains a strong private testimony against the lodge, and the dishonor put upon Christ by those who profess his name yet join the Masonic order.

—The Cynosure welcomed a few days since Rev. Mr. Chestnut, pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian (new school) church of Marissa, Ill., on his way to synod meeting at Pingree Grove, Ill. Also Mr. Geo. S. Robinson, of Cambridge, Mass. formerly a resident of Bloomington, Ill., and nominee of the American party for Attorney General of the State.

—Bro. W. B. Stoddard, the Washington agent, was suffering much last week from a severe attack of malarial fever, which prostrated him for a day or two. Writing Wednesday, he had ventured out a little as the morning was beautiful. He was still under the doctor's care, though hoping to be well as ever, He wishes to correct his last published letter, which says that he arranged with Rev. Leiper and Mr. Haas for a meeting in a Philadelphia mission. The latter only was concerned in the engagement.

—Rev. C. C. Harrah, so well known as the author of "Christ the Emancipator of Woman," and by his Bible notes in this and other papers, did a beautiful thing which he was too modest to have known. He went to Peoria to take charge of a mission in the hope of having it develop into a self-supporting church. This hope has been fully realized, and Plymouth church, Peoria, will ever stand a memorial to his faithfulness and untiring energy. Now that it is strong enough to stand alone, he returns to his boyhood's home, in fulfillment of long cherished plans, and takes charge of the Congregational church at Newton, Iowa. It now transpires that every cent of his salary while in Peoria was devoted to Christian work, he and his family living on the proceeds of a farm he owns in Iowa.—Union Signal.

—Joseph Cook was in Chicago with Mrs. Cook on the 5th and 6th inst. Last week they attended the meeting of the American Board at Minneapolis, and then on to Manitoba and the Pacific Coast for a lecture season. To the Chicago pastors in their meeting he spoke earnestly of the revival of true religion Chicago needs before the great fair is opened. Christ, he said, came into the world to save men from the guilt and power of sin. "We must teach men that they are to hate what God hates and to love what God loves. We need a revival of the fundamental truths of the Gospel. The eyes of the nation are upon Chicago, and the churches have confidence in their brethren here. It is to be hoped that you will have a great revival. The war was preceded by a revival, and the World's Fair needs to be preceded by a revival in this center of the interests which it includes. Representatives of all nations will be here, and will carry away impressions. It would be exceedingly unfortunate if Chicago were to set an evil example by desecrating the Sabbath. There is nothing that the pagan world needs so much as a Sabbath, and now that it is entering heathen lands it should not be stabbed in the back by Chicago."

The best and most forcible argument to present to a Christian man against joining secret societies is the argument that the Apostle Paul presents: "Be ye not unequally yoked together." If a church member delights in the society and companionship of the majority of the men whom he meets in the lodge room, that fact does not speak in high terms of commendation of his Christian character. A Christian must be Christ-like. He must love Christ and love to hold communion with him and with his people. The lodge-room is not the place to encourage this spirit.—Midland.

The Home.

A SONG OF THE DUST.

A song of the good, gray dust
That lay in the winding road,
Till, caught by a sudden gust,
It sprang from its dry abode
And over the hills was sowed—
On the leaves and ribbon-grass,
On the gilded wheat and the shady sheet
Of the swamp-pool smooth as glass.

A song of the good, gray dust
That falls on flower and thorn;
That powders the sumach's rust
And whitens the bladed corn;
That drops in the ways forlorn
Or rests on the blossoms white,
As a wayward touch that has taught thus much
Of the winds æolian flight.

A song of the good, gray dust
That tinges the wayside leaf;
That hangs in a tawny crust
On the farmers' home-bound sheaf;
That swings for a moment brief
On the barley's bearded sheen,
Till the creaking peals of the wagon-wheels
Shall scatter it down between.

A song of the good, gray dust
Ground out from the trampled clod
And into the highway thrust,
Where the lone wayfarer plod;
Yet still by the grace of God
Shall it feel the cooling rain,
And shall know the bliss of the wind's light kiss
That stoops to the country lane.

FOR BETTER OR WORSE.

There are many husbands who do not get the help from their wives that their wives would love to give. They do not take them at all into their deepest, realest life. The pleasant things a man shares with his wife, the encouragements, the prosperities, the comforts, the victories and successes; but the serious questions that arise, the anxieties, the burdens and cares, the discouragements, the adversities, he too often keeps to himself. It is not in any unkind or selfish spirit that he does this; indeed, oftimes it is the very tenderness of his regard for his wife that leads him to withhold from her knowledge, as far as he can, the things that would cause her anxiety or distress of mind. He does not suppose that she could help him in the solving of the questions or in the bearing of the burdens, and he thinks it would be unkindness in him to vex her with questions or oppress her with burdens. So he keeps these troublous things to himself, and while he is in deep perplexity and bowing under heavy loads, perhaps being crushed beneath them, she is moving along in a path of sunshine in quiet enjoyment, with no shadow of care, wholly unconscious of her husband's need of sympathy and help.

Quite recently, in the case of a heavy business failure, the wife knew nothing whatever of the coming misfortune until it had actually fallen upon her home. She then learned that for more than a year her husband had been struggling with his load, trying in every way to bring his affairs out of their complications and to escape the peril of bankruptcy. Meanwhile his wife had been living in her sheltered home, wholly unaware of any stress or any shadow impending. She had been spending money freely as usual in her household management, making no effort to be economical, since she knew of no necessity of unwonted economy. Her neighbors and her neighbor's wives, knowing of her husband's business troubles and of his almost certain failure in the near future, thought strange that she still maintained her costly scale of household expenditure, and severely animadverted upon her want of sympathy with her husband in his distress. Had she known anything of the real condition of affairs she would have instantly reduced the household expenses to the minimum, and possibly by doing this she might have saved him from failure.

There is no doubt that in this case the husband's motive was unselfish and kindly. He shrank from giving anxiety and distress to his wife, and hoped to weather the storm without acquainting her with the fact, that he was in a storm. His motive was unselfish, but his course was unkind. He failed to honor her with that full confidence which every husband owes to the woman whom he has taken to his side as his wife. He inflicted positive injury and sore wrong upon her, in allowing her to go on in her expensive style of living, ignorant of his circumstances, thus drawing upon herself the censure of her neighbors. This injustice to her was irreparable. Her name will never be altogether free from the reproach which it gathered in those days of her husband's struggles. Yet for this he alone was to blame.

When a man has taken a woman to be his wife, he has linked her life with his own in the closest of all earthly relations. Whatever concerns him, concerns her also. He has no interests which are not hers as well as his. He should, therefore, make her the sharer of his own life. She should know of his successes and rejoice with him in them. If reverses come she should know also of these, that she may sympathize with him and help him in his struggles. They have linked their lives together "for better or worse," and they should share the pains and the trials as well as the pleasures and comforts that come to either of them. A true wife is not a child; she is a woman, and should not be treated as a child.

A man does injustice to his wife when he thinks she is too frail and delicate to share with him the storms that blow upon him, or too inexperienced or too ignorant of life to discuss with him the problems that cause him deep and earnest thought. She may not have all his wisdom with regard to the world's affairs, and yet she may be able to offer many a suggestion which shall prove valuable to him. Woman's quick intuition often sees at a glance what man's slow logic is slow in discovering. There is many a man whose success would have been greater, or to whom failure would not have come, had he sought or accepted his wife's counsel or help. Even if a wife can give no real aid, her husband will be made ten times stronger by her strong sympathy and brave cheer while he is carrying his load or fighting his battle.

Therefore, whether the day may bring defeat or victory, failure or success, a man should confide all to his wife in the evening. If the day has been prosperous she has a right to share the gratification: if it has been adverse, she will want, as a true wife, to help her husband bear his burden, and to whisper her word of courage in his ear. Not only does a man fail to give his wife due honor when he shuts her out from participation in his struggles, conflicts, anxieties and defeats of his life, but he also robs himself of that wondrous inspiration and help which every true wife so longs to minister to the husband she loves. True marriage should unite husband and wife in their entire life, whether of joy or sorrow, of victory or defeat, of gain or loss.—Presbyterian.

MARRIAGE AND MARRIED LIFE.

You never read a tragedy or comedy on the married life of the dark ages the facts of which you could not duplicate in the next street. It is the same relation and the same man and woman after all, and the same rules of life apply to them always! Give to a husband and wife some genuine love, a habit of honest thinking and acting, a little leisure in their lives, and, above all, reverence for a Power higher than themselves, and there will be a happiness between them, whether they live in Congo or Chicago, just as there would have been in the days before the flood. Whether this kind of marriage is likely to grow out of the present conditions of our American social life is the question which concerns us all just now. If a woman makes amusement and luxury the end of life, she will naturally sacrifice everything else to gain the rank or wealth which commands them. Ethel Newcome is sold here for dollars as in England for a title. In these mercenary marriages the wife is more guilty than the husband, because she sinks lower to gain her end. Love and personal honor usually count for more to a woman than to a man. Outside of society in the great cities mercenary marriages are rare. The American per se, not the dancing man of Murray Hill or the Back Bay, but the Southern planter, the Western railway man and Pennsylvania tradesman, seldom marries without a hearty, honest throb of love in his heart. He is, at bottom, too honest and hearty a fellow to sell himself. His traits are manly. He reverences women. He flings his money to asylums, hospitals, schools, with a large, free generosity. Not the man surely to make marriage a matter of barter! But even in the great, obscure, unpublished mass of people to whom he belongs; it is true that the greed for riches, which is debasing and vulgarizing our whole life, makes many marriages unhappy which at first were based on the purest affection. Here, it seems to me, the men are most in fault. As soon as John is bitten by the madness for money, the first thing he sacrifices to it is the time which he has hitherto given to his wife and children. He rushes away to office or shop from the breakfast-table, spends the day there, is glum and silent at home, and carries his business into his dreams. A wife clings longer to the romance of love than her husband. She does not willingly lose her lover in the man who signs checks for her. Neither is it true that many unhappy marriages are due to the silly extravagance of wives. Extravagance with the majority of us women is an acquired taste. Most of us have a positive relish for small economies and enjoy the dime which we have saved more than the dollar we have to spend. Upon the whole, I believe that, owing to downright true love, to conscience, and to the sound sense and large good-humor characteristic of the American, the vast majority of marriages in this country are happy.—Rebecca Harding Davis, in North American Review.

THE HUSBAND'S PART.

The home ought to be a harbor of rest; but if the wife ought to make it so for the husband, none the less ought the husband to make it so for the wife. If she should greet him with a restful presence, he should bring to her a cheerful one. The man who holds his umbrella over himself and leaves his wife to take the drippings is a boor; but that is what not a few of us husbands do in running under shelter from all household cares and leaving our wives to take the pitiless rain of pelting perplexities.

It is said of Governor Jewell that when he was carrying on his shoulders the burdens of a great business and all the political anxieties of a great presidential campaign, he always brought to his home a bright face and a cheery word, and a seemingly light heart; so that care flew out of the window when he entered the door. In this, as in all other phases of life, unselfishness is the truest and best service of self.

The man who takes best care of his wife finds in that very act, the best refuge from the stinging cares of his own business. The wife ought always to feel the load lifted off her shoulders when husband crosses the threshold in the evening. But she does not always. Sometimes it even settles down upon her shoulders heavier than before. What say you, gentlemen?—Christian Union.

A ROYAL ADVENTURE.

Maximillian Joseph, the late King of Bavaria, was one summer day sitting in plain civil costume in the garden of his palace at Tegernsee. The heat was indeed great, and it was so very quiet in the garden that the king fell asleep over the book he was reading. He laid it down beside him on the bench and continued to slumber. When he awoke he thought he would drive away his drowsiness by taking a walk. The road, which took him farther and farther away from the garden, brought him at last to the meadow which extended on both sides from the shores of the beautiful lake near which the palace stood.

Here the king remembered his book which he had left lying on the bench in the park. If any one passed by they might take the volume, which, being rather a rare one, the king did not wish to lose. As he was unwilling to return the same way, he looked about for some one who would fetch the book to him, but far and wide he did not see a single human being, except a boy who was watching a flock of geese. The king went up to him and said: "Listen my boy, you can go and fetch me a book which I have left lying on the bench in the park, and you shall have a florin for your trouble."

The lad did not know the king, looked at the gentleman with much mistrust. A florin for so small a service seemed to him to be so large an offer as to be a hoax.

"I am not the simpleton you take me for," said he turning away.

"What makes you think that I take you for a simpleton?" asked the king, smiling, pleased with the open manner of the lad.

"Because you offer me a florin for such a trifling service," replied the boy; "money is not earned so easily. The people down there," he added, pointing his finger to the distant palace, "take us for fools, and I know you are one of them."

"Well, what if I am?" said the king. "Come, here's half a florin in advance! Now go and fetch me the book."

The boy's eyes sparkled when he held the money in his hand, for he did not get much more than that for looking after the geese for the whole year; but still he hesitated.

"Well," asked the king, "why don't you go?"

The boy pushed his cap on one side and scratched himself behind the ear.

"Yes," said he, "I will—but—I dare not. If the farmers heard that I left the geese they would dismiss me, then I should lose my daily bread."

"I'll watch them till you come back again."

"You," replied the boy, measuring the stranger from top to toe; "you don't look to me like one that could take care of geese. If they were to run away and get lost in these meadows I might have to pay more than I should earn in a year. Look at that fellow with a black head, who belongs to the court gardener; he is an awful old bird, a deserter, a good-for-nothing, like all people who have to do with a court; he would play you fine tricks while I was away. No, no, that would never do."

"But why should I not be able to keep these geese in order as well as I succeed in keeping men in order"? said the king.

"You?" replied the lad, again eying the monarch with a grin. "They must be fine fellows indeed! Ah! now I have it! You are a schoolmaster. I tell you boys are much easier managed than geese!"

"Possibly; but come, be quick. Will you fetch the book? I will answer for any mischief that may happen."

This decided the boy. He enjoined the king to keep a watchful eye over the goose he called the court gardener, a splendid gander, who might run off directly, leading the whole herd after him. Then the boy gave him the whip and ran off, but soon stood stiff and then came back again.

"What does this mean?" said the king to him.

"Crack it once!" ordered the boy.

The king tried it but it would not crack at all.

"That's just what I thought!" exclaimed the boy. "The schoolmaster thinks he can take care of geese, and cannot even crack a whip."

Then he took the whip out of the king's hand and showed him how to crack it. His majesty could scarcely repress his laughter He tried all he could to learn how to crack it, and when he had succeeded the boy enjoined him to use it at the right moment, and then ran away. Now, the king could laugh as much as he liked.

But, in fact, it seemed as if the geese observed at once that their young, but severe master no longer held the reins of government. The gander which the boy had pointed out as the court gardener raised his long neck, looked everywhere around him, uttered several "quack! quacks," and then all the geese raised their wings, screamed aloud, and before the king could look around rushed off to all points of the compass to the meadows around the lake.

The king cried out—it was no use; he wanted to crack the whip, but the whip gave out no sound; he ran to the right, he ran to the left—all of no use, however. Out of breath with laughing, he sat down on the trunk of a tree where the boy had been sitting, and let the geese go.

"The boy was really right," he said to himself, "that it is easier to govern a couple of millions of men than to manage a herd of geese. Only it was that scoundrel, the court gardener, who was the cause of all this mischief."

The boy, meanwhile, had found the book and came merrily back. But when he saw what had happened he let the book fall out of his hand.

"There we have it!" he exclaimed, sobbing anger and grief. "Didn't I say you understood nothing about it? Just look now! I can't collect them together by myself. Now you will have to help me!"

After the boy had instructed the king how he must lift up his arms, wave them about and shout aloud, he ran off to fetch the most distant of the strayed flock.

The king did all that was in his power, and after great exertions his whole flock was at last assembled again; then the boy began to scold the king for doing his duty so badly, concluding with the words: "Never in my life will I trust the whip out of my hands again. I wouldn't even entrust it to the king himself, if he tried to persuade me to leave the flock."

"You are right, my brave lad," said the king, bursting into a loud laugh, "he understands it no more than I do, for I am the king myself."

"You make a simpleton believe that, but not me!" he exclaimed. "Take your book and make haste and go home. To pretend that you are the king, after showing yourself so clumsy!"

"Don't be out of temper," said the good-natured king, as he offered him another florin; "I will pledge my word never again to take charge of geese."

The boy thanked him, thought for a little while, then said: "Whoever you are, you are a good gentleman, but don't deceive yourself that you are goose herder. Remember the proverb, 'Shoemaker, stick to your last.'"—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

TEMPERANCE.

IS NEBRASKA SAFE?

A gentleman called on us the other day, and introduced himself by saying, "I am from Nebraska, and called to tell you not to be discouraged about us there; we have great hopes of carrying the amendment." You may be sure the bearer of such a message was warmly welcomed and questioned regarding the foundations of his hopes. They are certainly strong; among them we note these points. Friends of the amendment are working more efficiently and hopefully with every passing week, while the forces of the enemy seem disorganized. The liquor men may be, and probably are, carrying on a still hunt, and it may prove more dangerous than their open war, but so far as appears on the surface, they are not accomplishing as much as they were earlier in the campaign.

The attitude of the press is a favorable factor; while in Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, scarcely any papers stood for the amendment, in Nebraska the majority of newspapers favor it. This is accounted for by the fact that there is no overshadowing city press to be bought up by the liquor power and overawe the country papers, or encourage them to sell out to the enemy. Of course the Omaha Bee has done its worst, but somehow it has overdone the matter and largely lost its prestige. It is literally true that

> "The Omaha Bee has lost its sting,
> And don't know where to find it.
> It buzzes around with an angry sound,
> But nobody now will mind it."

The expose of The Voice did very much to prevent the selling of newspaper influence to the liquor dealers. The Roggen-Rum-and-Rosewater ring came to grief in its attempts to "organize" bankers and other business men in favor of the saloon; it only suggested a way of working to the Prohibitionists who found no difficulty to "go it one better" along the same line, securing two business men opposed to the saloon to every one the ring marshaled in favor of it.

"Kansas has done us an immense amount of good," said our informant, "in furnishing solid facts and figures, showing that prohibition does prohibit. These facts coming from official sources have had immense influence in rebutting the assertions of the enemy."

Hon. S. B. Bradford, for two terms Attorney General of Kansas, has done yeoman service in Nebraska in nailing liquor lies. He met in debate Rosewater and Webster at the Corn Palace, and demolished their pettifogging in fine style. He demonstrated from official figures that Kansas had outstripped every State west of the Mississippi river during the past ten years. He left no vestige of the false charges trumped up and circulated by the Rosewater-Roggen-Rum combination. He showed that the liquor traffic is not only a cancer eating out the very heart of business, but that it breeds a horde of outlaws, assassins and criminals. He turned the points of his adversaries on them and carried the people with him in his masterly plea for the home.

How do you account for the failure of the Republican platform to take any stand for the amendment? We felt sure, from our knowledge of the good stuff many Nebraska Republicans are made of, that they would do so. The reply was that while it is undoubtedly true that many of the rank and file are in favor of the amendment, the leaders, who had the framing of the platform, were deterred by Iowa politicians from taking any stand for it. Great pressure was brought to bear on Nebraska Republicans by their brethren in Iowa who charge all Republican losses in that State to prohibition, and implore Nebraska not to jeopardize the success of the party by making temperance a party issue. On the other hand, the platform makers dared not take any stand against prohibition for fear of alienating the great body of temperance men within their ranks. This seems a reasonable explanation of the action which so puzzled us; but how are we to account for the failure of the People's party along the same line? That can hardly be laid at the door of Iowa Republicans.

How do your churches and ministers stand? was our next question, and his answer showed that in general the churches stand for the amendment. "The Methodist church," he said, "stands solid and is doing grand work; the same is true in great measure of the Congregationalist, Baptist, indeed all the churches; here and there are marked exceptions, as in the case of Dr. Duryea, the Dr. Crosby of Omaha," but in general, our informant thinks the church can be counted in favor of the amendment. Certainly this ought to be so, and if it is, success is assured, for church members hold the balance of power in Nebraska. If every church member votes for and works for the amendment, it will carry; if it is lost it will be lost through their apathy or opposition, and they must meet the result before the bar of God in that great day when, confronted by the souls that went down to destruction through the saloons their votes opened, all masks will be torn off and all party ties so strong here as to hold men from doing what they know is their duty, will be burnt up in the white heat of God's indignation. If ever Christians had a call to stand fast and solid for their principles, those of Nebraska have such a call to-day.—The Union Signal.

REV. DR. R. R. MEREDITH ON LICENSE.

Dr. Meredith had been preaching several weeks in the First Congregational Church, San Francisco, and it being proposed to give him a call to that church, Dr. McDonald asked him his views on the temperance question and its relationship to his church work. He answered:

"I am a temperance man, but I believe in high license as one of the best means to that end, and I, as such, support strongly the principles of high license.

"Secondly—I am not in favor of introducing temperance as a special work among the children of our Sabbath-school or into our immediate church work, believing, as I do, that the preaching of a true and earnest Gospel is the best method of accomplishing temperance.

"Thirdly—I am not in favor of Constitutional prohibition, as it could not be enforced in many of the large cities, such as New York, and if such a law should be passed there the courts would all be broken down and the law would not be effective, but it might be enforced in some places."

The membership were invited to be present after prayer meeting on Wednesday evening on important business. At this meeting a motion was made and seconded for a call to Dr. Meredith.

Mrs. Sara B. Cooper then read a prepared paper strongly advocating high license, approving Dr. Meredith's position and urging an immediate call to him. Dr. McDonald opposed calling any high license pastor or one opposed to the introduction of temperance work in the church and Sunday-school.

It appears that the matter was undecided on that occasion, but the Examiner adds that at a subsequent meeting Dr. Meredith was unanimously called to the pastorate.

As Dr. Meredith's position of licensing the dens of vice and keeping silence in the churches and Sunday-schools, on the question of temperance, met the unanimous approval of the largest Protestant congregation of San Francisco, it is not at all a matter of surprise that the Y. M. C. A. two years ago counted nearly 33,000 young men visiting the vile, viler and vilest resorts of iniquity on Sunday while only 1,900 young men attended any religious service.

No wonder that young men who look to such clergymen and churches as exponents and exhibits of Christianity, prefer the theatre and billiard saloon as a Sunday's enjoyment to the attractions of the churches.—California Voice.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The law of true greatness. Vs. 24–27. That the disciples could strive among themselves on the question of personal pre-eminence at such a time as this, shows how deeply rooted is this passion in human nature; and it also proves how little understanding they had as yet, of the terrible tragedy so soon to be consummated. Many of Christ's sayings, as in John 3, and 6: 53–56; were the symbolic expressions of some deep spiritual truth; and it is possible they may not have attached a literal meaning to his words, distinctly as he foretold to them his approaching death. Yet how many of us mistake the true meaning of revelation? To how many does the unseen and the eternal seem as real as the things of flesh and sense? How many of us do right without a thought of material reward? The disciples were after all very much like Christ's followers who are in the church to-day,—struggling, imperfect, and often, as in the present instance, showing a very un-Christ-like spirit. The love of power and supremacy on the part of individual members has always been the church's bane. It cropped out in the apostolic times, for this was the sin of Diotrophes. It was at the root of the Romish apostasy. No such thing as popes or cardinals would have been known if there had not been some who desired to be "lords over God's heritage," rather than simple shepherds of the flock. The 27th verse was probably spoken at the time he began to wash the disciples' feet, thus enforcing by his own example the true law of his kingdom—that he is greatest who serves most and best, and shrinks not from the humblest ministry.

2. A royal appointment. Vs. 28–30. But Christ never left his disciples to doubt the reality or the grandeur of the reward. They were to receive a kingdom as far surpassing their childish ideals as he himself surpassed in glory and power the petty potentates of earth. "Ye are they," etc. The words seem an outburst of grateful remembrance. The faithful eleven had kept fast by his side; had believed in him and confessed him, when repudiated by his own townspeople, rejected by the nation at large, and anathematized by their priestly rulers. Gratitude is one of the emotions that especially mark the noblest natures; and Christ as perfect man, was not less but more sensitive to such claims. There is not a trial endured or a sacrifice made for his sake that he will not tenderly remember and abundantly reward. How great then the incentive to serve such a master.

3. The disciples forewarned.—Vs. 31–37. It was not because Peter was the worst or the best of the disciples, that Satan singled him out for special attack, but because he recognized in him just those elements of character that would make him weak in the hour of temptation. There are several thoughts to be considered here: (1) Satan desires every follower of Christ. (2) He knows our weak points, even if we do not ourselves, and is ever seeking to take advantage of them. (3) Christ as our Intercessor prays for the weakest and humblest disciple. Ought not the thought, "Christ has prayed for me," be like a shield of adamant in the hour of sudden temptation? (4) Every experience of temptation successfully battled with not only sets our own feet on a higher plane but sets us apart to a sacred ministry,—that of strengthening others similarly tempted. Peter's knowledge of the power and guile of the adversary, so hardly gained, shows itself in his epistles. He could warn against "the devouring lion," who had himself felt its pangs. There can be no martyr courage where there is no martyr faith. Peter had a little. He had confessed Jesus before the twelve, and received his Master's blessing; but he was to find, like many another disciple, that confessing Christ before his friends is a different thing from confessing him before his enemies.

4. Closing admonitions. Vs. 35–37. The disciples had been sent out on the faith plan, taking with them not even the ordinary equipments of the traveler. Yet they had lacked nothing. Every want had been supplied. So will it be with every disciple to-day who relies on God to supply his daily need. But no set of rules will apply to the disciple in every circumstance and condition. Paul worked with his hands even while he wrote, "My God shall supply all your need through Christ Jesus;" and true faith does not preclude, but rather includes the taking of proper measures for our own sustenance and defence.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET.

The self-seeking spirit leads to Satan's kingdom, not to Christ's. It is the spirit of hell, not of heaven. It begets evils innumerable, and sorrows unspeakable. "Fling away ambition; by that sin angels fell." Aut Cæsar aut nullus, "to be first or nothing," leads to crimes and wars. It was Milton's Satan who said, "Better to reign in hell than serve in heaven." "How like a mounting devil in the heart rules the unreined ambition."

But distinguish between the strong desire to improve, to have large usefulness, to grow in holiness and love, and the desire to have more honor and power, or even to be better than others. To do the very best we can in everything is our duty.

Strengthening the brethren. (1). It is a great privilege to be able to strengthen and comfort others. (2). Only those can do it who have passed through similar experiences, and have gained the victory. So Jesus was "in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." (3). Doubtless this is one reason why God suffers his children to pass through so many trials and temptations. (4). Those who have come forth victorious from trials can aid others: (a) by showing that it is possible to go through not only safely, but with larger faith, nobler character, fuller blessings; (b) by pointing out the way of victory; (c) by sympathy; (d) by greater earnestness in praying for others, from a deeper realization of the dangers.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—At the opening of the American Board meeting last week in Minneapolis, the following statistical summary was given: Number of missionaries increased from 514 to 532; places opened for stated preaching, 1,069 to 1,402; new churches, 27; members received on confession, 4,554; aggregate churches, 387; members, 36,256; attendance at 122 high schools and colleges, 7,780; native pastors, 173. Amount contributed by mission churches for self-support, $117,000. There are 2,417 native and 533 American laborers employed; these include besides preachers, teachers, nurses, physicians, etc. Of the Americans 333 are women. The whole number of church members secured since the board began work eighty-one years ago is 114,953; number of pupils under instruction, 47,329. The report of the home department covered all the work in the United States, and consisted mostly of letters from local workers and superintendents. The donations during 1889–90 were $417,921.84, a gain in one year of $22,876.84. Of this, $169,206.37 came from three woman's boards, an increase of $16,450.86; legacies received, $199,802, a gain of $46,168.39. This, with the income of the general permanent fund and the income of special bequests, made the total amount of money available for the board $763,434.07. The expenditures were $762,946.98, leaving a balance of $487.09. It was stated that an income of a million a year is really needed. During the year there have been sent out 54 workers in the foreign fields, 15 as missionaries, 39 assistant missionaries—17 men and 37 women. Mention was made of the fact that Harvard College, which gave to the American Board one of the first missionaries—in 1812—but which during the seventy-seven years which followed added only three, has again come to the front, and this past year has given three missionaries to the foreign field.

—Some foreign papers are remarking two instances of conversion from Roman Catholicism to Protestantism. One of a cure reached through the agency of a few pages from a Lutheran catechism, the other of 500 persons in a Swiss village under an evangelical sermon.

—German Lutheran pastors of the General Synod, who have charge of congregations in California, have organized a German Lutheran Synod in that State. That makes the twenty-fourth body in connection with the General Synod.

—The committee on revision of the German Bible lately expressed their opinion that it will take twenty to thirty years before the new text has won favor with the people. The new text will introduce itself or not be introduced at all, said one of the revisers. There is no thought of compulsion.

—Rev. Richard D. Harlan, of the First Presbyterian church of New York, in formally resigning his pastorate lately, assigned as reasons that in view of dissatisfaction over the introduction of an organ; in view of the death of certain influential members, and in view of the general feeling unfavorable to the best church work, he had deemed it advisable for the church's interests to retire. He advised consolidation with the University Place Presbyterian church.

—The Missionary Herald reports the income of the American Board: The donations for the year now closed have reached the sum of $417,921.74, a gain over those of the preceding year of $22,876.84. The legacies for the year have amounted to $199,802.11, an advance of $46,148.39, making the total receipts from these sources $617,723.85, which is a gain for the year of $69,-025.23.

—A missionary movement, which was organized about one year ago, has taken the name of the "Arabian Mission." It is an independent mission, having no relation at present to any church organization. Its field is to be Arabia and the adjacent coast of Africa. The special qualification of each member of this mission is to have a thorough knowledge of the Arabic language. The leader in the movement is Prof. J. G. Lansing, of the theological seminary in New Brunswick. He is master of the Arabic language, having learned it in the house of his father, Dr. Lansing, missionary of the United Presbyterian church in Egypt.

—A letter has been received in London from Rev. E. C. Gordon, one of the English missionaries at Uganda, saying that the Protestants and Romanists combined their forces and defeated the Mohammedan party, and in February set Mwanga again on the throne, without any assistance of the British East Africa Company's expedition. Then Dr. Peters appeared and induced Mwanga to sign a treaty placing his country under German protection. The Romanist natives strongly favored this, but the Protestants, who are all converts of the English missionaries, opposed it. They said that Mwanga had already accepted the flag of the British East Africa Company. The Protestants, however, were compelled to yield, and Dr. Peters started for the coast with the signed treaty. Of course this treaty has been nullified by the Anglo-German agreement. The dissensions between the Protestant and Romanist parties are serious.

—Bishop Taylor makes an earnest appeal for missions in the Dark Continent. He asserts that the day is not far distant, if the Christian church rises to its present opportunity, when the success of saving the unconverted millions of Africa shall be assured beyond a peradventure. He adds: "The thirty-five mission stations I have already planted and manned in the midst of purely heathen tribes furnish but a specimen and an earnest of what can be done on a scale commensurate in breadth with the stupendous work to be done. With funds coming to hand as required, I can yet, in the afternoon of my day, by the will of my Father and Saviour, plant and develop to a self-supporting basis, a thousand stations in Africa before I quit the field; and no station shall be the ultimatum of its own existence, but a center of evangelizing light—a beacon amid the dark mountains and a base of evangelizing agency, extending the work in all directions."

—The Iowa Wesleyan Conference at its late meeting spoke with no uncertain sound against the lodge, thus: "Resolved, That we are in hearty accord with Section 25 of our Discipline concerning secret societies, and that we recognize the essential oneness of all such societies, and that in this unity we have the secret empire which is the combination of all hellish powers directed to the overthrow of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ on earth, and the perpetual enthronement of the Prince of Darkness as ruler of this world. The principles, aims and methods of this Satanic power affect every human interest. We deem it the first duty of every Christian reformer to seek the overthrow of this enemy of all righteousness, and patron and promoter of all villainy."

—Reports from Pittsburg indicate that the Presbyterian Committee, who are to report on a revision of the Confession of Faith, are working slowly and harmoniously. It is not believed, however, that they will complete their work at Pittsburg, for sessions will be held in some other city some time in mid-winter.

—The circulation of the Bible is the most wonderful thing in the literary history of this century. The British and Foreign Bible Society was organized in 1804, and the American Bible Society in 1816. The total receipts of the two societies have been $78,185,925, and they have issued 176,695,121 Bibles, Testaments, and separate books of the Scriptures. During the last year they have printed 5,288,320—an average of nearly 17,000 daily.

—The Baptist Missionary Magazine has a paragraph praising the progress among the churches upon the island of Formosa (off the Chinese coast), in connection with the Canada Presbyterian missions in the matter of self-support. Recently one church agreed to help another to the amount they were deficient in their pastor's salary, rather than have them receive it from the missionaries. This so shamed the latter church that they made up the amount themselves. And the Spirit of Missions (P. E.) calls attention to the rapid conquest of Christianity upon the same island as reported by the Rev. Dr. Mackay. He says: "Fourteen years ago I arrived here. All was dark around. Idolatry was rampant. The people were bitter toward any foreigner. There were no churches, no hospitals, no students, no friends. Year after year passed away rapidly; but of the persecutions, trials, woes; of the sleepless nights; of the traveling barefoot, drenched with wet; of the nights in ox-stables, damp huts, and filthy, small, dark rooms; of the days with students in wet grass, on the mountain tops, and by the seaside; of the visits in a savage country, among aborigines, you will never fully know. Fourteen years of toil have passed away. Yesterday 1,273 rejoiced in singing praises to the Lord God Almighty. There are now hospitals as well as churches, native clergymen as well as teachers, colleges as well as primary schools in Formosa, and the native Christians largely aid them."

BUSINESS.

THE FALL CAMPAIGN IS HERE!

Is eacb individual soldier in our Grand Army of Reform—a good G. A. R.—ready for tbe line of battle,—arms and accoutrements in order, knapsack and cartridge box well filled, and a sound body, a brave beart, and supreme faith above all else? Oh friends! be ready!

Our battle is to get something done in each neighborhood for Christ and bis church against the lodge. It is Babylon set over against Jerusalem as of old. The battle is not of a day or a year. It has been joined ever since men formed a confederacy against God on tbe plain of Babel. Jerusalem, the ancient city, fell before ber great foe and was destroyed and her people carried into captivity. But God reveals to us the spiritual city triumphing at last while the mystical Babylon, which embraces the lodge and every system of false worship, will be utterly destroyed. Read Isaiah 13 and 21 and Rev. 17 and 18. Can you have a lecture, a scboolhouse debate, a sermon, a collection. In many places these are possible.

But everywhere something can be done by getting subscribers for the Cynosure, and distributing tracts. These can generally go together. Pray for entbusiasm, for zeal, for wisdom, for access to men so tbat they may be persuaded to subscribe.

Remember that NEW subscribers can bave the paper until January 1st, 1892, for the yearly price of $1.50.

Remember tbat for 25 cts. tbe paper will be sent two months, or till the end of the year. How many trial subscribers can be sent in this week? Every one is so much done for Christ; so much gained for the cause. It may be only a little; but "step by step goes very far."

LODGE NOTES.

Mr. Medole, a prominent Odd-fellow of New York, says the meetings of our Grand Bodies should be held with open doors. The proceedings are published anyhow, and there is nothing done tbat need be in any way concealed and that the world should not know.

Now that tbe Sovereign Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows bas reversed the famous order of the Missouri Grand Lodge refusing admission to saloon-keepers, our temperance exchanges have dropped some of their lodge flattery. The decision held that the qualification of membership has been prescribed by the constitution of the Sovereign Grand Lodge, and tbat retroactive legislation was illegal and could not be enforced.

The most important changes in the constitution of the Order of Patriotic Sons of America, in session in Boston, last week, was the insertion of the word "white," making only white native-born citizens eligible for membership. The basis of representation was also changed and a new ritual was adopted, the principal changes being in the arrangement of the degrees. A new military degree was adopted, in wbich members will wear the regulation uniform of the United States army and carry rifles.

The Odd-fellow Sovereign Grand Lodge at Topeka, Kan., was addressed by Gov. Humphreys and Rev. Dr. McCabe in welcoming speeches. The order reports 634,000 members with 59,000 women in Rebekah lodges. There were 61,000 initiations last year, but the actual increase was less tban one-half that number, sbowing a large percentage of secession in the order. The aggregate revenue was $6,798,000, but the usual proportion of about one-third is all that is credited to "relief," or $2,725,000. The Rebekah lodges show even a smaller proportion; as, income, $171,000; relief, $24,000.

"The Grand Consistory of Iowa Ancient Accepted Scottish rite for the United States of America, their tributaries and dependencies," is the lofty title of the body wbich met in Council Bluffs, Iowa, recently. The order with the long title is familiarly known among Masonic circles as the "Cerneau" body, concerning which there has been so much discussion. There are in the State 700 or 800 of these so-called Cerneau Masons. Of the other body, known as the Southern Jurisdiction, there are between 100 and 200. The recent action of the Grand Lodge of Master Masons of Iowa has declared in favor of the latter, or Pike's Masonry.

The Knights of Labor and trade-unionists of New York and vicinity turned out in large numbers on a late Saturday evening, says the Witness. The heavens poured down rain upon the enthusiastic gathering and the orators of the evening poured broadsides into the New York Central railroad. The first speaker was H. O. Pentecost, formerly a Baptist clergyman, but now an exponent of the views of "Bob" Ingersoll. He is a wealthy man who has never had to earn his bread by the sweat of bis brow. Another speaker was Dr. McGlynn, who was trained for tbe Catholic priesthood, but has had a quarrel with the Pope, and is now (to use his own words) occupying the position of "jawsmith in the labor movement." The next speaker was Mr. Powderly, a lawyer by profession, and now receiving a handsome salary to pilot the Knights of Labor into and out of strikes. It seems to us that workingmen would show more wisdom in listening to the advice of the more thoughtful members of their own craft than in swarming round professional demagogues of the Pentecost-McGlynn-Powderly stamp. We thank Dr. McGlynn for the expression jawsmith, as it is very descriptive of himself and his associates. Mr. Powderly's sneering allusion to Mr. Depew, as a "mere after-dinner gusher," and Pentecost's slurs on Washington and Gen. Grant, were not as funny as their authors think, and may help to sicken the masses of "jawsmith" orators.

SCROFULA

Is that impurity of the blood which produces unsightly lumps or swellings in the neck; which causes running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or "humors;" which, fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. It is the most ancient of all diseases, and very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. If you suffer from serofula, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, my little boy, three years old, being a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. We all took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and all have been cured of the serofula. My little boy is entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. Atherton, Passaic City, N. J.

EFFECTS OF MENTAL OVERWORK.

Some interesting, though not novel, observations on the symptoms of mental fatigue were discussed at a recent meeting of the Anthropological Society. The result of these investigations goes to prove that weariness of mind, the result of work, like other forms of exhaustion, is recognizable under the two different though related aspects of irritability and of incapacity. Further careful inquiry into the same subject would probably show that here as elsewhere, the former of these conditions is introductory to the latter, and is the natural sequel of that stage of apparently successful overaction which is seen when an organ still fully capable is unduly stimulated. The observations referred to were culled from a series of reports by school teachers, and included details of their own sensations, as well as of the children under their care. The signs of mental irritability were apparent in sleeplessness, and nervous laughter; of fatigue, in sleeplessness and incapacity for task work. Lolling, yawning and a languid manner told that the will was flagging. Headache suggested overstrain in study, combined with defective ventilation, and perhaps a too sparing diet; while some curious facts bearing on the causation of color-blindness and somnambulism were also noted. Thus, in one case the blue-color perception was for a time obliterated, and the sufferer from this defect found herself painting ivy leaves a bright orange color; while another student, having retired to rest on the eve of an examination, awoke at his desk to find that he had been busily engaged in drawing humorous cartoons relating to a former conversation. Here we have an instance of cerebral irritation due to overwork, which suggests a somewhat close connection between dreaming and somnambulism, and affords a clue to the physiology of the latter condition. Overwork, both mental and bodily, is at once the most general and the least regarded form of illness to which we are liable in the present age. Do what we may, it is next to impossible to escape from it: but there is, at all events, a certain satisfaction in being able to recognize its features. We must not forget, however, that it is also to a considerable extent a preventable evil. Its treatment in individual cases requires chiefly that due attention be paid to the two great essentials of timely rest and wholesome diet. Work, however irksome, may, it is generally allowed, be undertaken on a very liberal scale, if only it is not too continuous, but is broken by timely and adequate intervals of rest. The value of a plain and liberal dietary is hardly less, and we may take it as a maxim for the time that, so long as appetite and sleep are unimpaired, there is no dangerous degree of overwork, and, conversely, that a failure in either of these respects should be regarded as a warning signal, to which attention should be paid by relieving the strain of exertion.—Lancet.

Like most garments and most carpets, everything in life has a right side and a wrong side. You can take any joy, and, by turning it around, find troubles on the other side; or you may take the greatest trouble, and, by turning it around, find joy on the other side. The gloomiest mountain never casts a shadow on both sides at once, nor does the greatest of life's calamities.

"Not all is gold that glitters" is a true saying; it is equally true that not all is sarsaparilla that is so labeled. If you would be sure of the genuine article, ask for Ayer's Sarsaparilla and take no other. Health is too precious to be trifled with.

The itching of the scalp, falling of the hair, resulting in baldness, are often caused by dandruff, which may be cured by using Hall's Hair Renewer.

REMARKABLE OFFER!

Nearly everyone is familiar with the name, but it has been estimated that only one in every two hundred and eighty persons in the United States is fortunate enough to have access to the valuable information contained within the covers of the grandest work ever written by mortal man,

Webster's
UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words, we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent.

Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface.

In addition to the 100,000 words it contains a portrait of the author, together with his biography and a valuable table of 12,000 synonymous words.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and seventy-five cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

FARM NOTES.

IMPORTANCE OF TESTING COWS.

A very striking instance of the difference in cows, where to an ordinary observer they would appear to have about the same value as dairy animals, was given by Director Collier, of the New York agricultural experiment station, in his address before the Holstein Friesian association, at its fifth annual meeting. As related by the doctor two cows, both beautiful animals and recently in milk, were tested for dairy results at the Geneva station.

At auction it is believed one would not have brought $5 more than the other. These cows stood side by side in their stalls, receiving the same good care and the same food in the same quanties; but one gave, in a week's trial, 55.4 per cent more milk and 44.8 per cent more butter than did the other. Upon a second trial, with a change of ration, the one gave 65.6 per cent more milk and 72.1 per cent more butter than the other, and upon a third trial one gave 73.9 per cent more milk and 66.7 per cent more butter than did the other.

Upon a fourth trial the one gave 71.8 per cent more milk and 94 per cent more butter, and finally, upon the fifth and last trial, the one gave 64.2 per cent more milk and 74.5 per cent more butter. The average of the five tests shows that one gave 66.2 per cent more milk and 68.4 per cent more butter than did the other.

With such a well attested case of disparity between animals where it would scarcely be suspected, dairymen and farmers cannot be too careful in testing the individuals of their herds.

USES FOR A TEN-FOOT ROD.

Among the things which are found convenient in every farmer's workshop is a ten-foot pole, made thus: A piece of wood, 1¼ inches square and 10 feet long, is nicely smoothed with the plane and then marked as follows: One side has a mark every three feet to indicate yards, another side is marked every two feet, the third side is marked every foot, while the fourth side has feet, inches and half inches, the pocket rule furnishing the smaller subdivisions of an inch. This measure will be found useful in many places. For instance, when a small building is being started stakes are set in the ground at each corner. The proper angle of the sills may be found by measuring 8 feet on one and 6 feet on the other. Bring them together until the ten-foot pole just reaches both marks, and a right angle is the result. Again, the proper length for a post to support a low roof is quickly measured with such a pole. If a corn crib is being built, 6 feet wide at the bottom, 7 at the top and 9 feet high, the proper length of the various scantling is readily measured off. Many other uses will be suggested when this simple implement is at hand.—American Agriculturist.

—Yes, if the farmer could just get a crop, he ought to be happy; everything he buys is so cheap! And he doesn't pay any tariff on them either—the tariff is not a tax, you know. And just see how corn has gone up! and wheat up! Both are at such a grand price; but some way it didn't go up until the farmer had not a bushel to sell. The speculators bought his crop for 15 cents, and sell it back to him for 50. Oh happy, happy farmer! but he always lets the speculator get the best of him.—New Era.

—It is high time that the farmer was given a show in legislation. Heretofore corporations and political strategy have taken the meat and the bones were thrown to the farmers. Organizations, north and south, are causing politicians to open their eyes very wide. Both the old parties are hastening to assure the grangers of their entire good will—but farmers are not fools.—Elgin News (Rep.).

—The true test of civilization is not the census, nor the size of cities, nor the crops, but the kind of men that the country turns out.—Emerson.

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure Bilious and Nervous Ills

The Voice

Is easily injured—the slightest irritation of the throat or larynx at once affecting its tone, flexibility, or power. All efforts to sing or speak in public, under such conditions, become not only painful but dangerous, and should be strictly avoided until every symptom is removed. To effect a speedy cure no other medicine is equal to

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

The best of anodynes, this preparation rapidly soothes irritation, strengthens the delicate organs of speech, and restores the voice to its tone and power. No singer or public speaker should be without it. Lydia Thompson, the famous actress, certifies: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has been of very great service to me. It improves and strengthens the voice, and is always effective for the cure of colds and coughs."

"Upon several occasions I have suffered from colds, causing hoarseness and entire loss of voice. In my profession of an auctioneer any affection of the voice or throat is a serious matter, but at each attack, I have been relieved by a few doses of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. This remedy, with ordinary care, has worked such a that I have suffered very little inconvenience. I have also used it in my family, with excellent results, in coughs, colds, &c."—Wm. H. Quartly, Mimlaton, Australia.

"In the spring of 1853, at Portsmouth, Va., I was prostrated by a severe attack of typhoid pneumonia. My physicians exhausted their remedies, and for one year I was not able to even articulate a word. By the advice of Dr. Shaw I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and to my surprise and great joy, in less than one month I could converse easily, in a natural tone of voice. I continued to improve and have become since a well man. I have often recommended the Pectoral, and have never known it to fail."—George R. Lawrence, Valparaiso, Ind.

The capital will be about $5,000,000, but no prospectus will be issued, or stock offered to the public. The change is made partly because of the increasing age of the three brothers forming the firm.

A lamp exploded in the fourth-floor hallway of the Putnam European hotel at 163 and 165 Adams street Sunday morning at 2 o'clock. The ignited oil was thrown in every direction, and immediately the frail pine partitions separating the apartments were in a blaze. Ten persons were sleeping on the fourth floor. Some escaped down the stairway, others groped their way to the fire-escape at the front of the building. One man was burned to death in his bed. Two more were suffocated in the hallway and were taken out of the building burned almost beyond recognition. One woman, crazed and frenzied with excitement, leaped to the stone pavement below and was terribly and fatally mangled.

The census dispute is catching—every politician has a word for or against Mr. Porter. The New York city government has had a recount made by the police, resulting in the increase of over a hundred thousand to the population of the city. While some are berating the government and demanding a new census entire, others stand by the party and the report. But in Nebraska a most alarming case is being unearthed. The census of Omaha and Lincoln have probably been fraudulently increased to help the liquorites count the State against prohibition next month. About 30,000 were thus added to the population of Omaha. A full exposure of this infamous swindle is given in the Omaha Leader and other papers favoring the prohibitory law. We need a "force" bill for the North.

One of the most unwavering newspaper apologists for the McKinley tariff prohibition act informs its readers that the Italian government on account of that measure will not be represented at the world's fair in 1893. In another issue it reports that large numbers of operatives will be discharged from the woollen factories of Germany. The press of every party in that empire eagerly discusses the work of our Congress and the question of a European tariff campaign against America is advocated. In republican France the agitation over the new tariff law is increasing and the wildest ideas as to the scope and effect of the law are prevalent. The whole of France is in a condition of extreme irritation and apprehension, as reflected by the newspapers. Some of the wiser heads, however, hold that France, unassisted by other countries, can open the gates of the American Chinese wall by profiting by the word "reciprocity," which figures in the new law.

The sincerity of the Mormons in giving up polygamy has been everywhere questioned. Governor Thomas early said it meant submission but not obedience to the laws. Later he sends word to the Independent that the manifesto "comes with a force of a new revelation, and whatever doubt may have existed as to its purpose and effect as first sent out, they now seemed to be removed. The Gentiles rejoice that the contest begun so many years ago against polygamy has finally triumphed; for they believe that never again will polygamy flourish on American soil. This is the most important event that has occurred in the Mormon church in years, and it is believed it will result in greatly advancing the material interests and the prosperity of the Territory." Senator Hoar of Massachusetts says the action of the Mormons was no surprise to him. It is an event made necessary by the progress of the world. Whatever the purpose of it, he does not think that Utah will not be admitted to Statehood till Congress shall be assured that the "twin relic" has been banished forever.

As we feared, the courts are beginning to make inoperative as far as possible the late action of Congress on the "original package" saloon business. The United States District court of Kansas, and the Superior court at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, gave decisions last Friday which practically render the prohibitory laws of both those States ineffectual. The view of the court is that the decision of the Supreme Court at Washington rendered the State laws void so far as this peculiar part of the infamous saloon business was concerned. It was as if there were no law. Therefore the act of Congress can have no result until the State legislatures act, if they ever do. The devil seems to have much to do with that evil judgment of our Supreme court; but, God helping us, even his wrath against man may be turned to good, if it shall arouse the honest temperance men of the nation to see the situation fairly. Nothing is plainer than that this is a national question and must be settled as such. Let that conviction once be settled in the minds of good men, who now give their influence indirectly for the saloon, and the quibbles of courts will be quickly brushed out of the way.

A most remarkable exhibition of Jesuitism has just transpired at Cleveland. The editor of the Catholic Knight had given offense to Bishop Gilmour, who in return ordered a boycott of the paper, and took the power to absolve the rash editor into his own hand. The paper retorted by publishing a private letter of Gilmour's to Archbishop Elder of Cincinnati, written in terms of undoubted sincerity and private friendship. The letter severely criticised the Pope and his counselors, and was almost rebellious to tone. It was written over a year and a half ago, in March, 1889. No sooner did it appear, than the cornered Bishop published a card acknowledging the letter as genuine, and explaining how it became public. He closes by officially withdrawing "every word in said letter of apparent disrespect to Rome, and every word that could be construed as a doubt of Rome." We have seen few more marked examples of Jesuitical duplicity. The letter to the Archbishop was written long ago, and is manifestly an honest expression of the writer. He did nothing since March 1889, to show that he did not feel toward Rome as therein expressed. But as soon as the world finds out his sentiments he professes to withdraw them, without reference to his past or present honesty of purpose in his condemnation of the Romish See.

A local paper reports a "cobweb sociable" held by a large and influential church in one of our interior towns, which has twice given up a pastor to be a missionary secretary. The account of this new idea shows it to be a boyish conceit whose only object is to promote glee by a ridiculous game. A church which can do no better than this for its young people, and in addition provide them a "Christmas" fair, has much to learn yet of the riches of God's grace. No scheme of boisterous worldly amusements can do else than produce spiritual impoverishment. Mr. Spurgeon recently remarked on this matter of so-called church amusements that "The Christian church of the present day has played the harlot beyond any church of any age. There are no amusements too vile for her. Her pastors have filled a theatre of late, and have set their mark, by their clamors, on the labors of play-actors. To this we have come, at last, to which we never came before—no, not in Rome's darkest hour. And if you do not love Christ enough to be indignant about it, the Lord have mercy upon you."

THE WHIRLWIND OF THE LORD.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

"And it shall be that when thou shalt hear a sound of going in the tops of the Mulberry trees, that then thou shalt go out to battle, for God is gone before thee."—1 Chron. 14: 15.

The voice of the Lord Almighty
Sweeps o'er us where we stand,
And the sound of a grand uprising
Is heard throughout the land;
The same God reigns whose praise was sung
On Zion's heights adored,
And the winds have borne his blast abroad,—
The whirlwind of the Lord!

The harvest white awaits us,
We who have heard his call,
We who are still led on by one
Whose sceptre cannot fall:
We know his hills are ever bright,
And sing, nor question why:
"We're marching through Immanuel's ground
To fairer worlds on high."

Sweep on, O crusade banner!
We know the hearts are brave
Who bear thy glorious folds along
O'er mountain, hill and wave:
Nor pain, nor death, nor any foe
Can quench that mighty Word
That leads thy conquering armies on,—
The whirlwind of the Lord.

O mighty Lord of Gideon!
Be with us once again,
As when of old Sennacherib's host
Lay dead on battle plain;
Like the sound heard in the forest trees
By Judah's hosts adored,
So sweep the land with mighty breath,
O whirlwind of the Lord!

COLLEGE FRATERNITIES: THEIR INFLUENCE AND CONTROL.

BY REV. J. T. M'FARLAND, D. D., PRESIDENT OF IOWA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY.

[Address at the National Educational Convention, St. Paul.]

When at quite a late date I saw from the published program that I had been assigned the task of opening this discussion, it occurred to me that I would like to know more fully what the status of the fraternities in the colleges is; what the judgment of college men is concerning their influence, and what methods are followed in the administrative control of them. To this end I sent out a circular of inquiry to the college presidents of the country, soliciting answers to the following questions:

1. What, if any, fraternities are organized in your institution?

2. Are fraternities prohibited in your institution?

3. If fraternities have been abolished in your school, state by what method and with what success.

4. What, in your judgment, is the influence of fraternities on scholarship in your school?

5. What is your observation as to the moral influence of fraternities?

6. Have you found the fraternities to be helps or hindrances in matters of discipline?

7. Have you adopted any rules for the control of fraternities? If so, state the substance of them.

8. What suggestions would you make as to principles and methods for the regulation of fraternities, if any special control is desirable?

9. On the whole, balancing their good and evil effects, do you regard the existence of fraternities in your institution an advantage or disadvantage?

I had received replies to these questions, before leaving home, from one hundred and thirty institutions; which, considering the lateness of the date at which I sent out the circular, the fact that it fell on a time when the colleges generally had closed and many of the presidents were away from home, together with the almost irresistible gravitation which circulars with long lists of questions have toward the waste basket, is a very fair return.

I will not attempt to present any detailed digest of the answers which I have received to these questions. A summary of results on the principal points, together with the quotation of a few individual opinions and suggestions, will be sufficient.

Of the one hundred and thirty colleges replying to my inquiries, thirty-three report that they have no fraternities, but that they are not prohibited, and express no opinion concerning them; twenty-one have none, do not formally prohibit, but express unfavorable opinions of the fraternities; twenty have them, but consider them a disadvantage; twenty-seven have them and consider them an advantage; one has none, but expresses a desire for their organization. Summarizing simply with reference to the favorable or unfavorable estimate of the fraternities, not taking account of the 33 that do not have them, 85 report as opposed to them, while 28 regard them with favor. It thus appears that, comparing the testimony for and against, the proportion is three to one against.

The complaints against the fraternities specify that they produce clannishness; that they give rise to unnatural divisions among the students; that they interfere with the work of the literary societies; that they add bitterness to college politics; that they are occasions of burdensome expense to their members; that they encourage extravagance and dissipation; that they are organized upon a social rather than a scholastic basis; that they are frequently places of refuge and rocks of defense for evil doers; that they absorb time and energy that the student should give to his regular work; that they tend to cause students to regard college as a place of amusement rather than of work; and that on account of the unnatural factions which they create and the strife and bitterness which they engender, they seriously interfere with the moral and religious growth of the students.

A few quotations from the responses which I am permitted to use will show the character of this adverse judgment.

The president of Adrian College says:

"I see no advantage that justifies the expenditure of time and means. The danger of their being perverted to a bad use is always great."

The president of Wake Forest College says:

"They destroy the very valuable literary societies, stratify the social life on artificial lines rather than by natural affinities, provoke unfriendly rivalries, and tend to dissipation."

The president of Trinity College of Hartford, Conn., says:

"The influence of clique overbalances the benefit of association; they substitute the standard of party for moral considerations."

The president of Brown University says:

"If they were not here I would use my influence against their establishment. Several of the fraternities are a positive help: but if you permit these you must the others, and a few are of such a character as to be an evil. The system with us has perhaps a slight preponderance of good as compared with no societies at all; but a large preponderance of evil as compared with the old debating societies."

Without naming the sources, I add the following expressions: "Artificial associations, become organic on the principle of secrecy, corrupt good morals." "They engender strife and immoral intrigues." "They engender a spirit of strife, and in cases known, students have degenerated as soon as they joined them." "They are an evil, only evil, and that continually."

Of the institutions reporting favorably for the fraternities, I do not find many specific points of advantage mentioned, but for the most part a general, and in some cases a reserved, favorable expression. Of the advantages suggested, however, are the following: The cultivation of college spirit; a stimulus to scholarship as a condition of membership in them; their social pleasures and benefits and the post-graduate bonds which they establish; a general inspiration to honest work and manly conduct in the case of societies that take in only the best men; and in some cases a direct or indirect help in matters of discipline.

With regard to the methods pursued by those institutions that prohibit them, in some cases they are excluded by provision of charter; in some they have been abolished by the trustees or by the faculty; in others they are kept out by the moral influence and advice of the faculty. In a few cases a pledge not to join a secret society is a condition of entrance; and in the case of the University of Illinois, a double pledge is required to be signed by the student, one on his entrance that he will not connect himself with a secret society, and another at his graduation or dismissal, that during the time he has been in the institution he has not been connected with such society. All schools reporting that fraternities had been abolished testify that the abolition has been made effective.

It seems to me very evident that the conditions affecting favorably or unfavorably the estimate of fraternities vary widely in different institutions; and that their character and influence differ in the same institution at different times. And I have no doubt that their good and evil effects are determined often, or at least are made more apparent, by the kind of institution in which they exist. Probably their evil effects are less observable if not less in fact in the larger institutions than in the smaller. The difficulties are certainly much more complicated in those institutions in which the collegiate and preparatory departments exist in intimate association. It also seems probable that in the older institutions of the East the fraternities are conducted more on scholastic and less on social principles than in the younger institutions of the West. And it is undoubtedly true that the moral influence of the societies is more unfavorably marked in the church institutions, where more specific attention is given to, and interest is taken in, the religious life of the student. It is therefore impossible to draw any conclusions that will be true of all fraternities in all schools. We cannot generalize on the basis of the experience of a particular school at a given time. We must judge of the system as a whole in the light of the general and long continued experience of schools. The matter should not be dealt with, either as to the recognition, exclusion or abolition of fraternities, with reference to local and temporary conditions; but broadly, on the principles of college statesmanship, with reference to the total average results of experience concerning them. If on the whole the verdict of experience is that secret societies constitute a disturbing and hurtful element in college life, those institutions in which they do not exist would do wisely to prohibit them; and those institutions which have them should either abolish them or carefully guard against the evils incident to the system.

With regard to the control of the fraternities I have not received many suggestions. The majority would apparently recommend the "let-alone theory," or a mere general control that does not recognize the fraternities as such, but deals with the student purely in his personal capacity. The attempt to exercise any specific control over them leads close to, if not into, that undesirable and dangerous region of interference with the personal liberty of the student that most faculties, for conscientious and prudential reasons, desire to avoid. Some have suggested that members of the faculty should be at least honorary members of the fraternities and have access to their meetings; that all their pledges and purposes should be approved as consistent with the interests of the school; that the times and places of holding their meetings should be known to the authorities of the school, and that indulgence in expensive banquets, the employment of an undue amount of time, and every form of hurtful dissipation, should be as far as possible prohibited.

The president of Hillsdale College writes:

"We appeal to their self-respect and try to have them make their fraternities such that the best persons will want to be members of them."

The president of Emory College says:

"No fraternity can exist here without consent of the college authorities. We use them for good by appealing to fraternity pride."

Another writes:

"Better let them go their way. If the faculty attempts control or direction of them, they in turn will attempt control and direction of the school. They should be treated by the faculty as government treats Masonic and other fraternities."

Personally I am convinced, however, that in most instances this "let-alone" principle will not be the wisest. The authorities of a school cannot afford to surrender the governmental control of its students either in their personal or organized capacity. The fraternities are ordinarily too important and positive factors to be ignored. It may be, as in the case described in the returns to my questions, that some schools are in the happy state of the man of such perfect stomach that he is not conscious that he has any stomach at all; but the disciplinary digestion of most institutions is not so absolutely reliable that they can afford to be indifferent as to what they swallow.

If I may be permitted to refer to the institution with which I am connected, I would say that we have had fraternities for many years. At present we are experimenting with certain regulative methods, the result of which so far, while they do not remove or even lessen many of the evils incident to the system, are fairly satisfactory. The requirements which we have prescribed are chiefly these: We forbid preparatory students being received into the fraternities. We required that a student shall have been in attendance in the school for a year, or in a school of equal grade, before his reception into a fraternity, and that for the year preceding his reception he shall have made an average grade in a full set of studies, of not less than 85 per cent. We require the name of every candidate for membership in a fraternity, prior to his reception, to be submitted to the secretary of the faculty, from whom a certificate must be obtained certifying that the candidate is eligible to membership under our rules before he can be initiated. We also require each fraternity to keep us supplied with a full register of its membership and officers.

The good results which we observe from these regulations are several. It prevents the societies from taking in men too soon after they enter school, before the men themselves have had adequate opportunity to consider the relative merits of the societies, or the desirability of fraternity membership in general; and before the societies have had opportunity to consider the character and abilities of the new men. It acts as a stimulus to scholarship on a great many students. Those who aspire to membership in the fraternities know they must make the required grade; and those who are indifferent as to the matter of joining a fraternity, still do not want to fall below the standard of eligibility. In this way it forces the societies up to a scholastic basis, and gives them a respectability and legitimate pride which they would not otherwise have.

THE COMMON SCHOOLS AND SCHOOLS NOT COMMON.

BY F. W. PARKER.

The greatest value and virtue of the common school, in comparison with all schools not common, consists in the community life there awakened and nourished, which makes up the indispensable foundation of a republican form of government. In order to vote justly, and to make good laws, and to exercise the right influence, one must have an abiding sense of the character and needs of the people of whom he forms an integer, and for whom he lives. In order to have a government "of the people, for the people, and by the people," the sovereign unit of the people, the voter, must understand the needs of the whole people.

Thus the social factor in a republican education stands above all other factors in importance. No course of study, however elaborate, no methods or teachers, can instruct pupils in their duties towards all without the presence in the school of a representative of all grades of society and of all phases of religious and political thought. The common school is the practice and preparation school of the nation; it is the government in embryo; the infant republic. Virtue becomes living and active only by the constant necessity of, and exercise in, virtuous acts. The poor are not "always with" a high class private school. Human sympathy, which springs from a mutual understanding, lies at the foundation of our government, and the garden and nursery of that sympathy and understanding is the common school.

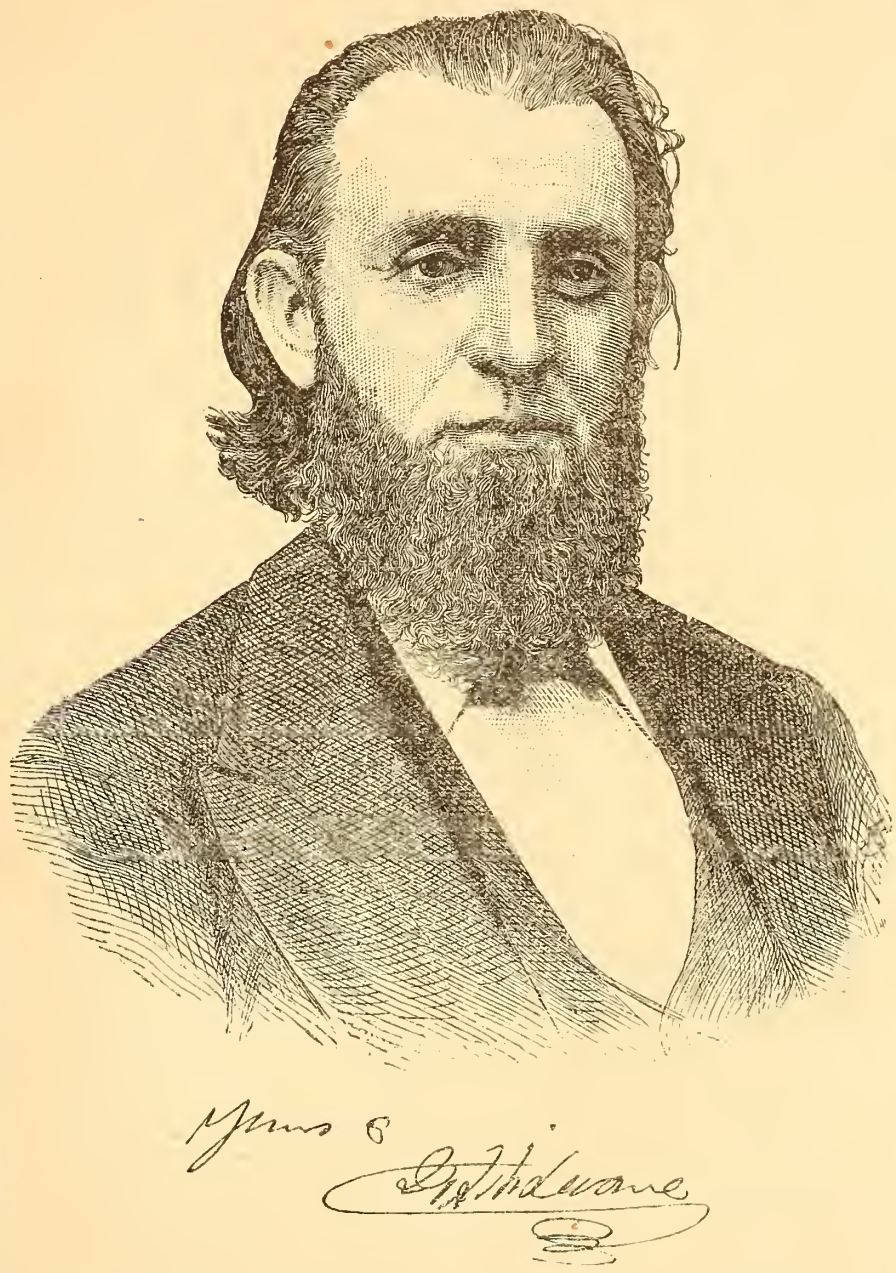
The real danger of all schools not common, below the college, both parochial and private, is the segregation of one class of children in a community. The product of such segregation is lack of true sympathy — misunderstanding. Class-building has for its inevitable sequence, dislike, hate and bigoted intolerance, all of which make a true democratic feeling impossible. There is no danger whatever in the religion per se taught in any private school, the sole danger springs from the lack of active or applied religion, which consists in the doctrine taught by the Master, "Little children love one another." Convincing proofs of the effects of segregation of classes are not far to seek—they fill the world's history.

Indeed, the segregation of classes in the same community has always been the one tremendous problem of all absolute monarchies and centralized governments in the preservation of their power. So long as civilized opinion allowed it, the simple and cheap plan of keeping the so-called "lower classes" in utter ignorance produced the desired result. When Germany, the first nation to lead, gave her people public education, the difficulty became far greater. It was overcome, however, by class schools, making free a kind of pauper school called the "Volks Shule." Thus the stratified condition of the people, upon which alone a monarchy can rest, was perpetuated. Common schools would change any monarchy on earth into a republic in two generations. A people can be intellectually educated by segregation out of all sympathy for each other.

Moral or true education is only possible in schools where the demands are constant for the exercise of every virtue known to the highest Christian or ethical life. Our forefathers, with a divine prescience, laid the foundations of the one system of schools that can in any way overcome the bigotry, intolerance and hate that have filled human life with misery, and made history the record of one long, bloody struggle.



No one can cross the line into Canada without feeling the sharpest change in the moral atmosphere. The air is filled with intense sectarian hate, which looks and feels like war. Canada has excellent public schools, but they are not common. In a fatal hour the government divided the school fund between Catholics and Protestants, and the result is that the one thing that children learn with all their hearts is to hate the other side. It is readily seen that a republic of Canada is impossible just so long as this sad state of things continues. Either the means of democratic growth, the conditions for a strong central power, or internecine war must come.

To any student of progress, our own nation furnishes countless examples of the effects of common schools. A few of the most evident may be given.

Fifty years ago, a believer in woman's suffrage was looked upon as the rankest kind of a fanatic, an abolitionist not excepted. To-day there are few intelligent men in this great nation who do not believe that women have as much genuine right to vote as men. There are exceptions, to be sure, and it would be interesting to know whether such men ever attended mixed schools. What has wrought this wonderful change? Sitting and working side by side, boys and girls, in the common schools! All the eloquence of an Anthony, a Stanton or a Willard cannot equal the immense practical value of community school life, where the equality of the sexes is practically argued day by day and week by week.

PROF. J. R. W. SLOANE, D. D.

The eminent instructor in the Reformed Presbyterian church whose portrait we give this week in our series of American educators, died at his home in Pittsburgh, in March, 1886, after many years service as professor in the Theological Seminary at Allegheny. He was, in the words of a cotemporary, "among the foremost men of all the churches in Christian character, in ripened scholarship, in mental discipline and force, in ministerial and professorial power. He was a man, too, who had the courage of his convictions, and made himself felt in opposing prevailing evils and supporting all the great reform movements of the times." He was not only active in the anti-slavery reform, breasting mobs and standing by the side of Wendell Phillips in his eloquent and powerful appeals, against the great national evil of that day, but when slavery had fallen, he gave freely of his strength and influence to the temperance and Anti-masonic reforms. He condemned secret societies of every name and phase with a thrilling eloquence and power on the rostrum of great national conventions. Especially was he heard with deepest interest when he plead for the national recognition of God and his Word in our national life and Constitution. As an example to the young men of America few more noble could be named.

The last sentence of his last Baccalaureate address given by Horace Mann a few days before his death: "I beseech you to treasure up in your hearts these my parting words: Be ashamed to die until you have won some victory for humanity."

That ill-considered [original package] decision gave a tremendous impetus to the prohibition nuisance, though on its face it seemed to be a victory of the liquor interest over the prohibition laws of Iowa. It made a national issue out of the fanatical agitation of the Prohibitionists and gave a dignity and importance to the third party which it did not have before.—Wine and Spirit Gazette.

MORMONISM CRUMBLING.

Under this title Rev. S. E. Wishard wrote two years ago in the Interior. It is interesting reading in the light of present events, and especially of the decision of Judge Anderson's court last fall. But we fear the decay is in appearance only, and that the Mormons will be just as firmly wedded to their superstitions, falsehoods and priest rule as ever. The Interior article reads:

The end of Mormonism is being reached by very slow approaches. It is only by measuring the changes by the passing years that its failing power is distinctly marked. It could scarcely be expected that the debauchery of the Mormon mind, the revolting pollution of the Mormon home, could be washed out in the brief period since mission work has been attempted and tolerated here.

A system that has grown up from the bogs of lust, that has fastened itself upon the lives of the people, that has fed and strengthened itself by the very passions that generate it, will not step down and out at the first bidding of decency and virtue. The Satanic cunning that has clothed the most odious vice in the garb of a religion, that has entrenched itself in the credulity and fanaticism of its blind votaries, will not relax its hold at the first incoming of Gospel light. Whatever may be said of the perseverance of the saints, the Gospel workers in Utah have had some bitter experience of the perseverance of the devil. He will hold what he has gained until his last cartridge has been exhausted; and, when his ammunition is out, he has a way of kicking up a dust and making the rank and file of his army believe that he is just about to achieve a great victory.

Yet, let it be written again that Mormonism is on the wane. There are manifest signs of the decay of this system, once so powerful in this territory. It has lost its tyrannical grip upon the people. A few years ago only one man in this territory dared to think. The first president of the church alone had the right to think. And he did the thinking for every man, woman and child in the church. To think contrary to this high dignitary was a crime to be expiated by the death of the thinker. Husbands and wives were compelled to accept and wear the galling yoke of polygamy, because they dare not think for themselves. All this is past. Thousands and thousands now not only do not receive the hated doctrine, but they oppose it more and more openly. The tyranny of the church is no longer exercised in controlling the trade of the people. They purchase their goods, especially in the larger towns, where they can get the best bargains. Many of the Mormons disobey the authority of the church and send their children to our schools, because they are the best. The atmosphere of liberty is different in different localities, but it is extending everywhere. Though the church still announces from the pulpit that the people are expected to vote the ecclesiastical ticket in politics, the bishop has been driven from the polls. It is but recently that he stood at the polling place and handed the ticket, folded and ready to deposit, to the sovereign American citizen. That humble gentleman deposited his vote frequently without looking at it. This tyranny is not so overriding as formerly. Though the political machinery of the church is in better repair than some other parts of it, still it is beginning to work loosely. There are several loose screws and there is considerable rattle, indicating the disorganized condition of the machine. Already six school districts in this city have passed into the hands of the loyal Americans. Of course the immigration from the States is telling on the city. The bones of Brigham Young would have turned in his grave at such an event, had not the Mormons pinned him down with those four iron rods and the double stone slabs riveted upon him. The inevitable is coming here and elsewhere. For the Mormons have ceased "to vote the men, women and mules," as in the good old days of the church. While the leaders bluster and anathematize the people, the light streams in and the mists are gradually lifted. The presence of our ministers and teachers is working a silent revolution. It was a favorite doctrine of the old blind leaders of the blind, that the Christian churches were all apostate. Hence our ministers and teachers were represented as the worst class of people. From the tabernacles and ward meeting houses, the Mormons were warned against these Gentiles. The vilest slanders were industriously circulated against teachers and ministers. But these Christian workers have lived consistently. They have given exhibitions of disinterested kindness and have built homes in which conjugal affection and purity have witnessed the superiority of the Christian home, and the slanders of the church officials are reacting against those who originated them.

THE BIBLE IN SCHOOLS.

ADDRESS TO THE CHICAGO BOARD OF EDUCATION, ADOPTED BY THE CHICAGO WOMAN'S MORAL EDUCATIONAL UNION, OCTOBER 15TH, 1890.

Gentlemen and Ladies:—Since you have learned through the public press that we are endeavoring to aid you in your great work of making the Public Schools of Chicago what they should be, it occurs to us that it may afford you some satisfaction to receive a statement regarding the improvements which we desire to have made in the Public Schools; the reasons, or some of the reasons, why we desire them; and what we are doing to promote our object.

We who have indirectly been the cause, in some small degree, of putting the care of our Public Schools upon you hereby assure you of our cordial sympathy and invoke for you wisdom, strength and grace for your needs. We thank you for the zeal and efficiency with which you pursue your self-denying labors and congratulate you upon your success.

It is not our mission to criticise the officers and teachers who work under your appointment. Rather, we would rejoice with them in the measure of excellence that our schools have attained under their management, and express our gratitude for their faithfulness to our children. Probably no one feels their deficiencies more keenly than they do themselves and we presume that they are unwearied in their efforts to remove them. Our work we believe will quietly make their tasks easier, being helpful alike to teachers and pupils.

We wish to have portions of the Holy Bible read at the opening exercises of all departments of the Public Schools of Chicago.

We believe that the intelligence, the patriotism and all that tends to the permanent prosperity of Chicago from generation to generation, will join us in our desire, or would do so if the subject were viewed from the standpoint of exalted patriotism illuminated by past history. You are perhaps already acquainted with some of the reasons for our views, as many of them do not originate with us, but it will be helpful to you to receive them in this form. For them we are indebted to business men and women, teachers, lawyers, editors, theologians, statesmen, rulers and historians. The sources from which they come, together with their intrinsic value, give them a force which we trust will assure a ready compliance with our wishes.

As residents of the great Northwest, we turn to that venerable ordinance of 1787, that charter of Liberty which is forever to remain unalterable unless by common consent, and find Article III.

"Religion, morality and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education, shall forever be encouraged."

If the language had been, "Reading, writing and arithmetic being necessary," etc., there would be no difficulty in determining the force and intent of the words. Will the candid fail to appreciate its force and obligations as it stands?

When a portion of the Scriptures is read in the Public School, if the children make inquiries and the teachers refer them to parents, guardians, or religious instructors for explanations, all consciences would be fairly treated; and if an extreme case might arise in which some conscience demurred at the exercise, still we affirm: "The state demands that the religious and moral sense of the people be educated, such instruction being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, and there can be no right of conscience superior to this prerogative, if it is not abused. It could as well be insisted that capital punishment or the appropriation of private property to public uses are always unlawful. Some conscientious and excellent men are aggrieved by both."

Our officers must have our essential provisions for good citizenship enforced, otherwise the "Ship of State" will be driven hither and thither in mid-ocean without chart or course or direction, subject to the control of whoever chooses to mutiny against the existing state of affairs.

For fifteen years our privilege as regards religious instruction in the Public Schools has been withheld and a ghostly agnosticism has terrorized all sects alike. In seeking to escape from bigoted sectarianism the schools have fallen into the grasp of illiberal liberalism. Exclusion of all religious instruction is the propagation of irreligion as certainly as darkness reigns where the sun never shines. A recent paper enumerates a list of revolting crimes and vices that are rampant in one of our inland cities, closing with the statement, "Our prominent citizens are absorbed in money making," the legitimate result of intense secularism. If because of habitually removing moral and religious knowledge from the course of instruction in our schools, children exercise their thoughts and understandings exclusively on lower matters, when they become adults their actions will largely be prompted by ignorance, prejudice and passion. The right of the state to give secular instruction cannot be admitted if its right to give religious instruction is denied. They must stand or fall together.

It is a political maxim that the welfare of a republic is dependent upon the virtue and intelligence of its citizens. Intelligence without virtue is a positive evil. It is true especially in large cities that many Public School children have no religious instruction at home. No church or sect can go out into the highways and byways and force children into its Sabbath-school or house of worship; hence it is the imperative duty of the Public School to impart to them that instruction without which they are becoming an army of adepts in vice and villainy, against whom the virtuous have no adequate protection. The religion, morality and knowledge that they are to be taught is the religion, morality and knowledge essential to the welfare of the state and the happiness of mankind, not to the salvation of souls. Teaching the latter is the province of the church. The state must teach the existence of Diety (even our currency proclaims "In God we trust") and equal rights of citizens in order to keep society in poise while churches and other agencies operate for the eternal interests of its members. The Bible is, as the inspired word of God, essential to religion, and religion is essential to good government. It is therefore the duty of every good citizen, as a citizen, whether he be or be not a believer in Christianity, to give the Bible in the Public Schools his and her hearty support.

Geo. Washington, our truest example of pure patriotism, who saw our country's needs in peace and in war, in poverty and in wealth, in public and in private life, wrote: "Of all dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the attribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens."

Again he said: "Let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion." And again: "Reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principles."

All the colonies in this country showed an unmistakably Christian spirit in their constitutions at the opening of the revolutionary war. This spirit came from the Bible. It is the Book which is the basis of the religion and morality of this nation. Should not this standard of the nation's religion and morals be cherished more carefully than the standard of our coins or of our weights and measures? But for the fact that the Bible is, and always has been, recognized in our national life as the Book of revealed truth, this Republic would never have had an existence.

Should one say, "The Bible is a sectarian book," we ask, "To what sect does it belong?" Should he say, "It means a union of church and state," we ask, "Of what church with the state?" The Jew, the Catholic, the Protestant all profess to find the fundamental portions of their creed in the Bible, and the state in finding there the elements of its stability still remains as distinct from each of them as they are distinct from one another.

Another might urge, "I go farther than you do; simply reading few verses of Scripture is not enough." Perhaps some additional ethical instruction may be added, but do not draw from the argument that there is not enough religious instruction in the schools, the conclusion that therefore there should be none at all.

Another might urge that the Catholics do not like it. Perhaps not, but they like irreligion less. An excellent authority among the Roman Catholics wrote years ago, "To us, godless schools are still less acceptable than sectarian schools, and we object less to the reading of King James' version, even in the schools, than we do to the exclusion of all religious instruction."

But again it is urged the Holy Bible may be abused and misused. So may bread and meat and water and fire. Shall these agencies be banished for this reason? No, take the wisest precautions possible to prevent abuse and then make the most of God's gifts to us. But sadder still should a member of your honorable Board say, I cannot vote to place the Bible in the schools.

Is there any help in such a dilemma? One of your own number has found it for us. He once said, "If I were appointed to put the Bible into a Public School I could not do it."

"I SHOULD HAVE TO LET SOME OTHER MAN."

What a kind, what a happy thought! If one or more of you cannot help let the others do it. Do not hinder this movement. In the name of our grand old charter of religious liberty; in the name of the needs of our young city; in the name of the thousands upon thousands of petitioners who are affectionately appealing to you, do not in any event put yourselves in opposition to this measure, but VOTE FOR IT IF YOU CAN.

Let the thousands of educators from all parts of the world who will come to our city at the time of the great Columbian Fair, find here a system of Public Schools wisely performing their threefold duty of instructing the children in "Religion, morality and knowledge."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 15, 1890.

The world has produced few men whose loss has been more sincerely mourned by the Christian people of his native land than the late Gen. Clinton B. Fisk. The Metropolitan church is one of the largest in Washington, and it was crowded to the doors, and even then many were turned away unable to get standing room, on Sabbath afternoon. All of these good men and women were intent upon hearing the eulogies of Gen. Fisk, for the delivery of which the meeting was held. The services were very appropriately opened with the beautiful hymn, "Lead, kindly Light." Mrs. M. E. Cohen then read a selection from the Twenty-third Psalm, and a beautiful and touching prayer was made by Miss Lizzie Kessler. The principal speaker, Rev. G. H. Corey, was for a long period a close personal friend of Gen. Fisk, and his talk was extremely interesting, dealing as it did with incidents that had occurred under the speaker's personal observation. "His religious life," said Dr. Corey, "was admirable in every respect, and moreover his social life was equally beautiful. By the innate quality of his whole nature he was a generous and genial man, and wonderful in the depth and richness of his nature. He was identified with all the enterprises of his church. He never became too great to be in his place twice on Sunday. Many men who believe themselves to be Christians, content themselves with but one visit to the house of God on the Sabbath; but he was not one of these. I have been frequently with him at prayer meeting, and he never attained that high degree which restrains many men from pouring out their souls to God. I will venture to say that he was a very unique man, and looking over the ranks of the churchmen of the day, I cannot see any one that can replace him. You cannot find another man so pure, so devout, and withal, so simple." There were a number of other speakers, and eulogies were read of Gen. Fisk as "A Temperance Man," as "The Negro's Friend," as the "Indian's Benefactor," and as "The Woman's Champion." The services were closed by the spirited singing of "My Country, 'tis of Thee," by the entire audience.

The flags of Washington are at half-mast on account of the death of two prominent men—Justice Miller, of the U. S. Supreme Court, and ex-Secretary of War Belknap. The first was stricken with paralysis last Friday and lingered until Monday night, and the latter was found dead in his bed Monday morning. It is a co-incidence that the two men were from the same city—Keokuk, Iowa.

The sixteenth annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the District of Columbia met this morning, and will continue in session for two days. There are about seventy-five delegates in attendance, representing the twenty auxiliary organizations in this city and immediate vicinity. Among the subjects to be discussed are "Cigarette Smoking," "Gospel Temperance and Prohibition," "Woman's Ballot," "Social Purity," "Our Creed and White Ribbon," "Scientific Temperance Instruction," "Mother's Meetings," "Washington Saloons," and "Liquors by the Drink." It is understood that in the discussion of the last subject the Union will pay its respects to the U. S. Senate for having neglected to pass Senator Blair's resolution prohibiting the sale of liquor by the drink in the Senate restaurant. To-night Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, of temperance fame, is to address the Union and the public, which is certain to take advantage of the cordial invitation extended, to the extent of the seating capacity of the church. Among the well-known people residing elsewhere present, I noticed Mrs. M. L. Wells, who enjoys the proud distinction of having been the originator of the W. C. T. U. It is a distinction that the greatest living man or woman would be justified in being proud of, when one considers the good the Union has accomplished.

Mr. Harrison returned to the White House early yesterday morning, and he and Mrs. Harrison at once paid a visit of condolence to the widow of the late Justice Miller. It was a kind and thoughtful thing to do, and it was done within an hour after Mr. Harrison reached the city from his Western trip. The funeral of Justice Miller will take place to-morrow in the chamber of the Supreme Court. *

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE BEST OF NEWS FROM MEMPHIS.

BRO. COUNTEE'S TESTIMONY AGAINST THE LODGE BEARS FRUIT AT HOME AND IN ENGLAND.

MEMPHIS, Tenn.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have just finished reading a number of back issues, and as time is allotted me, I feel that I owe you a letter, if not several of them; and perhaps some of your readers will not mind hearing how good God is and has been to me and mine.

I left this city July 15 last, weary and worn with the trials and labors and discouragements of life. No one can have any idea how many discouragements come into the life work of one among my people, especially when your efforts are being made along the line of righteousness. I have told you in days past that not only the spiritual but the temporal affairs of our colored churches are mostly in the hands of our pastors. The people look to us to carry everything along. I left here in July and the Lord had arranged for me to visit the shores of England. I was so completely worn down that I hardly felt able to make the trip, and when the ticket for the voyage had been placed in my hand, I almost declined going; but I went, and God blessed me in going, and also in returning. I have been home now only three weeks, and I am by God's grace having spiritual showers of blessings.

I spent twenty-one days in England and spoke nearly every night while there. God gave me boldness even there to declare the whole counsel of God against worldly iniquity. While holding service in Liverpool, the third night after my arrival, I was in company with a minister who had charge of the mission, and who requested me in the presence of the entire congregation to cut my sermon short, as he was chaplain of the lodge and must needs go there to open the same. I arose and God gave me utterance to raise my voice there in that land of strangers against the folly of a man trying to serve two masters. I arose and used these words as my text, "Where art thou." I said first of all that I was glad that I had long since learned what God meant when he declared that "No man could serve two masters;" and I was sorry that this pastor, in the midst of so encouraging a field, and so promising a meeting, should feel obliged to shorten the service in order that he might do the behest of his other master. These words came out in a kind of fear-and-trembling manner; but I could not help but speak for the Saviour; and it bore fruit. One brother said, "We will excuse our brother, Pastor ——, and let this colored brother carry on the meeting." He went away, but the meeting went on.

At ten o'clock next morning I went to the pastor's house. He met me very cordially, and invited me into his room. We were soon joined by his wife who, came into the room saying, "Mr. Countee, you have done me admirable service." I was not long in learning that our dear brother pastor had returned home, and so thoroughly was he convicted by my talk of the previous night that he had sat up nearly all night, and to the joy of his wife had decided against the lodge.

I rejoiced in my soul as this dear brother related his experience of the past night, and wound up by saying, "Now I'm free; there is no condemnation. I am glad that I live in the atmosphere of heaven, and that I am ready at all times and in all places to speak out against lodge iniquity."

During my stay in England I was cordially received by all of the family of God. I almost imagined that I did not care to come home to America. My twenty-one days was a source of great pleasure and comfort. The ocean voyage was especially helpful, and I know not what to render to my God for his great and wonderful remembrance of me. I tried to raise some means while there for our school work, and considering my short stay I was very successful.

Our school opened last Monday the 6th inst. with over 200 in attendance; the prospect for the present session is very encouraging indeed. I am glad that the work of the Lord is prospering in our Tabernacle Baptist church. I have been home only two weeks, and already I have had the pleasure of baptizing seven persons into the fellowship of the family of Christ, and one of them was a 33° Mason; and last night we received one into our fellowship who left us in December, 1885, to follow the lodge. He was an Odd-fellow, a Mason, a Knight of Wise Men, an Immaculate, a Knight of Pythias, and Knight of Cyrus. Our congregation last night numbered over 1,200; and this brother was the man who headed the bill of injunction filed in the chancery court against the church, to compel us to take back the 200 who were excluded from our body at that time, because they would not renounce the Baal of the lodge.

I would be glad to write you more. Our war is continuing. No ARMISTICE in this war. I am very busy day and night. My trip away has caused an accumulation of work, and I rejoice greatly in the Lord for all his benefits to me. We are trying to keep the altar fires burning.

Yours for the right, R. N. COUNTEE.

MOUNTAIN EXPERIENCES IN KENTUCKY.

ORLANDO, Ky., Oct. 14, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—There is perhaps no part of our country where the Gospel is more truly appreciated than by the mountain people of this part of the State. Surely there is nowhere greater destitution. I recently spent a week in a series of special meetings where we had services twice a day; and notwithstanding the heavy rains and dark nights, we had fair congregations and a deep interest. I have recently made several visits to Rockcastle county. It was in this county that forty years ago Bro. Fee was repeatedly mobbed. Now, so far as he is known, he is universally respected.

I am now on one of those trips, which has had some pleasant experiences and some that were not such. I left Berea at 4 P. M. on Saturday, to go by a freight train fifteen miles, but when we reached within two and one-half miles of the station where I was to leave the train, the engine was disabled. After waiting till nearly dark we were informed that it might be an hour before we could go on. It was three and one-half miles to my appointment. There were five trestles to cross, and three tunnels to go through, one of which was 500 feet, and one over 1,000 feet. I hurried on, and as it was starlight I got along very well until I came to the first tunnel, which I found extremely dark, but I groped my way through. Before I came to the long tunnel I obtained a torch which I hoped would light me through. But my matches would not burn, and there was nothing left but to grope my way through. The distance seemed interminable. My progress was very slow, for I was alternately stumbling over the rails on the right side or the left, and was in constant fear of the coming train.

At last I could see a gleam of light from the other end, and was soon out into the starlight. I reached the station and found a good brother who took me on his mule with himself and a sack of flour, and I was carried over a dangerous road as only the most faithful and patient of brutes could have done. It was late, but I found a fair congregation awaiting me and preached to them from Luke 20: 25.

Next morning three of us were in saddle and rode four miles over the mountain by a road so steep and rough that it would be impassable to any but these mountain horses. A carriage road is impossible. In a narrow but pleasant valley, we found a comfortable log school-house where a young lady, educated at Berea, was teaching and had gathered a good Sabbath-school; after which a fair congregation paid most respectful attention to the preaching. A ride up the mountain brought us to a pleasant home, where we found some excellent Christian people.

A long ride over the mountain brought us to "Macedonia" school-house, where I am accustomed to preach, and found at night a full and most attentive congregation, who requested me to remain and preach to-night.

It must not be inferred that this people are all saints. Within a brief period seven men have been killed in Jackson county—five on the day of the election. A short time since a man was assassinated in his door-yard, and the sheriff and posse that undertook to arrest the murderer were resisted by a strong party; one man was shot on each side and the arrest was not made. In this way the mountain feuds begin. Nothing but the Gospel of peace can cure the evil condition of society.

THE STRENGTH OF THE REFORMER AND THE REFORM.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I have been reading Stanley's book, "In Darkest Africa." There is a passage in the "Prefatory Letter" which indicates the source of the strength of that great soul.

"Constrained at the darkest hour to humbly confess that without God's help I was helpless, I vowed a vow in the forest solitudes that I would confess his aid before men. A silence as of death was round about me; it was midnight; I was weakened by illness, prostrated with fatigue, and worn with anxiety for my white and black companions, whose fate was a mystery. In this physical and mental distress I besought God to give me back my people. Nine hours later we were exulting with a rapturous joy. In full view of all was the crimson flag with the crescent, and beneath its waving folds was the long-lost rear column."

This is a striking picture of the position of a reformer of to-day. So often we stand alone in the midst of a world of opposition and indifference. In our helplessness we can only cry to God for assistance. If he does not help, our work is a hopeless failure. But he will.

Last Sabbath I assisted Rev. D. J. Shaw, of the Reformed Presbyterian church of Bloomington, Ind., at his communion. This is an old congregation, tried and true in the service of Christ. Rev. J. J. McClurkin, of Clarksburg, Pa., was present. In his table address he referred to the fact that fifty-five years ago, when a student in the Indiana State University, he had communed with this people. Bro. Shaw has ministered here thirty years. His sermon on Friday was a gem for force and beauty, but more especially in its searching qualities. We had a rich feast.

WAUKESHA, Wis., Oct. 13.—The past four days have been spent in Waukesha, Wis., assisting Rev. Isaiah Faris, of the Reformed Presbyterian church, at his communion. He has been pastor here for twelve years. He is a strong advocate of the anti-secret principles. It is refreshing to come in contact with a man who adheres to the old faith and does not change with every wind of doctrine. On Friday evening I lectured in the town hall of Vernon. Arrangements were made for this by Bro. Faris. A fine audience turned out, and the close attention given indicated the deep interest the people took in this reform movement.

Dr. Ingersoll, a brother of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, and a sharer with him in his skepticism, lives near here. He has attended meetings held by Dr. McAllister and Secretaries Gault and Wylie and spoken against National Reform. But he has little influence. He is a very lazy man. His sons are trifling and worthless. No one cares to be ranked as his follower. Let the Spirit of God leave a man and very soon he discovers his wretched condition outwardly.

A celebrated painter searched for a fit subject to paint as the symbol of virtue. At last he found a babe in its mother's arms. This he took. Then he searched many years for a fit subject to paint as the symbol of vice. At last he found a criminal in his cell. On every feature was written crime. This he took as the best type of vice. He was astonished to find that he had painted the same face both times. When that great artist was painting that celebrated picture, "The Last Supper," he searched long for a countenance that he might paint as the face of Christ. At last he saw a chorister in a cathedral in Milan whose face was just what he had been searching for. He painted his as the face of our Lord. Then he searched for years for a face that would represent Judas. This painting took most of his life. At last he met a tramp in Rome. On his face were all the marks of vice and crime. He asked him to come to his study. So he painted his as the face of Judas. Great was his surprise when he learned that he had painted the same face that he had used to represent Christ. When God goes out of the soul Satan comes in. The man falls from the highest pinnacle of glory to the deepest depths of degradation.

On Sabbath evening I preached in the Waukesha Congregational church, Rev. Dr. Camp, pastor. The Presbyterian congregation joined in this service. President Rankin, of Carroll College, and a number of his students were present. The theme was "Sabbath Observance." This is needed in Waukesha. This is a famous summer resort. The visitors bring many bad habits. Sabbath afternoon concerts have been introduced, and the Sabbath is badly desecrated. Dr. Everett, of the Baptist church, says the churches there must unite and make war on those Sunday concerts, demanding unconditional surrender. He hailed with delight our coming to sound a needed note of warning.

The Waukesha Springs are celebrated. Thousands come here from the South and East. If the morals of the place were as pure and healthy as its springs and atmosphere, its reputation would be well founded. Bro. Martin, of Cincinnati, Bro. McKee, of Pittsburgh, and other Covenanters, have visited this place, and enjoyed Bro. Faris' preaching. J. M. Foster.

FROM SOUTHEASTERN NEBRASKA.

Humboldt, Neb., Oct. 9, 1890.

Dear Editor:—I am heartily glad to have word from you in reference to the best of causes, and, also, to know that so much effective work is being done in various ways, against the secret orders. I thank the Lord that I am able to respond to your call so far as to renew my yearly subscription to the dear Cynosure. It is a matter of deep regret that I cannot do so, to the full extent of your wish and the need, by a donation to the funds of the N. C. A., at least for the present. The Cynosure I feel in duty bound to take as a means of doing good to others who have the reading of it. I do wish to see the paper in our part of the State largely circulated. I have sought to accomplish this. But the plan I have for years been working upon is too slow. Quicker and larger results are needed and must be had by some means. I am not discouraged. Silent and private work is good far as it goes, but it don't go far enough. It has helped prepare the way somewhat for open and more aggressive action and I need not be ashamed of the little done. The idea is this. It is high time to stop mincing matters. Let the "bull be taken hold of by the horns," though somebody be hurt in the struggle. In other words, Freemasonry here needs public ventilation from time to time by conventions, etc., before any appreciable results can be expected. The world does not afford a better field than right here, or anywhere in Nebraska. The convention held here five years ago by Bros. Stoddard, Gault and Rufus Smith, stirred up things a good deal, but they soon quieted down, and have not been disturbed since, though the brethren promised to come again. I thought they would surely, or others would come in their stead. Had they have done so, the needed reform, under God, might have been by this time much advanced, and the Cynosure have had a general circulation. What I have done and am still trying to do, has been done against great odds every way. Just now a new obstacle to a successful canvass presents itself—the crop failure. Yet, something may be done, if the effort be made as I intend. Bro. Landon from Kansas, an earnest anti-secret worker, is now here, whose co-operation I hope to have. The thought of co-operation is inspiring.

One thing more. Recently, while at Du Bois, Pawnee county, twelve miles distant, I took occasion to call on Levi Wilsey, whom I had never seen, but had heard of as a leading member of the United Brethren church, and influential in the community as well. My call was entirely in the interest of the Cynosure and its cause. I found the good brother had been once a Mason, but had abandoned the lodge forever as an unfit place for a Christian. I could not wish for stronger or better views on the subject than he expressed. I also learned his church had adopted the rule of receiving into Christian fellowship Masons and other secretists. Under the rule some had already come in. To all this he is sternly opposed. I left with him a copy of the Cynosure and some kindred matter. I feel quite sure he will subscribe for it before long. He did so for the Home Guard for his wife. By the way, I have several names for that beginning of, I trust, a large paper for the benefit of womankind, in addition to some previously sent. Yours in hope for the cause. William C. Bissell.

YOKES THAT SHOULD BE BROKEN.

Crandon, Wis.

Brother Reformers:—There are many opinions as to the worst of all Satan's yokes. If you should hear Brother John G. Woolley on the Strong Drink yoke, you would say at once, that must be the worst. On hearing Brother M. N. Butler on Secret yokes, you would be compelled to admit that there are things worse, more sinful, connected with this yoke, than the former. As I have only time and room to mention one yoke more, I will say: If you are ever permitted to hear Brother C. C. Foote upon the Sect yoke, you all must come to my conclusion, "They are all the worst." The grand question is, how to break them.

Multitudes will tell you that these yokes cannot be broken. It is God's chosen work to lead his faithful workers on to complete victory, in breaking every Satanic yoke. Hear our God on this subject. Isa. 58:6: "Is not this the fast I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke!" This language we cannot help but understand. It explains itself. This verse clearly teaches: first, national,—yea, world-wide prohibition; second, the forsaking of every secret society; finally, a Christian union that binds the saints of the whole world together. Yours till the whole world is taken for God, Rufus Smith.

PITH AND POINT.

LODGE-HINDERED PROHIBITION.

The prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicants is pure and right and good. It is a fruit which the civilization of Christianity has a right to gather, and which honest, honorable, loyal American citizens should have a privilege of enjoying. More than eighteen hundred years ago "men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil," and it is as true now as then. When Prohibitionists show by their works in ignoring the secrecy question that they "love darkness rather than light" on that subject, it is no wonder we are prevented from gathering the fruit; because the lodge is the bulwark of the saloon. Darkness is an appropriate cover for the saloon or the rum fund in every shape. Prohibition does not need a cover on any subject. The more she can be brought into notice on every question the brighter she will shine. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." The rum traffic will use every means to perpetuate its existence; the more degrading a thing is the better use saloon men can make of it; consequently they plot in the secret lodges to defeat Prohibition. And if Prohibitionists ignore it, they will be obliged to reap what they sow.—Cyrus Smith.

THE LODGE CLAIMS TO BE INVULNERABLE.

The lodge has raised a small howl over our N. H. Convention, judging from the following which I clip from the secret society column of the Boston Daily Traveller:

The recent action of several ministers at the convention of the New Hampshire Christian Association, in denouncing secret societies—Odd fellows especially—is the subject of much comment among many New Hampshire brothers. Odd Fellowship can well stand the rebuffs of any antagonist. Its teachings and obligations follow closely in the line of true Christianity.—E. E. Flagg.

GOOD WORDS.

Please send the paper one year longer. I cannot well do without it. God bless the Cynosure and its helpers. Rev. Wm. Jarrett, Coffee Creek, Ark.

Can spare all other papers better than the Cynosure. Will try and get some subscribers.—J. McCleery, Inman, Neb.

May heaven's blessing rest on all faithful laborers in this cause of our Divine Master.—E. Thompson, Senecaville, O.

I enjoy reading the Cynosure, I do assure you.—Rev. W. A. Jackson, Ripley, O.

LITERATURE.

Scriptural Outlines, by Books and Themes. By William G. Carr. Pp. 262. Price 75 cts. F. H. Revell, Chicago.

If "of making books there is no end," it is most sure that books about the Book will never reach their limit. John Robinson's well-remembered declaration, that there is much "more light to break forth out of God's Word" is true. And so long as the light leaps out, men must be enlightened by it through the press. The most profitable of books are books about the Bible. Mr. Carr's work is a valuable aid to Bible students. It consists of two distinct portions: 1. The suggestive outlines of the various books with especial reference to their spiritual teachings. While a compiler of such outlines will find much ready for his purpose in the works of commentators, this work shows originality and excellent judgment in its sententions and suggestive comments upon the Scripture record. Sabbath-school teachers will find it especially valuable. 2. The Bible readings also show much care in their preparation and are superior to most such exercises that get into print for their suggestive arrangement. The Christian worker must learn to think for himself in preparing Bible reading, but these forms will greatly aid him to think profitably.

Honey from the Rock of Ages. By Rev. Albert Sims. Pp. 156. Price, paper, 25.

This is a companion volume to previous works by the same author, and is a collection of excellent articles on vital piety and Christian reform, some of which have for years been read in our religious papers, but which can be read again and again with profit. We notice among these "Jacob Schoonerhaven on Sanctification," "Selling Dead Horses" by H. L. Hastings of the Boston Christain," John Wesley on Congregational Singing, "Commercial Lying," "Scriptural Giving." Such literature is invaluable compared with the trash often placed in the hands of young Christians.

The Perfected Life.—This little booklet published by Fleming H. Revell, Chicago, is a gem of religious truth. The subject is sanctification, and how to attain it. One truth which at first seems somewhat startling, is stated thus: "There is such a thing in the evangelistic sense as winning the whole world and losing our own soul." And the equally important truth that the first consideration is "our own likeness to Christ!"

The 18th verse of the third chapter of 2 Cor., "We all, with unveiled face, reflecting in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory even as by the Lord, the Spirit," is taken as a key to true sactification. The practical lesson derived from it is, "Make Christ your most constant companion."

One of the important features of the coming volume of The Century Magazine will be a series of papers on "Tibet," written by a well-qualified and adventurous American traveler, Mr. W. Woodville Rockhill, formerly of the American Diplomatic Service, who has recently returned from a long and perilous journey through the unknown heart of Asia. For seven hundred miles he passed through a country where no white man had ever set foot, journeying, of course, in disguise. It is only within the last few years that the Chinese have been able to plant themselves in the country he traveled through, so hostile have the natives always shown themselves. It is said that in Tibet nearly every crime is punished by the imposition of a fine, and that murder is by no means an expensive luxury. This, of course, greatly increases the danger of travel in that remarkable land. The series will be fully illustrated.

The Messiah's Herald of Boston is making a rare offer to new subscribers, in the form of a beautiful copy of the great painting "Christ before Pilate." The picture is in all the colors or the original painting, and its original production cost many thousand dollars. The paper itself is ably edited, has many of our leading religious thinkers among its contributors, and is outspoken in all reforms. Its Sunday School Department presents the best Notes on the International Lesson published. While it ably advocates the pre-millennial coming of Christ, it is thoroughly evangelical in tone, and opposed to all materialism. It is sent for $1.50 per year, with picture, or two months on trial for 25 cents, without picture. Specimen copies may be obtained by addressing A. A. Fuller, Box 160, Boston, Mass.

Campanini, the famous tenor, has written a striking article on "How To Train the Voice" for The Ladies' Home Journal, and it will appear in the November number of that periodical.

Stanley's new book, "In Darkest Africa," appeared at the same time in eight different languages,—something unprecedented in the publishing of books.

THE PUBLISHER'S STORY.

The editor went down stairs to consult the publisher about some little matters relating to the paper. The publisher said: "Sit down, I have an interesting story to tell you, if you are not in a hurry." "Always in a hurry," was the answer, "but always want to hear a good story. Fire ahead!" Then the publisher crossed one leg over his other and said: "This story is founded on fact; indeed on a number of facts. It is about a man; a really good man; a friend of ours. You know him, but I won't tell his name." "Never mind," said the editor, "proceed with your narrative." And the publisher proceeded:

"My story is about a man who takes our paper. He went down as usual to the postoffice. It was the regular day for the arrival of his religious weekly. But there was no paper there. He went away from the window, lingered a little in the door-way, and then returned. 'Did the other copies of that paper come?' 'Yes, they did.' Do you know why my copy did not come with the rest?' 'No. I cannot imagine.' He slowly crawls out again with a feeling of personal wrong in being discriminated against. Whose fault is it? Perhaps the postmaster has overlooked it. Or some mail distributor along the route has thrown it aside. Or the mailer in his hurry has written the address indistinctly, or has overlooked his copy this week. Or may be it is intentional. Anyhow, it is a gross injustice for which the paper is probably to blame. 'Why don't they conduct their matters better. So much carelessness and indifference! They don't care whether the subscriber gets his paper or not.'

"He carries his unhappy humor all the way home. The first thing he says to his wife is this: 'Paper didn't come.' 'Why not?' 'How should I know? Some neglect. Children won't have anything to read Sabbath afternoon. Won't have anything to read myself. I wanted to send that paper to Sister Jane.'

" 'Say, John, have you paid up the subscription lately?'

" 'No! What has that to do with it?'

" 'Well, maybe they have stopped it.'

" 'Stopped it! They wouldn't dare to do that. Why, I have taken it right along for six years, and have never paid up since the first year.'

" 'Well, don't you suppose it costs something to get up that paper and pay the postage on it all these years? There are fifty-two copies a year.'

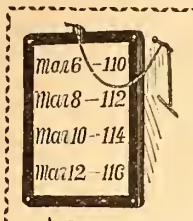
"Well, what of that? A paper ought to run itself. They are glad enough to have subscribers take their old sheet. If they have stopped it on that account, I'll never let it come into this house again.'

" 'Yes, but the editors and publishers have to make their living and pay a lot of hands. I heard the editor once say that it takes $15,000 a year to pay the bills.'

" 'Well! they haven't got any of my money for several years.'

" 'Yes, but don't we owe it to them! It is an honest debt, isn't it? You have got the worth of your money, haven't you? You know how we all miss it when it don't come. Here is sister looking for it now.' 'Father, did the paper come?'

" 'No! it didn't.'



" 'Well, John, it only costs four cents a week, postage paid, over four hundreds of miles. I think we ought to pay for it just as we do for our flour and other things we live on. You get awfully worked up when people don't pay you what they owe, and call them hard names. Now think of the golden rule yourself.'

" 'Well, wife, don't let's talk about it any more; it is a just debt, and I reckon they need their money to pay their bills for work, if they don't have anything left to live on themselves. I'll send it right on, the next time I go to town.'

"Neighbor driving by, halts at the gate and halloes. 'Neighbor, here is your paper; it got folded with mine somehow, and the postmaster passed it out. I did not see it until I went to look into it as I came out of town. Fine paper, that. Growing better all the time. Mighty cheap, too, considering the kind of talent they put on it. By the way, have you paid for it yet? I want to send off my subscription and thought that maybe we might send it off together.'

" 'All right, call in as you go to the office to-morrow; wife was just saying we had neglected it too long.'

"It is now three days later, and those subscriptions have come to hand. I tell you, [Anti-masons] are inherently honest people. Read that letter. Money just came in time to help pay the bill for paper. Then there are the compositors —they have to have it every week, for they live on their wages. And the press men are pressing us. Wish a lot more of our subscribers that have forgotten how much they might help us, would pony right up this week. They would, if they knew how much it would help. [Anti-masons] are the best people in he world." "A little slow sometimes," the editor suggested. "Well, maybe! But as sure as shot at the last. You can count on them every time. Let us go to lunch." Then they adjourned to their bread and milk.—Mid-Continent.

It has been truly said that half the world does not know how the other half lives. Comparatively few of us have perfect health, owing to the impure condition of our blood. But we rub along from day to day, with scarcely a thought, unless forced to our attention, of the thousands all about us who are suffering from scrofula, salt rheum and other serious blood disorders, and whose agonies can only be imagined. The marked success of Hood's Sarsaparilla for these troubles, as shown in our advertising columns frequently, certainly seems to justify urging the use of this excellent medicine by all who know that their blood is disordered. Every claim in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla is fully backed up by what the medicine has done and is still doing, and when its proprietors urge its merits and its use upon all who suffer from impure blood, in great or small degrees, they certainly mean to include you.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1890.

THE COLLEGE FRATERNITY DISCUSSION

receives this week a grand impetus in the publication of President McFarland's address before the National Educational Association at St. Paul. It must be regarded as forming a notable part of the history of the movement against the college secret societies. We are much indebted to the kindness of Dr. McFarland for the permission to use this address before it appears in print elsewhere, the publication of the proceedings of the St. Paul convention being somewhat delayed. It is significant that at this time the students of Northwestern University, near this city, are very warmly discussing this question. The control of a paper was the bone of contention between the secret society men and those opposed to such orders. The latter gained their case, but the lodge men next day rallied and with the aid of Miss Willard's Alpha Phi out-voted the others, who have thereupon begun a new paper, the University World. We expect to give next week the views of ex-President Julius H. Seelye of Amherst College, and of J. A. Porter, editor of the Hartford Evening Post, which will favor the fraternities. In connection with educational matters the contribution of Prof. Parker of the Englewood Normal School and the address to the Chicago School Board on the use of the Bible are valuable reading.

THE MORMONS.

These people are not understood. The mass of Christians and ministers in the United States never think of praying for Mormons in their pulpits or prayer meetings any more than they pray for devils for whom no Saviour has died. Yet more than 50,000 of Mormons now in the United States are from the Scandinavian countries, Denmark, Norway and Sweden. These all were Lutherans, almost to the last man and woman; and if the people of the United States were polled and impanneled to-day their verdict would be that the Scandinavians excell all other emigrants in honesty, industry and intelligence. Those now Mormons were educated and brought up as Lutherans; and the false priests of Mormonism did not gain these northern masses by preaching polygamy, but by preaching Christ. Eleven nationalities came over in one ship under Geo. Q. Cannon. They were all converted by arguments such as made Millerites, viz., that Christ would come in person, and they were preparing for his coming.

The writer has traveled one hundred miles in Utah twenty-six years ago; and, a few months since in Ogden and Salt Lake, Mormons appeared most sincere professors in Christ and the Bible. Though Mormonism was condemned, more hospitable treatment is seldom given. I have been mobbed and insulted as an Abolitionist, but never as an anti-Mormon.

WHAT, THEN, IS THE MATTER WITH MORMONS?

It is said their priests are crafty, corrupt and wicked; and of very many of them this is true. But no one can compare candidly the record, deportment and utterances of Wilford Woodruff with those of Alonzo H. Quint without adjudging the Mormon to be the superior man and Christian. And yet Dr. Quint figures as a leader in the Boston Congregationalist and the American Board. He has sworn thirty-two degrees of simple balderdash and horrid blasphemy; and in a late meeting of Congregational ministers, where Freemasonry was mentioned, he spoke from the chair, glorying in the fact that he was a Mason. And this without ever denying one word of Masonic revelations by such holy men as Finney, Bernard, Seth M. Gates (father of the Amherst College president), and thousands of others, the best men this world has ever seen. Yet these men were mistaken, or Dr. Quint is a cold, cunning blasphemer, who has drunk wine from a human skull, invoking double damnation on his soul if he does not conceal Masonic secrets. And if he will bring an action for libel against the Cynosure for these charges, we will prove them in open court by just such proof as hangs men. Dr. Storrs, the distinguished and very Christian president of the American Board, knows, or should know, these things to be true. We trust he will not die without objecting to the lodge, as did his honored father, Richard Storrs, of Braintree, Mass.

President Wilford Woodruff, though he admitted in court, before Judge Anderson, that he was a Mason, did not glory in it as did Dr. Quint lately in the Congregational building, Boston. And though every Mormon was a rebel in our late war, Woodruff never boasted, as Dr. Quint has in the Congregationalist, of favors received from a liquor-selling rebel, by giving him Masonic signs. And then compare any speech of Dr. Quint with President Woodruff's speech in the General Conference, Oct. 4th inst. These are extracts:

"I am pained to see the increase of crime in all its hideous and various shapes in my own and other nations. These things are noticed by heaven. If you want to know what is going to come to pass, read the revelations of St. John. They will be fulfilled."

"Our aim is eternal life. It will pay any man that ever breathed to keep the commandments of God and be virtuous and upright."

"I pray that you all may be faithful. If you are you will be satisfied when you get behind the vail. There are many to-day who would lay down their lives for the work of God, if it were necessary."

His speech, of course, sustains Mormonism, for he believes it.

But then, "the Mormons have established a false priesthood, who rule the people in God's name." This is true. And they are imposed on by false revelations and false miracles such as Christ said should come; and John in the Revelation says, "They are the spirits of devils working miracles, which go forth to the kings of the earth and of the whole world," Rev. 16: 14.

These devils began their revelations to Joseph Smith at Palmyra, N. Y., in 1830, and some years preceding; and the Mormons believed them. The same spirits began with the Fox family in Hydeville, Wayne Co., N. Y., and the consulters of these spirits are now numbered by thousands and hundreds of thousands. Judge Talmadge, Mrs. Gerrit Smith, with many of the first minds in the State, consulted, and so worshiped, these spirits. President Woodruff believes Joseph Smith has come to him and counselled him since his murder at Carthage, Ill., many times, as Saul believed the devil who personated Samuel. Mormons all consult and believe these "unclean spirits," and the wonder is they are no worse.

Then it is also true that they practice tyranny in the name and by revelation of God. There are now four hundred high priests in the Salt Lake stake of their Zion. Though Paul, whom they believe, shows clearly to the Hebrews that there are no priests since Christ, but counterfeits and usurpers; that Christ, whom the Jewish priests prefigured, offered himself, once for all, and is now in heaven interceding for us, and is our only Mediator and High Priest, while every one born of God is a priest and a king. Read carefully Hebrews chapters 5 to 8. Yet in the high priests' meeting, Salt Lake, Sept. 27, Bishop George Romney said: "The Lord will never permit the leaders of this church to teach this people anything but what will lead them to salvation!" That is, these Mormon priests are all infallible as popes. And we have heard high church Episcopalians claim, coolly, the same infallibility for themselves and their "valid ordinances." But the Constitution of the United States must be changed before we can disfranchise people for their stupid, unscriptural religious beliefs. But as Rome claims "temporal power," papists and Mormons may justly be required to disavow such temporal allegiance to other powers than the United States, before being admitted to citizenship.

Joseph Cook has shown that Masons and papists swear "secret, disloyal oaths." And while we do not object to these men voting and holding office without disavowing their illegal oaths, the Mormons must and will justly regard us as hypocrites and pretenders, while we refuse them Statehood.

We must regard polygamy as virtually given up. Chief Justice Lane of Utah declares that he must "take judicial notice" of President Wilford Woodruff's proclamation, and the vote of their General Conference that the laws of the United States against polygamy must be obeyed. And the Deseret Weekly contains some of the soundest, most Scriptural and ablest articles on Christian marriage and civil government we have seen for a long while.

The Mormon leaders are able men. They must, and doubtless do, see that while they allow polygamy, which Christ's law of marriage so clearly condemns and excludes, they cannot be a "church of Jesus Christ." "They twain," not they twenty or more, shall be one flesh. And as the nations of Christendom, all but heathen nations, forbid polygamy, they must and do see that polygamy must go, or Utah must be ruled out of the circle of Christian nations. For the rest of their errors, we must out-pray and out-teach them; and to do this we must be consistent, and "come into court with clean hands." And while a bold, boasting Freemason, who has sworn practically the oaths of Mormonism, is allowed to figure as a leader of the American Board, and we condemn Mormonism for the same things, we shall neither please God or convince men.

ADVENTISM.

It is an old story that children used to play "raise the devil" by reading the Lord's prayer backwards; and when Satan came to them and asked what they wanted him to do, they poured the contents of a powder-horn on the floor, and asked him to pick it up kernel by kernel, giving one minute to each. The trick was that the sun would rise before he got all the powder picked up, and Satan would have to leave at sunrise, and so would not hurt them.

The devil turns this child-play and gives Christians something useless to do so they will not hurt his kingdom in the earth.

Fifty-seven years ago, 1833, William Miller, a Baptist, and captain in the war of 1812, began to preach the fearfully neglected doctrine of Christ's second coming. His preaching drew to him the best Christians in the United States, viz., those who loved Christ most and longed for his appearing.

The devil began to put dead flies into Miller's good ointment. He amused him and his followers, setting them to fix days, and prepare robes for Christ's coming; and to look for the rift in the clouds through which he was to come. Thus he took off the attention of a godly multitude from the fact that, in slavery, one-sixth of the black women in the United States belonged to white men. The Millerites were helped by evil spirits as well as good. They made and sang hymns which thrilled the pious heart, and the Scriptures of the prophets rolled from their tongues as by miracle.

Now what has been the result of half a century of Adventism?

1. It has done much good by teaching men to "look for and haste unto" the coming of Christ.

2. It has done immense harm by making new sects to fight the Lord's resurrection day, and set up the Jews' Sabbath on Saturday. It left opposing slavery to Garrison and his come-outers, which furnished orthodox ministers excuse for neglecting the slave, shunning Abolitionism, and filled New England with infidel come-outers and spirit-mongers.

—We give large space to the petition of the Chicago ladies to the School Board of the city. It is an able document, and is likely to be historical. The society which inaugurated this movement reports 12,000 names to their petition for the Bible in schools.

—The Free Methodist General Conference continued its sittings last week in the new May Street Church. It is a most interesting body, and its deliberations shall have an extended notice when it closes. The topic which has produced most discussion is the ordination of women. It was championed by Superintendent Roberts himself, but was ably contested, and failed to carry by a considerable vote. Members of the conference say that their oldest superintendent is always five years ahead of the rest of the world, and after the lapse of that time the church will be ready to accept the proposition.

—Several brethren, reformers and Christians, from the M. E. church of Wheaton, Ill., have opened a mission at 87 West Madison St., a few blocks east of the Cynosure office. They call it the "Wheaton Mission," and night after night they invite fallen men and women to Christ at this place. Bro. Hurlburt, who has been very successfully managing a tent mission on the grounds once occupied by Mr. Carpenter's old homestead, has general oversight of this new Gospel work. Bro. Loveless, who managed the mission held for some time in our N. C. A. building, is the prime mover. It is excellently located in a very needy part of the city. May God's blessing rest abundantly and continually upon it.

—The block on which Mr. Carpenter's old home stood for more than forty years as a land mark in this city, has just been sold for $200,000. It was bounded by Randolph, Carpenter, Washington and Morgan streets, and was a portion of the quarter section of government land entered by Mr. Carpenter in 1834. He selected this block for his home, and the old house, venerable in years and cherished for its associations, was moved away a few years ago. By the terms of his will it was left to his two daughters, Mrs. Cheney of this city and Mrs. Hildreth of Los Angeles, to the children of an elder daughter deceased, and to the Chicago Theological Seminary, in equal shares. Though once described in legal papers as land "adjoining the city of Chicago" on the west, it is now east of the center of population, and will be used for manufacturing purposes, the residence portion of the city having been crowded on westward.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Rev. C. F. Hawley, agent for the middle district, spent last week with his family in Wheaton.

—Bro. C. M. Strickler, a warm-hearted friend of our reform, addressed a Sabbath-school convention in Rushville, Ohio, lately.

—Pres. J. D. Irons of Muskingum College, New Concord, Ohio, is out of health and is on his way to spend the winter in the South.

—Rev. S. F. Porter, our College agent, hopes to return to his agency work early in November. His church work at Abercrombie, North Dakota, detains him longer than he had anticipated. He thinks the Cynosure grows better and better.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard addressed a large meeting of his fellow citizens of Wheaton lately, on the general political situation and the especial claims of prohibition upon them. Rev. Alexander Thomson, chairman of the N. C. A. Board, spoke in Wheaton on the same topic last week.

—Prof. E. Benner, principal of the Salt Lake Academy, an institution fostered by the New West Commission, was a member of the last Territorial Legislature of Utah, and Prof. Millspaugh, at the head of the Presbyterian Academy, has lately been chosen superintendent of the city schools in Salt Lake.

—Our Washington agent is recuperating slowly from his late attack of fever. He spoke in the First Congregational Church (colored) on Sabbath evening the 12th inst., and he expects soon to speak in other colored churches and colleges. He has not yet recovered his ordinary strength, and hopes for cooler weather, when the malarial condition of the atmosphere will be overcome.

—Rev. J. B. Galloway of Vernon, Wisconsin, called on his return from the meeting of the United Presbyterian Synod at Sparta, Ill. He is considering some contribution on the religious and prophetic phases of the secret orders, which he believes will not be overthrown till the coming of Christ. We should say that this overthrow is carefully predicted in Rev. 14th, 17th and 18th.

—Rev. John Boyes, our English contributor, has been for some time out of health and has not, therefore, written for our columns. He has lately, by advice of his physician, removed from the busy manufacturing city, Huddersfield, to the quiet midland town of Retford. He hopes here for a restoration of health, and will write more often. He sends a contribution which will appear in our next.

—Dr. H. H. George, late president of Geneva College, stopped at Chicago over the Sabbath on his way to Pittsburgh from St. Paul. His health is too unsettled to permit of undertaking any permanent work at present, but he hopes to be able to begin an important mission for the National Reform Association in this city during the world's fair, which may become a permanent enterprise. His former intimate relations with the N. C. A. as president for two years, inclined his steps to the Cynosure office for a most agreeable visit on Saturday.

—Bro. Bradley, of Wyanet, who was instructed by Hon. John Sherman, Senator from Ohio, in Odd-fellowship, called on us with his son, a business man of Princeton, Ill. He says he was carefully taught in the lodge the Jesuit doctrine that there was no moral obliquity in deceiving men in respect to the lodge. In short, it was a lodge virtue to lie when it might seem to be for the benefit of the order.

IOWA CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, is hereby called to meet in the Free Methodist church at Fairfield, Iowa, Tuesday, Dec. 2, at 2 P. M., to continue its sessions through the following day. Efforts will be made to secure some of the ablest speakers on the subject to address the convention. The committee hope to furnish free entertainment to all delegates. All churches and associations opposed to secret societies are urged to send delegates to this meeting.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Why is it?—I. O. O. F. benevolence.—The Catholics and Masons at Lowell. A revival of the military spirit.—Why the stage cannot be reformed.

Is it carelessness, or ignorance, or "malice prepense," as a lawyer would say which makes the press so often jumble together under one heading organizations as far apart in aim and principles as the poles, thus leaving an impression on the minds of ill-informed readers that they must be in some way similar. For instance, one paper of large circulation speaks of the W. C. T. U., the King's Daughters, and the Eastern Star in one breath, and then goes on to say of the societies: "They are all enlisted with a generous spirit for the public good." Being myself a white ribboner it seems to me no less than insulting to an organization which is continually spending and being spent in over forty different departments of Christian service, that it should be placed on the same level with a Masonic side degree invented to "lead captive silly women," and which has done nothing to benefit humanity outside the narrow Masonic circle of which it is only a mere excrescence.

The annual income of the I. O. O. F., is $7,000,000, and out of this $300,000 are expended in relief of the poor and suffering. So said the chief of the order, who by the way is an ex-confederate, in his address at the late corner-stone laying in Worcester. What if our missionary societies required such a wonderfully large margin between expenditures and receipts! Mr. Dodge, who gave the site for the Home, is not an Odd-fellow, singularly enough. Neither is Governor Brackett, who was fulsomely praised by the speaker and assured that he needed but one thing—initiation into the ranks of Odd-fellowship—to make him a perfect man. As the Governor is already a member of an order which, according to Sickels, leaves nothing further that the soul of man can be conceived as requiring, this might seem a rather superfluous invitation.

At the city clerk's office in Lowell a petition has been received signed by twenty-three Catholic clergymen and 4,640 Catholic laymen, protesting against the Freemasons laying the corner-stone of the new City Hall. It is stated that this is the first time any church or religious society has made such public protest. So it is not strange that it has caused quite a stir, and called out much warm feeling—not to say warm talk on the part of the Masons who assert that they are not anti-Catholic or anti-anything, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding. A long list is published in the Lowell Evening Citizen of churches and public buildings whose corner-stones have been Masonically laid, even going back to the first case on record, which is said to have been in the time of James I. of England, who invited the Freemasons to lay the corner-stone of his new palace at White Hall. The Citizen thinks it very unfortunate that the Catholic church should find it necessary to interest itself in a purely secular and civic matter like the laying of a corner-stone. On the other hand the Boston Pilot says: "The Catholics of Lowell have very properly protested against the introduction of sectarianism into a purely civic function." Of course that part of the reading public who know nothing about Masonry are to make "sweet concord" out of these "jangling voices" as best they can. The Citizen is perfectly right when it says that the laying of the corner-stone for the City Hall is a purely civic matter, and the Pilot is equally right when it insists that the inviting of the Freemasons involves sectarian features, for it is calling in a religious body with religious ceremonies. The controversy is not to be regretted, however strong the feelings it may excite. It is one among many providences that are calling the public attention more and more to this subject. The Citizen in the same article tries to confirm its assertion that Masonry is not anti-Catholic, by insulting mention of "Fulton, Shepard and the horde of fanatics who find notoriety in their abuse of the Catholic faith." This is a specimen of the sympathy that anti-Romanists will be likely to get from lodge organs.

The American party, which in this case means the anti-Romanists, who have been among the last to steal our much-plagiarized name, is going to make its first political move this fall. They are not going to vote independently, however, but with the Prohibition party. Brackett may be defeated thereby, but there are several reasons why this "American party" will not permanently coalesce with the Prohibitionists nor have a very long life outside of such support. A secret society, the Get-There Association, is the head and front of it. So states the Newbry Herald which prints an interview with a member of the Association, who states that they are not Prohibitionists as a whole nor in sympathy with some of the party measures, their chief point of union being that they stand firm and square on the public school question, adding: "Our enemies have hitherto worked along lines of secrecy, and we are now doing the same. Politicians who smile at the idea of an American party may, for aught they know to the contrary, be smiling to and with a man sworn to advance its sacred interests." This is very un-American talk, whatever the party it comes from. Nothing will be more sure to bring on civil strife than to have these religious questions taken up by secret political organizations which work and plot in the dark till men lose all trust in each other. In this connection it may be observed that there has been of late a singular revival of the military spirit, as evidenced by sham fights and mock contests with mobs in various cities of Massachusetts. The American asks, "What is the significance of all this ferment in military matters, and of the thousands of semi-military Roman organizations that are drilling in secret in every city in America?" It simply means that the lodge has been for years fostering a love of military display, and we now see the legitimate fruits of which Rome is taking advantage. Lodge tactics are a two-edged sword. Heaven help us in the day when it shall be turned against the nation's heart.

The Brooklyn Presbyterian church, which lately retired Rev. Dr. Cuyler with a gift of $30,000, has repeatedly tried to woo the popular pastor of the Park Street Church, Rev. Dr. Gregg, with an offer of $10,000 salary, but the Doctor professes himself too well pleased with his present position to leave it.

The city fathers of Boston have very wisely and properly revoked the license of the Park Theatre because of an immoral play on the boards; and yet this very same play has been the success of the season, and has had a run similar to the Black Crook twenty years ago. This certainly shows what class of people attend the theatre, and also why it is, and must ever be, impossible to reform the stage.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

—Albert Pike, Sovereign Grand Commander of the Supreme Council of the Sovereign Grand Inspectors General thirty-third degree Scottish Rite, says in his book, "Morals and Dogma," page 819: "The Blue degrees are but the outer court of the Temple. Part of the symbols are displayed there to the initiate, but he is intentionally misled by false interpretations. It is not intended that he shall understand them, but it is intended that he shall imagine that he does understand them. Their true explanation is reserved for the princes of Masonry."

THE HOME.

THE WORD WAS GOD.

With God He was, was very God,
Before the skies were arched abroad;
Before the stars were set on high,
To syllable His majesty;
Ere earth had her foundations laid,
Or out of dust was mortal made;
With God He was, was very God,
He who for us the winepress trod.

The world His coming waited long,
The theme of prophecy and song;
Yearned up to God, through blood and fire,
Unsatisfied her one desire;
And all Creation groaned afresh,
To see God manifest in flesh;
To see earth's tribes, scattered abroad,
Gathered in One, the sons of God.

When Time was ripe, of woman born,
Men turned upon Him in their scorn;
A Man of sorrows and of grief,
In vain He sought on earth relief;
Homeless by day, at night no bed,
Nor pillow for His weary head;
For Him no respite could there be,
Till finished was His ministry.

He walked beneath the circling sun,
Spake but the word, and it was done;
Rebuked the waters in their might,
Gave to the blind their longed-for sight;
He spake, the deaf were quick to hear,
The rifled tomb confessed Him near,
So gracious He to guide and teach,
The common people loved His speech.

The shiv'ring rocks were rent in twain,
And earth herself felt throes of pain;
The sun for shame, in his high place,
Hid from the sight his very face;
The startled tombs gave up their dead,
When this Man bowed His thorn-crowned head,
Who tasted death for you and me,
Alone that day on Calvary.

ADVICE TO A CHRISTIAN WORKER.

The great requisite is to be master of the English Bible, and have it at finger's end. The way to do this is, first, to know its contents. This you can gain by reading it through once a year for at least five years—not for critical or devotional purposes, but simply to know what it contains. Three chapters a day will accomplish this. Read carefully, and at the close take five minutes to find out what you have gotten by the reading, what new truths, precepts, promises, images or fine expressions, have come before you.

The next thing is to get a true idea of the meaning, purpose and special usefulness of the separate books of the Bible. Take a month for each one, and set apart half an hour a day for the study. Learn the object of the book, its division, its character in itself and as part of the whole, and whatever else you can fall in with. Write down in your own words what conclusions you have come to, and why. This will systematize and clarify your views, and help you to understand other matters. Then you are to take a part of each day for critical study. Have the Revised Version side by side with the Authorized, and always compare them. Use a good reference Bible and get what help you can from related Scripture. If you have a commentary, consult it. If not, go to work yourself. Ask first what does this verse (or the passage) mean, and think a good while before giving it up as too much for you (as the Apocalypse is for most of your brethren). Then ask what does it teach, and here be honest and fair, not forcing matters. When you have learned what a passage means and what it teaches, you know it, and not before. The next point is to put in your memory whatever of the Bible impresses or attracts you. 'Tis a great thing to have divine words at call. Then, get your matter for sermons out of the Bible—such portions as occur to you in your reading. And when you have a text treat it fairly, deducing from it only such things as you suppose it was intended to teach.

Do not be ashamed to be "a man of one book." It is no end of a book, and will give you all you need. Your business is to know it and push it home upon your people. Do not stop to prove it, but, assuming it as God's Word, set it forth, showing its meaning and its application. Get your illustrations out of the Bible and your own experience and observation. Pray much and often for divine help. Preach to yourself before you preach to the people. Have unbounded faith in the Author of the Word, and remember that you do not go to the war at your own charges.—Christian Intelligencer.

WHAT SCIENTISTS SAY OF THE BIBLE.

A correspondent of the Inter Ocean who has read one of Ingersoll's lectures, has collected the following utterances of scientists, statesmen, and thinkers in regard to the Bible:

SCIENTISTS.

"The grand old book of God still stands, and this old earth, the more its leaves are turned over and pondered, the more it will sustain and illustrate the sacred Word."—Prof. Dana.

"Infidelity has, from time to time, erected her imposing ramparts, and opened fire upon Christianity from a thousand batteries. But the moment the rays of truth were concentrated upon their ramparts they melted away. The last clouds of ignorance are passing, and the thunders of infidelity are dying upon the ear. The union and harmony of Christianity and science is a sure token that the flood of unbelief and ignorance shall nevermore go over the world."—Prof. Hitchcock.

"All human discoveries seem to be made only for the purpose of confirming, more and more strongly, the truths contained in the sacred Scriptures." Sir. John Herschel.

"The Bible furnishes the only fitting vehicle to express the thoughts that overwhelm us when contemplating the stellar universe."—O. M. Mitchell.

"In my investigation of natural science, I have always found that whenever I can meet with anything in the Bible, on any subject, it always affords me a fine platform on which to stand."—Lieut. Maury.

"If the God of love is most appropriately worshiped in the Christian temple, the God of nature may be equally honored in the temple of science. Even from its lofty minarets, the philosopher may summon the faithful to prayer; and the priest and the sage exchange altars without the compromise of faith or knowledge."—Sir David Brewster.

I have not space to quote from Agassiz, Hugh Miller, Prof. Airey, Sir William Thompson, Faraday, Silliman, et. al., who not only loved, read, and revered the Bible, but great scientists as they were, spoke brave, true, and glowing words in defense of the Book of books.

STATESMEN.

"There is a book worth all other books which were ever printed."—Patrick Henry.

"The Bible is the best book in the world."—John Adams.

"So great is my veneration for the Bible that the earlier my children begin to read it, the more confident will be my hopes that they will prove useful citizens to their country, and respectable members of society."—John Quincy Adams.

"It is impossible to govern the world without God. He must be worse than an infidel that lacks faith, and more than wicked that has not gratitude enough to acknowledge his obligation."—General George Washington.

Pointing to the family Bible on the stand, during his last illness, Andrew Jackson said to his friend: "That book, sir, is the rock on which our Republic rests."

"I deem the present occasion sufficiently important and solemn to justify me in expressing to my fellow-citizens a profound reverence for the Christian religion, and a thorough conviction that sound morals, religious liberty and a just sense of religious responsibility, are essentially connected with all true and lasting happiness."—Gen. Harrison's Inaugural Address.

"As to Jesus of Nazareth, my opinion of whom you particularly desire, I think the system of morals, and his religion, as he left them to us, is the best the world ever saw, or is likely to see."—Benjamin Franklin.

"Do you think that your pen, or the pen of any other man, can un-Christianize the mass of our citizens? Or have you hopes of corrupting a few of them to assist you in so bad a cause."—Samuel Adams' Letter to Thomas Paine.

"Christianity is the only true and perfect religion, and that in proportion as mankind adopts its principles and obey its precepts, they will be wise and happy. And a better knowledge of this religion is to be acquired by reading the Bible than in any other way."—Benjamin Rush.

When that illustrious man, Chief Justice Jay, was dying, being asked if he had any farewell address to leave his children, he replied, "They have the Bible."

"I always have had, and always shall have, a profound regard for Christianity, the religion of my fathers, and for its rites, its usages, and observances."—Henry Clay.

"A few days before his death, 'the foremost man of all his times' drew up and signed this declaration of his religious faith: 'Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief. Philosophical argument, especially that drawn from the vastness of the universe, in comparison with the insignificance of this globe, has sometimes shaken my reason for the faith that is in me, but my heart has always assured and reassured me that the Gospel of Jesus Christ must be a divine reality. The Sermon on the Mount cannot be a merely human production. This belief enters into the very depth of my conscience.' "—Daniel Webster.

"Hold fast to the Bible as the sheet anchor of our liberties, write its precepts on your hearts, and practice them in your lives. To the influence of this book we are indebted for the progress made in true civilization, and to this we must look as our guide in the future."—U. S. Grant.

GREAT THINKERS.

"It is a belief in the Bible which has served me as the guide of my moral and literary life."—Goethe.

"I account the Scriptures of God to be the most sublime philosophy."—Sir Isaac Newton.

"To give a man a full knowledge of true morality, I should need to send him to no other book than the New Testament."—John Locke.

"I know the Bible is inspired because it finds me at greater depths of my being than any other book."—Coleridge

"A noble book! All men's book. It is our first statement of the never-ending problem of man's destiny and God's way with men on earth."—Carlyle.

"I must confess the majesty of the Scriptures strikes me with astonishment."—Rousseau.

"There is not a boy nor a girl, all Christendom through, but their lot is made better by this great book."—Theodore Parker.

The estimate Mr. Stanley places upon the Bible is well told in his own words. He says:

"Just before I started for Africa, Sir William McKinnon said tome: 'Now, I want to give you something, but I should like for you to choose for yourself. I shall have the utmost pleasure in presenting you with anything you like.' Never mind the expense. Just say what you would like. 'I replied,' said the traveler, 'give me a Bible. 'The desired gift was soon in my possession, and just the Bible I wanted, and during my absence in Africa I have read that Bible through three times."

SOLD HIMSELF.

A farmer sold a load of corn in a town one day. When it was weighed he slyly stepped on the scales, and then drove off to unload. When the empty wagon was weighed he took good care not to be in it, and congratulated himself that he had cheated the buyer in good shape. The grain-dealer called him in, and after figuring up the load paid him in full.

As the farmer buttoned up his coat to go out, the buyer kindly asked him to smoke with him, and then talked over the crops and the price of hogs, and the likelihood of the Maple Valley Railroad building up that way, until the farmer fairly squirmed in his chair with uneasiness about his chores at home.

At last he could stand it no longer, and said he must go. The dealer quietly said that was not to be thought of; that he had bought the farmer at full weight, and paid him his own price, and that he would insist on doing what he pleased with his own property.

The farmer saw that he had indeed sold himself, in one sense, at least. He acknowledged his cheating and compromised the affair. Now when he markets grain he does not stand on the scales or sell himself with the load.

A good many boys sell themselves at a still cheaper rate. The boy who lies, cheats, swears, or steals, and thus loses his character, his reputation, and his prospect of prosperity in this life and blessing in the next, sells himself to sin and Satan; and though he may not get his pay, the buyer is likely to hold on to his purchase.—S. S. Messenger.

THE CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATION.

"Tut-tut-tut!" exclaimed old Silas Wetherel, as he entered his office, one morning.

He had advertised for a boy, and no less than twenty applicants were present. After a cursory examination, he dismissed all of them but three, who were about the same age.

Two of them, Fred Baylis and Harry St. Clair, were evidently the sons of well-to-do parents. The attire of the other boy, whose name was Charlie Benson, indicated that he belonged to the poorer class.

"Well, I want but one boy," Uncle Silas said, as he settled down into his chair, a ruminating look on his face. "How am I to make a selection?"

He was a stout, jovial, loud-voiced gentleman, eccentric in his ways, partial to boys, and always ready to "poke fun" at them.

"We'll have a civil service examination," he announced, a flash of humor brightening his face. "Where is the Westminster Abbey of America?"

That was a puzzler, and the boys glanced into one another's faces.

"At Cambridge," Fred Baylis hesitatingly said.

"At Princeton," suggested Harry St. Clair.

"I don't know," was Charlie Benson's reply.

"Question number two," Uncle Silas said. "How is the word 'so-met-i-mes' pronounced?" and he spelled the word with the pauses indicated.

"So-met-i-mes," replied Fred Baylis, plunging headlong into the trap set for him.

"It is Latin, isn't it?" asked Harry St. Clair.

"I would pronounce it 'sometimes,'" said Charlie Benson.

Uncle Silas laughed heartily, and Fred and Harry grew red in the face.

"Please hang up this picture," Uncle Silas said, as he offered Harry St. Clair a small picture, and pointed to the wall. No sooner had Harry complied than he was ordered to return it to the desk.

"Where was it that twenty-seven thousand men were killed by the falling of a wall?" asked Uncle Silas.

It was an odd question and rather an indefinite one.

"I don't know," frankly admitted Harry St. Clair.

"I never heard of such a dreadful accident," said Fred.

"An account of it is given in the Bible," quietly replied Charlie Benson.

Uncle Silas flung up his head in a pleased way.

"Where?" he asked.

"In the First Book of Kings. It happened in the city of Aphek."

"How many Israelites were killed?"

"None, sir," replied Charlie. "They were Syrians."

"You are right," declared Uncle Silas.

He rubbed the end of his nose for a few minutes, and then designating Fred, ordered him to hang up the picture. Fred complied, but thought it a funny proceeding.

"You may bring it to me again," Uncle Silas said. The picture on his desk once more, he asked: "Is this a correct sentence, 'Your trunk has come?"

A short silence ensued.

"It is," said Fred Baylis.

"It is," declared Harry St. Clair.

Uncle Silas looked at Charlie Benson, who said: "It is gramatically correct."

"But is it correct?" asked Uncle Silas.

"It isn't a correct statement," Charlie said. "A trunk is an inanimate thing. It cannot come. To say 'your trunk has been brought' would be more precise."

"Pretty well taken," Uncle Silas said laughingly.

"Of course, I thought you meant its grammatical construction," Fred remarked.

"It is a quibble," declared Harry.

"Please hang up this picture, Uncle Silas said, extending it to Charlie, who complied with the request, and it was not followed with another to return it.

"I am sorry that two of you are to be disappointed," Uncle Silas said. "But how can I help it? There are three nails in the wall. Master Benson hung it on the proper one, with deliberation and an artistic eye. You will observe that it is equally distant from the corners of the wall, and the same height from the border that the other pictures are. It was a trifling test, but there is a good deal in it. I have concluded to engage Charlie Benson."

"All right!" said Fred rising. "Good for Charlie Benson; he scored one every time!"

"'Twas a fair field, and you won every time! Good for you, old fellow!" said Harry.

The boys showed their admiration in their eyes, and Uncle Silas leaned back in his chair and beamed on them as they bowed themselves out. "Your remarks do you credit, youngsters—good-day! good-day!" said he.—Wide Awake.

IN TROUBLE, REACH OUT.

In the mountains of North Carolina there is a remarkable tree, to which the guide invariably calls the traveler's attention. It stands, stately and green, on the top of a huge bare rock on which there is not an atom of earth. But the roots cling and creep patiently over the face and down the sides of the stone until they reach old mother earth, and draw moisture and life from her bosom.

Some human beings, like this wonderful tree, have been condemned to grow in hard and sterile places. The very base of their life is poverty, or grief or pain. But beneath the hardest rock of circumstance is the throbbing life, the love, the happiness which God has given to the world.

All that we need to do is to stretch out our roots a little farther, a little deeper, until we reach the water of life. Then, no matter how hard our condition, our lives shall grow and bear fruit.—Youth's Companion.

TEMPERANCE.

SO SAYS EX-GOV. LARRABEE.

Gov. Larrabee, of Iowa, writes of prohibition in Iowa as follows, in answer to a letter of inquiry: "It should be borne in mind, however, that the taxes were as high here previous to the enactment of the prohibitory law as they are at present, and that property in this city is only assessed at from 20 to 25 per cent. of its actual value. The cities of this State are giving great attention to school matters, and probably half of the whole taxes are for school purposes. The fact that Iowa has less illiteracy, as shown by the last census, is not the result of chance but of organized effort to drive illiteracy from our borders. Our people willingly submit to heavy taxation for school purposes. There are comparatively few buildings unoccupied in the city of Des Moines, notwithstanding the fact that 2,200 buildings have been erected during the past two years. And rents have been well maintained. The rents are too high at present, and more buildings are required. I know of no brick store-houses in the center of the city unoccupied, only those which are now building. The costs of conducting criminal courts in Iowa, as shown by the official report which I inclose to you, is a decrease of $138,146.65 for the year ending September 30, 1887, compared with the previous year. The testimony of the judges of this State is that criminal business of their courts has been reduced during the last three years from 30 to 60 per cent. The number of convicts in our penitentiaries the first day of September was only 571, which is 150 less than it was when I came into this office three years ago. I think you will find in no State in the Union or in any civilized country so small a number of convicts as compared with the total population as this—only one convict for every 3,300 persons."

A DRUNKARD'S HOME.

Peter Rosenagel, a cornice-maker, who lives with his four little children in the rear of No. 204 Mohawk street, was arrested yesterday for cruelty to his children. The story of the wretch's treatment of his children is most shocking. Neighbors have endeavored to shield the little ones from their brutal father as much as possible, but he came home Saturday night drunk and abused them so shamefully that August Herbsk and Charles Paule, who live on the second floor of the same number, determined to make complaint.

Rosenagel, with his four children, sleeps on an old straw tick on the floor. This tick is the only suggestion of a bed that can be found in the house. The father came home crazed with liquor late Saturday night, as usual, and proceeded to jerk the little ones out of bed and beat them. Their piteous cries aroused the neighbors, and Charles Paule rushed in just in time to see the drunken brute standing over his eldest daughter, Annie, who is ten years old, flourishing a hatchet over her head and threatening to kill her. The terror-stricken girl had dropped to her knees before her father and with her upraised hand, clasped in supplication, was crying "Oh, papa, don't kill me!" Paule seized Rosenagel's arm just in time to stay the murderous blow.

The inhuman parent at the station said that he was brandishing a hatchet over the little girl's head and threatening to kill her. When asked why he did it, he replied that it was just a trick of his.

A few nights ago Mrs. Herbsk heard the children screaming, and forcing her way into the room, found him choking his six-year-old boy by means of a handkerchief which he had tied around the boy's neck. He had twisted the handkerchief until the little fellow was black in the face, and foaming at the mouth. He comes home drunk about three or four nights in the week, and invariably abuses his children when under the influence of liquor. He frequently throws the children out of the house late at night, and they are obliged to seek shelter with the people living on the upper floors. The police said it was one of the most shameful cases of cruelty they have ever known.—Inter Ocean, Oct. 13.

PROHIBITION.

Fred. Douglass, the leading colored man of the nation, has come squarely out for prohibition, and has written to a prominent Prohibitionist in Mississippi, advising the colored people of that State to vote for delegates to the coming State Convention who favor prohibition. He says: "You could not ask me to do a more consistent thing, or one more in harmony with my highest convictions of truth and duty, and the best interests of all people of Mississippi, than to ask the colored voters of that State to support by voice, vote, and co-operation, the grand prohibition movement now happily inaugurated in Mississippi and several other States of the South. The colored people of this country have a good many enemies, but no one of them all is so destructive to their best interests as their whisky drinking custom. Slavery robbed them of their bodies, but whisky destroys both soul and body, and casts them into the horrid pit of degradation and ruin. Few things could do more for the elevation and happiness of the colored people than the banishment of intoxicating liquors from the State of Mississippi. Whisky arms against them the hand of violence; it stifles in the white race all ennobling sentiments of justice, kindness and good will. The colored people of Mississippi will inflict upon themselves a terrible calamity if they fail to avail themselves of the opportunity now afforded them to extinguish this foul, haggard and damning curse from the State."

THE FARMER PAYS IT ALL.

The saloon is a factory where drunkards and paupers are made. The saloon is the mother of misery, want and crime. The saloon is the open-mouthed bank where the hard-earned savings of the laborer and others are deposited, but never returned. It takes the dollars and destroys the person's ability, physically or mentally, to make other dollars. To foster the saloon business jails, asylums, hospitals and expensive courts have to be maintained by excessive taxes. The merchant, banker and manufacturer adds his taxes to the cost of his goods and interest, and the farmer pays it all, with no redress except to vote for prohibition.—James Baynes, Editor American Swineherd.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The prayer in the garden. Vs. 39–46. The Mount of Olives was a favorite retreat with our Lord,—a fact of which Judas was well aware. That Christ should now seek this well-known spot, shows a voluntary giving up of himself; a perfect foreknowledge of his Father's will as well as perfect acquiescence therein. His chief thought all through these last sorrowful days was for his disciples. Must we not suppose that now in glory on the right hand of the Father, he still bears their trials, their struggles, their temptations, on his heart as his chief interest, even in heaven? If these three most favored disciples needed to pray that they enter not into temptation, surely there is no place so holy as to be free from spiritual danger. The presence of our Master, even, will not keep us if we relax our watch; and the more need we shall find of watching, the more we are privileged. Great privileges mean great perils, both from the world, the flesh, and the devil. We cannot tell with certainty what this mysterious "cup" was which he prayed to have removed; we can only leave it as the Scriptures do, unexplained. It was here that he had to tread the winepress alone; and while there is a sense in which this is true of the soul in every great spiritual crisis, there is also another and deeper sense in which the true believer is never alone. Though his disciples slept at their post, Jesus will never leave us to a solitary watch in our Gethsemanes of temptation and trial.

2. The betrayal. Vs. 47, 48. The glare of lanterns and torches carried by the traitor Judas and his band now filled the quiet garden, but not until the mysterious agony had passed, and Jesus was so strengthened by the heavenly messenger that had been sent him, that he could go forth and meet them in calm, collected majesty. Every act in the tragedy shows a sublime and infinite purpose, "without haste, without rest," passing on to its divine fulfillment. To profess to be Christ's while in reality in the ranks of his enemies is to play the part of Judas, to betray him with a kiss; yet how many nominal Christians are giving help and countenance to his foes! It is a fearful thought that one can deliberately and yet almost unconsciously to one's self be guilty of a sin so fearful. Jesus is betrayed whenever his cause is betrayed, and that includes the cause of righteousness and truth everywhere. It is a Judas-like act for a Christian to license the sale of intoxicating liquors. For him to go into a secret lodge where his Master's name is cast out, and call his professed enemies "brothers" is a direct betrayal of Christ. It is a sad truth that multitudes in our churches are practically deserters from his standard. If a soldier in time of war should give half the aid and comfort to the enemy that they do to Christ's foes, he would be in danger of being shot as a traitor. The only safety is in entire separation from the world. The first step in treachery is to parley with it, and for such it has the thirty pieces of silver always ready.

3. The arrest. Vs. 49–53. In the excitement, Peter, ever rash and thoughtless, drew his sword and wounded the high priest's servant. His immediate healing was the last of Jesus' recorded miracles—done not to a friend but to an enemy. At the same time, as we learn from Matthew, Jesus gently reminded him that he had only put himself and his fellow disciples in great danger by an act so contrary to the principles of a spiritual kingdom. Truth cannot fight with carnal weapons. When she has been led to make use of them it has always been to her own hurt. A man armed to the teeth is much more likely to provoke a quarrel and lose his life than one who is unarmed; and it is so with nations. A Christian government has no business to keep a large standing army and plant its coast line with bristling forts and cannon. It is a constant menace to other nations, and much more apt to provoke war than to prevent it. But there are other carnal weapons beside the sword. Words can stab, and many a good cause has been hurt by personal abuse of its opponents. There are no blows too hard to strike against evil. The trouble generally is that we do not strike half hard enough, and allow our strength and energy to be frittered away in mere personal and often very bitter controversy, that, like Peter's rash use of the sword, does not help but hinders our Master's cause. "This is your hour," etc. The powers of darkness are permitted their little hour to wreak all the evil they can, but to Christ belongs the ages of eternity. The worst trials are brief; heaven everlasting.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET.

Sources of Christ's Intense Suffering.—Why was Christ so sorrowful, when many a martyr has gone triumphantly to his cross; and to many a hero death has been "welcome as the sight of sky and stars to prisoned men?" It was "something far deadlier than death" that weighed upon his soul.

1. Into this one hour were crowded by prevision the combined horrors of the passion, its cruelty, its shame, its physical torment, its spiritual tortures.—Abbott.

2. We are to remember that the more highly organized any being is, and the more capable he is of the highest joy, so much the more is he sensitive to pain.

3. And may there not have been present vividly before him the ruin and scattering of his own nation and people, which would be the punishment of their sin in rejecting and crucifying him?—Sadler.

4. I cannot help feeling that part of Christ's state of mind in the garden was owing to the deep, awful sense of responsibility, the conception of the supreme importance to man of his standing firm at this crisis. There never was so great a crisis, and he was aware of its length and breadth.—President Woolsey.

5. At the same time, his earthly career, in this dark hour, may have seemed to be a failure, if the future was veiled from his vision. Only a few disciples, instead of a glorious kingdom, and these few about to forsake him. Where were the fruits of his life?

Religious News.

—Last Sabbath was observed as a day of prayer for Sabbath-schools by the United Presbyterian churches, by the resolution of the last General Assembly.

—The New York Mail and Express very plainly calls upon Dr. Charles A. Briggs, professor in the Union Theological Seminary, to resign his chair in that institution, on the ground that he does not now teach as he promised when he entered upon his professorship, and has neither moral nor legal right to promulgate his new doctrines in the seminary. It says; "With his redemption after death, his general quarrel with the Westminster and Calvinistic theology, his doubts about the correctness of the Holy Bible, his setting up popish patristic teachings in place of the gospels, and his pompous, conceited claims to be a new prophet, it is high time that he resigned and left the seminary; and in default thereof, that the trustees turned him out; and, in default thereof, that students should cease to go to that seminary."

—The Independent is authority for the statement that the first Japanese Parliament, elected last July, contains ten Christians, or one in thirty of the whole number of members. This is an evidence of the rapid growth of Christianity in that land.

—Dr. William M. Taylor, of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, preaches with considerable energy. A little four-year-old boy lately ventured on this criticism as he passed out of the church: "Mamma, if the minister man should act that way in the street on Sunday wouldn't the policeman arrest him?"

—The week beginning Sabbath, November 9th, has been set apart, as usual, by the International Convention and the World's Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations, as a season of prayer for the Associations and their efforts in behalf of young men. The American Associations have regularly observed this annual appointment since 1866.

—At a meeting of the Presbytery of New York, Oct. 13, a resolution was passed that the Columbian Exhibition Committee at Chicago be requested to take measures to close the coming exhibition on the Sabbath day, and also to prevent workmen employed about the exhibition buildings from working that day.

—Bishop Thoburn, head of the Methodist Episcopal Church in India, now in this country, says his denomination is recruiting in that country at the rate of about 6,000 a year. Of the geographical distribution of the evangelical missionary forces in India the Bishop says: "All the churches of America are represented out there. The Presbyterians are chiefly in Northern India; the Baptists are in Burmah and the Telugu country; the Congregationalists in Western and Southern India; the Methodists have their chief forces in Northern India, though they have missions in all parts of the country. Of course, the largest Protestant mission in India is of the Church of England. I believe it was started nearly 106 years ago."

—By the will of the late Newton Case, of Hartford, Conn., the American Board of Foreign Missions, American Missionary Association, and Hartford City Mission, receive each $5,000; the American Home Missionary Society receives $10,000; the Hartford Theological Seminary about $100,000 outright and the residuum of the estate, subject to a specified annuity.

—The National Council of the Seventh-day Baptist churches meets in this city on Wednesday of this week, and will continue about seven days. The place of meeting is Oakwood Boulevard and Langley Avenue, on the South side.

—Rev. Dr. R. R. Meredith, who spent his vacation in the West and filled the pulpit of the First Congregational Church in San Francisco during the month of August, received a call to that church, but promptly declined to leave the Tompkins Avenue Church, Brooklyn, with which he has been connected three years.

—During the months of October and November the Methodist laity are to vote on the question whether women shall be admitted to the General Conference, the legislative body of the church. Elections for that purpose will be held in every meeting-house; they will be by ballot, and members of twenty-one years and over may vote.

—The will of Roswell W. Cook, of Greenfield, Mass., makes the American Missionary Association and the Home Missionary Society residuary legatees of about $75-000.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

—A resolution was passed Tuesday by the Michigan State Board of Health ordering the exclusion from public schools, colleges and institutions of learning of all persons suffering from consumption; and that they shall not be permitted to re-enter until the cough and the expectoration have ceased.

—Eight students were expelled altogether from Grove City College last week by Prof. Ketler, says the last number of the News of Sandy Lake, Pa. It is generally supposed the reason they were expelled was on account of their connection with a secret fraternity, organized against the wishes of the faculty.

—The University of Pennsylvania is to send out a scientific exploring and dredging expedition to the Bahamas and about Carribean waters. The craft is the yacht Whitecap, of fifty-one tons. Columbia College, Park Davis & Co., of Detroit, and the Missouri Botanical Gardens, St. Louis, will also have representatives on board, making a scientific corps of seven or eight men.

—A famous college president, a clergyman, was addressing the students in the chapel at the beginning of the college year. "It is," he said in conclusion, "a matter of congratulation to all the friends of the college that this year opens with the largest Freshmen class in its history." And then without any pause, he turned to the Scripture lesson for the day, the Third Psalm, and began reading in a voice of thunder: "Lord, how they are increased that trouble me."

—Haverford College, Pa., begins the year with thirty-eight new students and ten graduates who will pursue special courses. On Sept. 25th, the Freshmen were surprised by an invitation to meet their traditional foes, the Sophomores, in the large dining room of the college. Here they found a new form of hazing. It was a generous collation in several courses, followed by speeches by the presidents of the two classes. This is a good Quaker fashion for other hazing students to follow.

—In Grosspeisten in Eastern Prussia, is a teacher whose father and forefathers, ever since the year 1630, have been acting as teachers in the village. Son has followed father, so that in 1830 the family Bettihn was able to celebrate its 250th anniversary. All Bettihns have celebrated the fiftieth anniversary in office, and, what is more, every one of them has celebrated his golden wedding. The present cantor, Julius Bettihn, who has been teacher in that village since 1841, is at present sixty-eight years old, and remarkably active and physically strong.

—R. G. Peters, the great lumber and salt merchant of Manistee, Mich., whose failure was announced last week, has left several institutions in perplexity. Several years ago it was announced that Mr. Peters had given $50,000 each to Oberlin College, Olivet College, and the Congregational Theological Seminary at Chicago. Oberlin has since built a large and elegant building, and christened it "Peters' Hall." It now turns out that these gifts are only on paper. Mr. Peters having given his notes for the sums named, on which he agreed to pay interest, presumably has until such time as he should choose to pay them.

—The success of lady students at colleges is no matter for surprise now-a-days. We have passed that stage, but it is always pleasant to hear of their continued advancement. An English paper informs us that by unanimous resolution of the Council of Queen's College, Belfast, Ireland, the medical classes were this year for the first time thrown open to ladies. Five in all availed themselves of the opportunities thus afforded them of preparing for medical degrees, and the president, Dr. Hamilton, states that they have applied themselves to their work with the most laudable assiduity and success, and that the results have been good in every way. Two ladies attended art classes, making seven in all who were enrolled on the college books during the session. All the classes in the college are now open to both sexes.—The Critic, Halifax.

OBITUARY.

Rev. Geo. Sovereign died at his home near Stillman Valley, Ill., Friday, Sept. 5, 1890, in his ninety-third year. He was born in the State of New Jersey, in the year 1798. When he was two years old his father's family moved to Canada. In the year 1820 he was married to Miss Phoebe Powell, who preceded him to the better land about seven years ago. To them were born nine children, two of whom are living. He came to the State of Illinois in 1842, and spent the remainder of his days here. He was converted to God in the days of his youth, and united with the Methodist church. He was a minister of the Gospel for over sixty years, traveling long distances over the prairies to fill appointments, and always without compensation. At one place where he had been preaching for some time, the people thought they ought to raise some money for him, and a brother arose to take up a collection, when Father Sovereign stopped him, and said, "No man shall ever say I preached the Gospel for money."

On account of the toleration of secret societies in the M. E. church, Father Sovereign had severed his relation with that church, and united with the Wesleyen Methodist church at Kishwaukee, and also with the Wesleyan Methodist Illinois Annual Conference. He had been a member of this church for many years. He was always faithful and true, and an honest man.—W. C. Mullenix, in the Wesleyan Methodist.

Home and Health.

CURE FOR DOG BITES.

I have been bitten by dogs repeatedly, once severely, says a correspondent of the New York Tribune. A pet dog of a neighbor was very sick and I was attempting to relieve it. It bit me in the left thumb just below the nail. That member became black as far down as the wrist. It remained so until it came off. The owner talked of hydrophobia, and said that the dog had not tasted water for two weeks. Had I been afraid I should no doubt have taken nervous fits and died. The verdict would have been "hydrophobia."

But I simply applied a solution of "salt and vinegar," a little more vinegar than salt, washed the wound with it, then tied a clean rag around the thumb, keeping it well saturated with the solution and moved the rag so that a fresh part covered the wound at intervals. This remedy was once applied to my wrist by a colored woman in the South for a snake bite. My arm was then black, hard and painful. The remedy acted like a charm. In two hours the discoloration had disappeared and with it the pain, and only the needle mark where the fang had entered was visible.

Again I was bitten by a weasel in the Grand Central depot. A girl had it in a bag and had placed it on a seat next to mine, remarking that it was a kitten. I placed my hand on it. Quicker than thought a couple of teeth punctured the joint of my left forefinger to the bone. I compelled the girl to tell me what was in the bag. My finger was badly swollen and painful before I reached home, some hours later. I used the same simple remedy with the same speedy result.

THE DOORYARD.

At this season of the year dooryards which may have been cared for all summer are apt to be neglected. There is much which can be done to a garden in the autumn in preparation for the spring, leaving the ground clean, beautiful, fresh and full of spring blossoms when the snows melt away, instead of being covered with debris of autumn, the dry stalks of the previous summer's vegetation, those "ghosts" of the year gone before. As soon as the frost comes and the summer's flowers fade, every flower-bed should be carefully cleaned out, spaded up, and planted with spring bulbs, if they are not already in the ground. As soon as the freezing days come the necessary litter of leaves or fertilizer must be laid over the grass and flower-beds, ready for the blanket of snow that shall soon come to cover all. It pays to take this care with the humblest dooryard. Fifty crocuses planted through the grass will cost but fifty cents. A bunch of half a dozen bulbs of English daffodowndillies will cost but thirty cents more. A bunch of Lent lilies will cost about the same price. These are the beautiful creamy white Pyrenees daffodils, with long, yellow trumpets, which are brought to England at the time of Lent. The familiar old-fashioned butter-and-eggs and codlins-and-cream are beautiful and inexpensive enough to deserve a place in every garden.—New York Tribune.

Several Evanston, Ill., ladies have organized and incorporated a stock company with capital at $5,000, known as the Evanston Co-Operative Housekeeping association. The object of this company is to maintain a co-operative kitchen and laundry and to furnish families with efficient table service.

WHAT I HAVE LEARNED.

That old stocking legs make nice sleeve protectors.

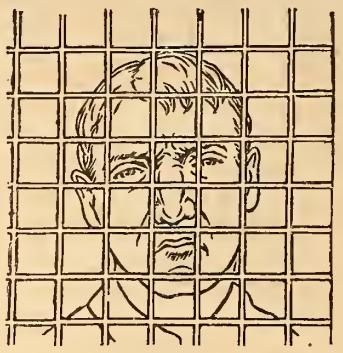
That powdered chalk and vinegar are good for a burn.

That a coarse comb is good to smoothe the fringe of towels, napkins, tidies, etc.

That an egg well beaten in a glass of milk and sweetened, makes a nice strengthening drink for a teething child.

That equal parts of bay rum, borax and ammonia make a nice preparation for cleaning the head; apply freely to the scalp with a brush, and then wash in clear water.

That feather bed and mattress will remain clean and in an excellent condition for years, if kept in a case made of common sheeting, which can be removed and washed at will.



That biscuits can be warmed to be as good as when just baked by placing them in the oven dry, covered closely with a tin. It is a great improvement over the old way of wetting them.—Good Housekeeping.

A Hard Corner.

The age of 30 is a hard corner for a woman to turn, and 35 is still harder. She feels that she is fast leaving her youth behind her. But there is no reason why a woman should be faded and passe at 35, or even at 45. The chief cause of the early fading of American women is found in the fact that many of them suffer from some form of female weakness or disease which robs the face of its bloom, draws dark circles about the eyes, brings early wrinkles and sallowness, and stamps the face and figure with signs of ill-health. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will cure all these troubles, bring back the lost bloom, and remove the pains and ailments which make women grow old before their time. Guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case, or price ($1.00) refunded.

The great Dr. Boerhaave left three directions for preserving the health—keep the feet warm, the head cool, and the bowels open. Had he practiced in our day, he might have added: and purify the blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla; for he certainly would consider it the best.

FARM NOTES.

FROST TIME.

When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock,
And you hear the kyouck and gobble of the strutin' turkey-cock,
And the cluckin' of the guineys, and the cluckin' of the hens,
And the rooster's hally looyer as he tiptoes on the fence;
Oh, it's then's the times a feller is a-feelin' at his best,
With the risin' sun to greet him from a night of peaceful rest,
As he leaves the house bareheaded and gocs out to feed the stock,
When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock.

They's something kind o' hearty-like about the atmosphere
When the best of summer's over and the coolin' fall is here—
Of course, we miss the flowers, and the blossoms on the trees,
And the mumble of the hummin'-birds and buzzin' of the bees;
But the air's so appetizzin', and the landscape through the haze
Of a crisp and sunny morning of the airly autumn days
Is a pictur' that no painter has the colorin' to mock—
When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock.

The husky, rusty rustle of the tossels of the corn,
And the raspin' of the tangled leaves, as golden as the morn;
The stubble in the furries—kind o' lonesome like, but still
A preachin' sermons to us of the barns they growed to fill;
The strawstack in the medder and the reaper in the shed;
The hosses in their stall below -the clover overhead—
Oh, it sets my heart a-clickin' like the tickin' of a clock,
When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock!

THE LATEST NOVELTY.

The inter-State Hay Palace opened at Momence, Ill., Oct. 8. The building is only 206 feet wide in the centre. The main hall is a perfect circle 103 feet in diameter, flanked on the four sides with wings. A circular gallery, 18 feet wide, sweeps entirely around the main hall. The walls are built entirely of baled hay, with just enough baled straw to make a pleasing contrast in shading and color. The primary object of the exposition is to make a display of the varied products of eastern Illinois and western Indiana, which will include products of the farms, factories, forests, mines, quarries, and of the arts, domestic skill, and the accomplishments of the people of the district in music, oratory, and manual training.

A special feature is the display of the latest tools in machinery and implements for ditching, laying and making tile, and road machinery.

RENOVATING CURRANT BUSHES.

I know a farmer who "renovated" an old row of currants in this way. He cut out all the old wood and pruned the roots. He spaded up the soil well, and worked manure into it. Then he put old mortar, sand, and the like about the bushes to keep the weeds from getting a start. He allowed the hens to wallow in this, and they kept the worms from depositing eggs in the soil and preying on the bushes. The first season the canes made a growth of two or three feet. Only four were left to a plant. The second year he picked off all the blossoms and nipped off the ends of the bushes. They sent out many branches, and the third year he had a good crop of fine, healthy fruit. Perhaps it would have been as well to start new bushes, but he is under the impression that he gained something by saving a portion of the old ones.—Vick's Magazine.

Stomach Troubles,

Such as indigestion and loss of appetite, are extremely common. The functions of the stomach being weakened, the blood soon becomes impure, the system loses vigor, and you fall an easy prey to any prevailing epidemic. What you need to restore tone to the digestive organs is Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the best and most economical of all blood-purifiers.

"For several years I was troubled with indigestion, accompanied with pains in my side. My appetite was poor, and my health was gradually failing. Medicine recommended to me by my friends, did not have the desired effect. Finally I was advised to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and have done so, with the most beneficial results. My appetite is now good, I am free from pain, and feel once more in good health."—T. Loney, 32 Fairmount st., Cambridgeport, Mass.

"About a year ago, I found myself in failing health. I suffered indescribably from stomach trouble, blood disorder, and various weaknesses, and almost despaired of relief. Thinking Ayer's Sarsaparilla might possibly benefit me, I began taking it, and am pleased to state that a few bottles wrought an entire change in my condition. My health has been restored by its use, and I feel stronger and more vigorous than I have for many years."—Mary A. Garland, 1407 Michigan ave., Chicago, Ill.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla — FOR — Dyspepsia.

"During the summer and fall of 1887 I suffered very seriously from dyspepsia. Knowing the high standard of Ayer's medicines, I decided to try what Ayer's Sarsaparilla could do for me. It has helped me wonderfully. I regard the Sarsaparilla as invaluable in such cases."—James R. Williams, Delana, Ill.

"About a year ago I was greatly afflicted with indigestion, and suffered from headache and terrible pains in my stomach. I consulted a physician, who prescribed various remedies, but all to no purpose. I became worse instead of better, and was compelled to give up work. A friend finally advised me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I purchased a bottle, took it according to directions, and soon had the satisfaction of knowing that my health was improving. After taking two bottles of this medicine, I was able to resume work. My appetite returned, my food digested well, I was free from headache, and to-day I am as well as ever."—P. Dubé, Holyoke, Mass.

If the Mormon authorities are widely discredited by the country in one way, they are in another by their own people. The dispatches tell us of several Mormons arrested under the Edmund's law last week, among them a bishop of seven wives and an elder, both just returned from "missions," the latter with two girls for his harem. It is time such officials had heard of the "new departure" and become obedient to it.

The Protestant movement in Boston must flame higher. The Catholic Bishop Keane of Washington University has been called to preach the annual Dudleyan sermon at Harvard. He appeared in full canonicals, and spoke with evident pride of the compliment implied in the invitation. His sermon was a good one, if the reports give it correctly; probably better than many that have been heard from that liberal platform; but the selection of a son of Rome shows that policy rules at this great center for the education of our American youth, rather than patriotism or Christian conviction.

The doctors disagree again about their saloon patient. Two judges in Iowa and Kansas say that State legislation against the curse must start again from the beginning, so far as the "original package" is concerned. But the other side is now to be heard. Judge Leggett of Bloomfield, Iowa, charged the grand jury that since the Wilson bill passed it is a violation of Iowa law to sell liquor in any form whatever under the last decision of the Supreme Court of the State. Until that court settles the question finally it is the duty of the grand jury to consider the law valid and enforce it against all violators, whether by original package sales or not. Now let all the Iowa courts absorb a little moral courage and rule for justice untrammeled by technicalities, and hold back the saloon tiger until the legislature can act, if that must be the way out of the legal jungle into which the Supreme Court at Washington led us.

Since writing the above the daily press of Monday reports favorably. Judge John C. Sherwin of Mason City, Iowa, who was among the first to render a decision in an original package case allowing importers to sell in the State, now instructs a grand jury to indict all parties found selling within the State, and holds that the Iowa prohibition law is in full force and effect, the recent decision of the Kansas court to the contrary notwithstanding. Judge Shiras, of the United States District Court, at Des Moines, also rules that all sales of liquor in whatever form come within the reach of the State law and must be settled in the regular order in the State courts and the U. S. Supreme Court. The saloon is not yet beyond control. The hand of the people yet grips its throat, and a few more gasps is all it is likely to have of life.

JOHN G. FEE.

The Republican papers generally ignore the revelations of fraud in the census of Omaha and Lincoln, Nebraska, and attempt to satisfy their readers with a flat denial telegraphed from those cities. But the charges are repeated and the proof made out with such detail and care that it cannot be so easily brushed aside, even by the Republican press. The census figures themselves are a presumption of fraud. In 1880 the population of Omaha was 30,518, now it is reported to be 143,405. Either the former report was incorrect, or the last one is, or some extraordinary circumstance must be alleged to account for the increase. The old account has never been doubted, and no unusual event or discovery has made the city an attraction for 100,000 new citizens. The figures are the strongest kind of evidence of fraud; and the explanation of those who make the charge is entirely credible. The whiskey power stops at no crime to save itself. Stealing votes in this way is much cheaper than shooting preachers, as they did in Iowa.

The pulpits of this city are thundering from their heaviest batteries against the enemies of our common school system. The attack has been made in a dangerous and peculiar manner. The compulsory law of Illinois, though, similar was not so prominent as an issue as the Bennett law of Wisconsin. Yet the Democratic party eagerly pronounced for its repeal and the Republicans declared in their State platform that they were in favor of giving up the very feature that made it a compulsory law, and their leaders proposed to keep the school issue out of sight. They could not, however, control events, nor did they understand how hostile to American principles were the German politicians of Chicago. These men have formed a society for the perpetuation of the German language, customs and festivals in this country, which means of course the fostering of German infidelity, and general German usurpation. Some of the German Lutherans are helping them in their war on the school law by secretly pledging candidates for the legislature against that law. This, of course, could not long be hid, and there seems to be some American patriotism ablaze over the matter. The stump orators find the school-house a very popular institution, and people care to hear no more about the tariff when the educational law is touched. The result will not be doubtful. The law will undoubtedly be maintained by the popular vote. It contains nothing that need interfere with an honest parochial school, and if the Catholic priests had not found it in their way there would probably have been little objection heard against it.

The governor of Sierre Leone has taken notice of the death of the three young missionaries at Freetown last July, who refused medicine but trusted to be made well by faith. A warning is sent that there is danger that malignant diseases may be spread by persons holding such views, and the authorities admonish our government respecting them. The Missionary Review publishes other official communications on this case, and the editors, as well as Mr. Fisher of Kansas and others who are leading the Soudan missionary movement, have no sympathy with the theories which led to such fatal results. It seems that the missionaries were persuaded to accept the extreme "faith healing" doctrines in New York while on their way to Africa.

METHODISM IN ENGLAND.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES.

The liberalizing of Methodism has moved with rapidity during the last few years. The admission of laymen into conference about ten years ago, under somewhat heavy restrictions, does not satisfy the progressive minds of to-day. During the late conference a loud call has been made for the removal of existing barriers to progress and the inauguration of a different system of working. At present there are two conferences, or more accurately speaking, two sections of one conference; one of them being official or ministerial, intended for the maintenance of ministerial prerogatives; and the other is a representative or mixed conference, elected by the district meetings and consists of laymen and ministers, the main work of which is to provide funds for the carrying out of Methodistic projects. There is a widespread and growing desire that this representative conference should legislate on all matters so as finally to dispense with the ministerial section, and there can be little doubt that this will ultimately be affected. Speeches having such a ring of liberalism have never before been heard in Methodist conferences, and have led to the startling inquiry, "What will be the end of these things?"

An advance has been made this year in placing the Representative Conference in the middle of the session. This representative body is composed of men whose intelligence and character give weight and influence to their utterances; so much so that it will be awkward for the final official body to undo anything which the representative section has passed.

Another mark of progress is seen in allowing ministers to be reappointed to a circuit after a lapse of three years instead of six; and the entire rescinding of the rule forbidding a minister to be stationed in the same town more than six years in succession. It will now be possible for a minister to spend the whole of his ministerial life in two adjoining circuits of the same town, provided the circuits and minister are in accord.

Another important movement is the establishment of Methodistic councils in large towns for co-operative consultation and work, which councils have already taken part in the discussion of questions affecting the social, educational, and political welfare of the people. Such subjects have generally been shunned in Methodist communities, but these councils are helping to bring the denomination into line with the most advanced social workers among other Christian churches. The attempt to grapple with social problems is an onward movement of a most hopeful kind.

Methodism has not always courted the light, as is seen in the fact that reporters have been excluded from its assemblies, except such as have been officially appointed on the tacit understanding that only favorable things should meet the gaze of the public. The admission of newspaper reporters, though under galling restrictions, will tend to popularize the representative session (to which alone they will be admitted for the present), by calling public attention thereto, and so bring to the front the progressive spirits that are seeking to popularize the denomination by liberalizing it. The tendency of the age is towards democracy, and step by step Methodism is coming into line with the progressive churches of Christendom. This advance is operating upon the fossilized members of the church, and if they cannot be brought into the trend towards freedom, they will certainly be cast aside as those who are failing to perform their mission in the world.

Retford, England, Oct., 1890.

DR. WALDENSTROM ON INGERSOLL.

A PERSONAL REPLY TO THE STRICTURES OF THE CYNOSURE.

To the Editor of the Christian Cynosure:—I have been informed through the Swedish newspaper, the "Ykoffaren" of Sept. 3d, of this year, that you have made some remarks in your paper with reference to what I said in the account of my travels in America, respecting Ingersoll and his attitude towards Christianity. You obtained a translation of this paragraph through Professor Hasselquist, and you say that you conferred with the editors of two Swedish newspapers, and they declared the translation in substance correct. I cannot, of course, pass judgment upon that; but when you say, with reference thereto, that I seem to accord with Ingersoll and have become charmed with him, then I conclude that that translation has either been poorly executed, or else that you have not well read the contents of my words.

I will pass the remark that Ingersoll has no office in the United States army; I merely alluded to what had been said of him in that respect; he is also entitled Colonel. You say he is not a zealous, absolute temperance man. Well, that may possibly be true; my opinion was based upon statements by Ingersoll in the temperance cause; statements which may be classified among the most excellent and heart-touching that I have ever read. You say that Ingersoll is a defender of fraud, and a deceitful and contemptible character. I have, on the contrary, heard it stated that he is an upright and moral man; and when I hear two contrary opinions of a person, then I generally regard it the most proper and nearest to the truth to acknowledge the beneficial opinion. I am especially inclined to serious doubt when I hear that a person is being characterized as a bad character by men of opposite views. Alas! that the theological grudge, in such opinions, manifests itself in an unwholesome manner, is not seldom the case. Furthermore, there is hardly any prominent man of whom, from opposite camps, even respecting his personal character, distinctly opposite opinions are entertained; but I shall now pass that also. If Ingersoll is a bad man, and I have presented him as a moral man—an opinion which I have certainly not conceived at random [lit.: seized in the air]—I am far less at fault than if Ingersoll were a moral man, and I had called him a bad character.

The main issue in your article is doubtless Ingersoll's attitude towards the positive Christianity and my review thereof. You said that I had been charmed with him and that I am in accord with him. Not at all. No such intimation can be found in that paragraph which I wrote concerning him in my accounts of my travels in America. I have never thought that way, nor have I ever said so, and I ought not, therefore, to be presented as having thought or said so. I have seen enough of Ingersoll's writings to comprehend that he entertains a very hostile attitude to the Holy Scriptures, which for me have the value of a Divine revelation. If he may be called an uncivil, inveterate blasphemer of God, that I do not know; but I do believe that he may properly be called an infidel. As such I entertain no sympathies for his attitude at all, much less can it with any shade of truth be said that I am charmed with him. But what I have said, and what I can repeat, is, that I believe that Ingersoll has to a considerable extent been driven to his infidelity by the perversion of the Christian doctrine by the prevailing dogmatics.

There is nothing unusual in that at all. That occurs and has occurred in Europe innumerable times, and the same is certainly true in America also. When a person is unable to distinguish between the Christian doctrines as such, and the perverted dogmatics, then it is very easily ascertained that he will not attack the dogmatics in behalf of the Christian doctrine, but he attacks the Christian doctrine itself, which he believes to be identically the same as the dogmatics. Neither will anyone deny,—provided he knows the Holy Scriptures—that, as I said in the account of my travels, Ingersoll occasionally presents truths from the observance of which the American Christendom would surely derive considerable benefit. I will admit that I, for my part, have sometimes received very valuable instruction by taking into consideration the sayings of the opponents of Christianity. They have more than once pointed out truths which, although at first strenuously contested by the prevalent dogmatics, have eventually prevailed.

But I shall not occupy any more of your space, and I only wish to add in relation to your statement concerning Professor Hasselquist, that I bow with reverence before his Christian personality, but that I have not so profound a respect for the dogmatics, whose representative he is; and I reserve for myself the privilege to test the same with the Word of God, which is for me the only valid authority and guide. Respectfully,

P. Waldenstrom, D. D.

Gefle, Sweden, Sept. 24th, 1890.

THE LEAVENING POWER OF TRUTH.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

Each one of the parables of our Lord brings out a distinct phase of his kingdom. The parable of "the lost sheep" represents the searching love of God in Christ going out toward the sinner. The parable of "the lost piece of money" represents the searching love of the Spirit through the church. The parable of "the prodigal son" represents the rise and growth of repentance in the heart of the sinner in response to this searching love of God. The parable of "the hid treasure" represents those careless, indifferent, worldly souls, who do not expect any important outcome in life, and who stumble on the kingdom unawares. The parable of "the pearl of great price" represents those earnest, noble souls who feel there is something in life of unspeakable value, and who search for that good, and are rewarded with finding the kingdom. The parable of "the leaven" represents the kingdom coming "without observation." The parable of "the mustard-seed" represents the kingdom as it is known and read of all men. The one represents the intensive, the other the extensive, character of the kingdom. The one shows the power to assimilate and incorporate foreign elements, the other the power to develop from within and manifest itself outwardly.

1. A new principle is introduced. The leaven is a sour substance introduced into the meal for a specific purpose. So a new life is implanted in the believing soul. This Christ-life goes out in all the walk and conversation—in the home, the counting-room, the council chamber, the court-room, the church—wherever the believer is found. A new life is infused into society; a new life is in the veins of the nations. It will yet regenerate the world.

2. It is an unseen principle "hid." The greatest forces in nature are unseen. Gravitation holds the worlds in their orbits. Electricity carries the message under the sea and over the continent, moves the car and illuminates the city. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, you hear the sound thereof, but cannot tell whence it cometh nor whither it goeth: so is everyone that is born of the Spirit." The law, regulating the individual, domestic, civil and religious life of man for all time, was given at Sinai. The redemption of men was purchased on the cross. The Spirit was given on Pentecost which is to transform the nations. But the world knew it not. "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation."

3. It is an aggressive principle. "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." The new Adam in the soul makes war on the old Adam. It is a war of extermination. The house of Saul waxes weaker and weaker; the house of David waxes stronger and stronger. Wherever the kingdom has been established it has abolished polytheism and idolatry, elevated man, exalted woman, and moulded human society. In our land it has eradicated human slavery. It will yet banish every secret oath-bound society, as hurtful to the individual and a menace to our civil and religious liberties. It will destroy the saloon. It will wipe out Mormon polygamy and speedy and easy divorce. It will emancipate Sabbath toilers by the enactment of a national Sabbath law. And it will purify our civil service by excluding from office all enemies of truth and righteousness.

4. It is a progressive principle. From the moment a man believes until his death his sanctification advances. "Grow in grace." The kingdom is extending. Twelve disciples at first. Then three thousand were added. At the end of the first century there were 1,000,000. In the beginning of the tenth century there were 50,000,000. In the next five hundred years this number was doubled. In the beginning of this century there were 200,000,000. To-day there are 420,000,000. If the 1,500,000,000 in the world now were gathered in one audience they would occupy a field sixteen miles square. Divide that audience into four parts, and one-fourth are professing Christians. In the next generation the one-fourth will leaven the three-fourths. The church has the means at her command to preach the Gospel many times to every human being within the present generation.

5. It is ultimately universal—"until the whole was leavened." "The knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea." "The kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever."

Cincinnati, O.

Mackey, in his Lexicon of Freemasonry, Art. "Temperance," page 792, thus gives the status of Masonry on the Prohibition question:

"Resolutions have sometimes been proposed in Grand Lodges which declare the use of stimulating liquors in any quantity a Masonic offense. But the law of Masonry authorizes no such regulation. It leaves to every man the indulgence of his tastes within due limits, and demands not abstinence, but only moderation and temperance in things not actually wrong."

In view of the above delightfully elastic definition, the following testimony from a W. C. T. U. worker is interesting: "A Masonic banquet was held in Boston a few years ago in honor of 'St. John's day' (one of their great days). A copy of the official report fell into my hands, in which I read that they drained their glasses twenty-one times; and nine prominent ministers of Boston were in attendance, some of them being mentioned by name as lifting the glass to their lips and offering the toast! Now how many young men in that company do you suppose would, under these circumstances, refuse the cup or turn their glasses upside down? How many, indeed!" —National Home Guard.

The Law and Order league of Sioux City, Ia., has begun a vigorous war on liquor-dealers. It has arrested John Mandershield for selling, and has seized his immense stock of liquors. Liquor stocks generally are being moved across to Nebraska. John Arensdorf got a dozen drays and put his stock in Covington, across the river, recently. The war will be general and to the knife.

COLLEGE FRATERNITIES ADVOCATED AND DEFENDED.

The purpose of the Cynosure in opening a discussion of the college secret societies was to have their friends as well as opposers represented. With this end in view, gentlemen who are known to be favorable to them have been especially invited to contribute their views. A letter to Mr. John Addison Porter, editor of the Hartford Evening Post, received the following reply:

"I am complimented by your offer to present my views to your circle of readers, but at the same time I must decline the privilege of writing the article, which I would otherwise like to do, on the score of extra and very exacting work here at present on political and business matters.

"I do not know that I have anything to add to the general tenor of my article on this subject in the Century magazine, and which I presume you have read. There is no doubt in my mind but what college secret societies, or rather the best of them, are on the whole very advantageous, not only to the individual members who belong to them, but to the colleges in which they are located. I say this not only from theoretical study of the subject, but from actual observation in my own case, and that of many other young men with whom I am acquainted."

This letter is useful chiefly as an introduction to a considerable portion of Mr. Porter's article in the Century of September, 1888, given below:

COLLEGE FRATERNITIES.

Of these societies the first to assume the characteristics that are now recognized as their essential, albeit it soon lost them, had been Phi Beta Kappa. It was founded at Williamsburg, Virginia, December 5, 1776, in the very room where Patrick Henry had voiced the revolutionary spirit of Virginia. The story is a simple one: John Heath, Thomas Smith, Richard Booker, Armistead Smith, and John Jones, students at William and Mary College, then the most wealthy, flourishing and aristocratic institution of learning in America, believing that there was room for a more effective student organization than the one of a Latin name that then existed there, and recalling that one of their number was the best Greek scholar in college, resolved to found a new society, the proceedings of which were to be secret, to be known by the name of the three Greek letters that formed the initials of its motto—Phi Beta Kappa. The minutes are discouraging to those who would like to consider Phi Beta Kappa as a band of youthful enthusiasts planning a union of the virtuous college youth of this country, who were afterward to reform the world; and even more so to those who have declared infidel philosophy to be its cult. Youths of fine feelings and good digestion, they enjoyed together many a symposium like that on the occasion of Mr. Bowdoin's departure for Europe, when, "after many toasts suitable to the occasion, the evening was spent by the members in a manner which indicated the highest esteem for their departing friend, mixed with sorrow for his intended absence and joy for his future prospects in life." They called themselves a "fraternity." More thoroughly to enjoy the society of congenial associates, to promote refined good-fellowship, was the motive of these hearty young students who founded the first of the true Greek-letter fraternities, with (to quote from its ritual) "friendship as its basis, and benevolence and literature as its pillars"—one which thrived in their day as its successors on the same basis flourish in ours. So far from being inspirers, or a product, of American national spirit, or of a union of the wise and virtuous to which they invited all known American colleges, the only reference in their record to the Revolution is the single mention of the "confusion of the times" in the record of the final meeting; and the only recognition of the existence of other colleges is the record of the granting of charters for "meetings" at Harvard and Yale, which institutions were never mentioned again.

Meanwhile Cornwallis was coming nearer, and after having chartered additional chapters,—Beta, Gamma, Delta, Epsilon, Zeta (Harvard), Eta (Yale), and Theta,—the Alpha, or mother chapter, passed out of existence.

From Epsilon and Zeta have descended the latter-day chapters of Phi Beta Kappa. Of the fate of Beta, Gamma, Delta, Eta and Theta nothing is known. After a lapse of seventy years, William Short, of the mother chapter, at the age of ninety traveled from Philadelphia to Williamsburg and revived the Alpha, which, however, soon succumbed to the vicissitudes of its college. It is not known what was its first follower. But of those whose activity have been continuous to date, Kappa Alpha, founded in 1825 at Union College, adopting with its Greek name a badge planned similarly to that of Phi Beta Kappa (except that it was suspended from one corner, instead of from the center of one of its equal sides), and inspired by similar ends, began the career that has made it the mother of living Greek-letter societies. For Phi Beta Kappa has long since become an honorary, as distinguished from an active, institution, though the reunions of its chapters, especially of the old Zeta, now the "Alpha of Massachusetts," founded at Cambridge in 1779, are still noteworthy events.

Even before Phi Beta Kappa came into existence, Oliver Ellsworth, afterward Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, had founded Clio Hall at Princeton, and a few years later, in 1769, Whig Hall arose at the same college with James Madison, afterward twice President of the United States, for its founder; and from that day to this these friendly rivals have never ceased to exert a healthful influence on the intellectual life of Princeton. These were the prototypes, and are the most vigorous survivals, of what, for nearly a century, were the most flourishing and numerous of student societies—the twin literary societies, or "halls," generally secret, and always intense in mutual rivalry, which have been institutions at every leading college in the land.

Another and a third, though less homogeneous, class of student societies may be best described by noting separately its only important examples—at Harvard and Yale. The Hasty Pudding Club of Harvard also took its rise in those interesting and formative years just subsequent to the close of the Revolutionary war, and was founded, as its constitution says, "to cherish the feelings of friendship and patriotism." For the display of the latter virtue the club for many years was wont to celebrate Washington's Birthday with oration and poem, with toasts and punch. Alas, for these degenerate days! Conventional theatricals have taken the place of poem and oration, though, for aught I know, the toasts and punch may yet survive. "Two members in alphabetical order"—so ran the old by-laws—"shall provide a pot of hasty pudding for every meeting," and it is said that this practice is still religiously kept. That the banquet was not lightly considered by the old Harvard clubs may be seen in the tendency to exalt in the name of the club the peculiar feature of the club's fare, the Porcellian taking its name from the roasted pig—classical token of hospitality—that one of its bright young members provided for the entertainment of his fellows on a time when the feast fell to his providing. But the Porcellian has not wholly given itself up to the things that go with banqueting, for no other college society has so fine a library as it possesses. Indeed, its seven thousand well-selected and finely-bound volumes might be coveted by many less fortunate small colleges. The A. D. Club is a younger rival of the "Pork," and, in the comfort of its house, the brilliancy of its dinners, and its good-fellowship, is by no means inferior. The development of this species of undergraduate activity has taken a widely different and rather unique form at Yale. The Yale senior societies are the most secret and clannish of college societies. No outsiders ever enter their buildings, and their goings and comings are so locked in mystery that one can only guess what their aims and purposes are. A passion for relic worship and a taste for politics are generally ascribed to both, though the class of men taken by Scroll and Key differs widely from that chosen by Skull and Bones—the men of the former being selected, it is supposed, for their social position and qualities of good-fellowship, while those of the latter are usually good scholars or prominent athletes.

Thus we have the three classes of student societies—the old literary societies, still flourishing in the older colleges of the South, but languishing elsewhere, except at Princeton, where Clio and Whig are still the great institutions of the student body, and at Lafayette, where the Washington and Jefferson are scarcely less prosperous; the peculiar local institutions of Yale and Harvard, sui generis and not to be propagated; and the Greek-letter system of chartered fraternities, the chartered corporations of which are to-day the most prominent characteristic of American undergraduate social life.

The interval of thirty-five years from the founding of Kappa Alpha to the outbreak of the civil war was the golden age of these fraternities. They sprang up and multiplied with a persistency that should forever make firm the doctrine of the strengthening power of persecution. They were not confined to any one grade of college or to any particular part of the country. They flourished everywhere, and increased in number through almost every imaginable combination of the letters of the Greek alphabet. Many, of course, have vanished from the face of the earth. Of those that still remain, Delta Kappa Epsilon, founded at Yale in 1844, is the largest, and has now above 9,000 members, representing 32 active chapters situated in 19 different States; Psi Upsilon, originated at Union in 1833, enrolls some 6,600 members, distributed among 19 chapters in 10 States; and Alpha Delta Phi, founded at Hamilton in 1832, has a membership nearly as large. Delta Kappa Epsilon appears to have made good its claim to be recognized as a national institution; and while certain smaller fraternities are favorites in particular parts of the country, all barriers are rapidly disappearing before these three favorite societies in their march towards representation at all the important colleges of the country.

Though fraternities are organized less frequently now than formerly, because of the increased difficulty of competing with those that have been long established, still, as the colleges themselves grow, the chapters of the most flourishing fraternities grow with them; so that the increase of the system, as a whole, is both very regular and very considerable. Up to 1883, the date at which the latest general manual of the fraternities appeared, there were enrolled among the 32 general college fraternities of this country, forming an aggregate of 505 active chapters, no less than 67,941 members, representing every possible profession and branch of business, every shade of religious and political opinion, and every State and Territory of the United States. But these figures by no means tell the whole story of the growth and spread of the "little" college fraternities. Many colleges and advanced technical schools in every section of the country, besides welcoming the general fraternities to their privileges, have ambitiously started and preserved local fraternities that are limited or have no branches at other institutions, but nevertheless often enjoy a large share of local patronage. These societies, of which there are 16 now in existence, had a membership of 4077. But this is not all. The female students, not to be outdone, about a dozen years ago began to organize sisterhoods, from which males were ignominiously debarred from membership, and had meantime succeeded in building up 7 prosperous societies, with 16 chapters and 2038 members, situated mostly in co-educational institutions. When to this grand total of 74,056 names are added the large membership of the Princeton halls, the Harvard clubs, and the Yale senior societies, already described, together with the very numerous class organizations in various colleges, it may be seen how firm a hold the spirit of co-operation has taken upon the collegians of the country. The fraternities have grown far away from the persecutions of their early days, when the hands of all men and faculties were raised against them. Because they met in secret, and held themselves free from the intrusion of the faculty for one night in the week, and adorned their poor little badges with Greek letters, all evil and rebellious conduct was charged against them. Though their purposes were sensible enough, and good rather than evil has come from them, a nameless stigma of bad parentage still rests upon the whole system, to live down which, by an overplus of actual and visible good attainment, has not been possible until within recent years. But prejudice has an unequal contest with conviction. Through persecution, and poverty of opportunity, and lack of means the new society men fought their way towards solid ground, finding in their struggles and in their ambitions for the success and honors of their fraternities an incentive and charm college life had till then never yielded.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Military temperance societies.—A church conference.—Rome and Masonry a double-headed snake.—A singular article in the Woman's Voice.—Other matters.—The return of Rev. J. H. Brown.

It has been generally supposed that the weapons of a temperance society were not carnal, but moral and spiritual. However this may be, the late grand parade of the Catholic Total Abstinence Societies was more of a military display than anything else. The youngest were dressed in uniform while the older companies were armed with rifles and fixed bayonets, and went through all the tactics of regular militia, the Globe says, "with the self-possession of veterans."

Yesterday I attended a meeting of the Middlesex South Conference of Congregational Churches. The most interesting subject discussed was: "The Bible, and its place in education." It was opened by a former Chicago pastor, Mr. Emrich, who said many good things such as: "The Bible itself gives us the best idea of education," "Christian education has for its end the perfecting of man, body, soul and spirit." "Education is not merely knowledge but power—power to grapple with all subjects, and this power the Scriptures give to men." "Education should put us into a right adjustment with all the problems continually coming up." The discussion took the ground that the Bible should be retained in the public schools, and that it ought to be made more generally a factor in education. To bring up our youth on a diet of the old heathen poets, and leave them ignorant of all the transcendent beauties of our English Bible is essentially a Romish idea. New England has three colleges for women, Holyoke, Smith and Wellesley; and in every one the Bible has from the start held its own peculiar and important place in the curriculum of study. The men's colleges have not done as well but they are falling into line. Four of our leading institutions, Harvard, Williams, Amherst and Yale, have a distinct Bible course, and others are considering the matter. This is one of the most hopeful signs that Rome never can and never will rule this continent.

Deacon I. Leadbetter spoke of the duty of taking the stumbling-blocks out of the way. Jesus is the central point of the Bible from Genesis to Revelations, but with the Christ-rejecting lodges which in Boston outnumber the churches two to one, teaching men that they do not need any atonement, that the lodge is as good as the church, etc., it is plain to see that here is one great stumbling-block in the way of the Bible's taking its proper place in national education. His remarks were listened to approvingly and without dissent.

The lodge question is touching the churches much more nearly than Romanism. Her recruiting ground is among the saloons and in the slums. If she is growing rich and powerful, at least it is not by feeding like a parasite on the money and influence which she has diverted from their legitimate channels in the regular Christian work of our great Protestant denominations. But Rome and Masonry are a good deal like the Double-Headed Snake of Whittier's ballad:

> "For he carried a head where his tail should be
> And the two of course could never agree,
> But wriggled about with main and might,
> Now to the left and now to the right,
> Pulling and twisting this way and that,
> Neither knew what the other was at."

But such an intelligent body as the Independent Women Voters of Boston ought to know; and yet their very able organ, the "Woman's Voice," waxes wroth in a late editorial over the "insult" given to "the ancient and honorable organization" of Freemasonry by the action of Lowell Romanists in protesting against their laying the corner-stone of the new City Hall. What makes the article more amazing is that it bears the initials of E. T. H., and is presumably from the pen of Mrs. Eliza Trask Hill. She alludes to their "magnificent charitable work," which shows woeful ignorance either of Masonry or the Bible. Of course in this case we know it is the former, and yet what right has a woman holding such a position to be thus ignorant? She closes her article by saying, "The Freemasons throughout the country should at once send forth an indignant protest denouncing the Roman Catholic traitors who dare thus interfere with American liberties." Mrs. Trask's Protestant zeal is certainly getting the better of her wisdom—not to say her use of English. What constitutes a traitor? The right of petition belongs to all American citizens. All that the Roman Catholics of Lowell did was to use this popular and inalienable right. Did doing so make them "traitors?" Or has the lodge gained such power in our governments, state and municipal, that it can brand all who publicly oppose it with this ugly name? Either alternative is inconsistent with every idea of popular freedom. The petition was calmly and respectfully worded, and an eminently reasonable one:—"that the ceremonies should be purely civic and conducted by representatives of the City Government, and not by any secret organization." Surely the pouring of corn, wine and oil on the corner-stone is a religious, not a civic ceremony. Doesn't Mackey's Encyclopœdia call them "the elements of Masonic consecration?" Doesn't it say also that "in devoting anything to religious purposes the anointing with oil was considered a necessary part of the ceremony," and "hence Freemason lodges which are but temples of the Most High are consecrated to the sacred purposes for which they were built by pouring on corn, wine and oil." What a hue and cry would be raised if any Christian sect, Catholic or Protestant, had been invited to lay the corner-stone of Lowell's City Hall but this semi-pagan religion, with its rites borrowed from Baal worship, is allowed to step in, and forsooth every Romanist who exercised his freeman's right, and signed a petition against it, as well as every Protestant—and they are many—who would have signed it had the opportunity been given, must be branded as traitors!

Rev. Dr. Fulton, in becoming pastor of a Baptist church in Montreal, shows his purpose to carry the war into Africa. May success attend him. Canada evangelized may change entirely the future current of our New England history. She is too near a neighbor not to affect us mightily, either for good or evil.

The resignation of Miss Tobey as president of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., is greatly to be regretted, but she has felt a calling to go into distinctively evangelistic work, for which the duties and responsibilities of such a position leave her little strength or opportunity. Mrs. Susan Fessenden of Malden was unanimously chosen her successor.

It will be pleasant news to the many in our association who know and love Bro. Joseph H. Brown, to learn that he has returned from Minnesota, and will again make his home in New England. His health is good, and he reports his success in his mission work all that could have been expected, but the climate not agreeing with his wife, he is now in the hill country town of East Lempster, N. H.,—the only pastor in a population numbering 519 souls. God bless this faithful brother whose noble testimony in our conventions against the anti-Christ of the lodge none who have heard it can ever forget.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

THE SABBATH AND THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 22, 1890.

A number of good women are engaged in circulating a petition here for signers asking that the World's Fair shall not be opened on the Sabbath day, and I understand that it is proposed to have these petitions circulated all over the country by members of the W. C. T. U. and other organizations. It has been suggested that it would be well for ministers of the Gospel and the religious press to take up this question in order that signers might more readily be obtained; it has also been suggested that the Christians of the country should be satisfied with nothing less than an act of Congress formally prohibiting the opening of the great exhibition on the Lord's day. If these suggestions are to be adopted it is high time to be up and at work; it takes a great deal of pressure to convince Congress that the people desire certain legislation, and unless the members are convinced this legislation will not get through. Circulate petitions in every neighborhood and get them signed before Congress meets by as many people as possible. Then get some member of Congress to offer an amendment to the first legislation asked for by the managers of the World's Fair, prohibiting Sunday opening; then shower in your petitions and bring all of the moral influence you can command to bear upon Senators and Members in order to get them to support the amendment, and, my word for it, there will be no Sunday exhibits at the big Exposition. There must be no official violation of the Sabbath day in this country; it would be an insult to the intelligence and morality of the most intelligent and moral people in the world.

The license year in this District begins November 1, and under a rule adopted by the District authorities yesterday, was the last day upon which applications could be filed for retail liquor licenses. The temperance campaign has had a marked effect upon the number of applications. There are 500 of them against more than seven hundred retail licenses granted during the present year, and the Commissioners have given their words that only 400 retail licenses would be granted for the year beginning November 1. Of course 400 bar-rooms are just 400 more than ought to exist in the city; but taking all the circumstances into consideration, a reduction in one year of nearly one-third of the number of bar-rooms in Washington is a stride in the direction of temperance and moral reform, which follows temperance as a natural result, that the good people whose efforts have brought it about have every reason to be proud of. It is proper and just to say that Mr. Harrison has rendered invaluable aid to the local temperance workers in bringing about this curtailment of the liquor traffic, and has expressed his willingness to aid in still further curtailing it in the future.

There isn't a young woman living that would not have been benefited by listening to the address delivered at the annual meeting of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union by Mrs. M. L. Wells, who is well known as one of the national organizers of the W. C. T. U. She spoke for nearly an hour and held the earnest attention of her hearers every second. She dwelt particularly upon the influence exercised by the young women of the world, and told them that they held the key to the situation; that they could rule this nation, and make its laws; that society does as the young women say it shall do, and that social laws are like those of the Medes and Persians—there are no appeals from them. The speaker then paid a glowing tribute to the 60,000 young women who now belong to the Y. W. C. T. U.,—girls who have come out for purity in life, total abstinence in habit, and prohibition in the nation. In speaking of the manner in which the young women rule the world, Mrs. Wells asked: "Why does a young man eat with a fork instead of a knife? Because, the girls say it is not nice to eat with a knife. Why does he always put on his coat when he sits down to the table? Because the girls say he must. It is in the power of the young women to banish the liquor habit from society, and that done the saloon would soon have to go."

The Washington Y. M. C. A. was never in so prosperous a condition or increasing so rapidly in membership as at the present time, and the indications are that a new building will be necessary before long to accommodate the increased attendance, which is particularly noticeable in the evening.

THE NATIONAL HOME GUARD.

Boston, Mass., 309 Tremont St., Oct. 23.

Dear Cynosure:—Permit me through your columns to say a few words to my sisters of the National Christian Association.

Finding that there is not a clear understanding in the minds of some as to our little paper, I hope to state the matter so plainly that all may know why and how it originated and was put into the field. The ladies interested in the opposition to secret societies are not formed into bands as are our sisters interested in the home and foreign missionary work, or those of our numbers who take up the temperance cause. Therefore it was an impossibility to reach a large number of you to lay before you the plan of having a paper to to send out to carry light on this question to those of our Christian sisterhood who are ignorant regarding our work.

Many of us had felt for a long time the need of such a sheet, but nothing definite had come to our minds until good Bro. Gladwin wrote, suggesting that a monthly be started by the ladies to be sustained by themselves. At the suggestion of "mother" Mary A. Blanchard I consulted several ladies in Wheaton, reading them the letter above referred to, which all sanctioned; and after coming to Boston I did the same here and in Wellesley, Worcester, and Putnam, Conn., besides writing many letters, so as to obtain the minds of as many as possible before embarking in the enterprise. Miss E. E. Flagg, known to you all by her excellent letters and Bible lessons, had for some time been writing letters and enclosing literature to ladies, hoping to interest them. A monthly sheet could be sent out so much cheaper and would be like a fresh letter each month; and though her time was already well occupied, for the sake of the good and the end desired she offered to act as editor; and while she has acted in that capacity without remuneration, as have all those engaged in its publication, it is not a private enterprise in any sense, as its whole support has come from the women in whose name it is sent out, namely, "the women of the National Christian Association," and it is to you, "under God," that it will have to look for its continuance and support.

The average circulation has been 3,800 monthly. Some of the money is pledged per month. Some has come in as donations, and some from those who wished to subscribe for one or more copies to their own or some friend's address. All these ways are good; but the design of this little paper is not to reach those who already take the Cynosure, or some other paper which is outspoken against the secret lodges, only as they may wish them as fresh matter to hand to others; but it is designed to send out to Christian women throughout this whole land, to call their attention to a form of evil they may have felt but not realized.

Thus it is that you are urged to remember this new enterprise and to feel that it is your own, and as such we should provide for our own.

There are, as I said before, some who have agreed to give a certain sum per month, but we need more who will give systematically. Are there not fifty women who will write to the publisher saying, "I will give 25 cents per month to carry on the National Home Guard, so we may scatter it more and more." This present month it has gone out to the wives of the Congregational ministers in twenty different States, all west of New York and Ohio; and besides, to many temperance and other Christian workers.

As its name signifies, it is a national affair, having gone into every State and Territory in the Union every month since it began its race.

Quite a number of letters have been received from those to whom it has been sent, who had not known that there was any opposition to these secret societies, saying they were in hearty sympathy and expressing gratitude that such a paper had been started. Extracts from some of these I will give in another article in the near future. Let me hear from fifty, yea, an hundred of my co-laborers, saying what they will do to help on this good work. Yours for the truth,

A. E. Stoddard.

Reform News.

ALBERT PIKE'S "HOLY HOUSE."

Washington, D. C., Oct. 24, 1890.

Dear Cynosure:—Jonathan Elliot in his history of Washington written 1830 said, "Mount Vernon is healthy during all the year except fall, when agues and bilious fevers prevail." As a company of district militia were marching, it is said a little boy exclaimed, "Oh mamma, mamma! see dem sogers!" To which the mother replied, "Dem ain't sogers, child; dems the district malaria!" I have not escaped the district malaria, but am feeling unusually well at this writing.

Albert Pike has again marshaled his legions and they hold nightly conclaves and banquets. Little is made known to the public through the press, except the names of those who are given new degrees, and great sounding titles. The Washington Star of yesterday, after giving the names and titles of about a hundred of these Masonic "Supremes," says: "Last evening at the cathedral on G street the degree was conferred upon a number of candidates. The Supreme Council was escorted from the Holy House of the Temple [meaning the rebel general Albert Pike's residence], the official residence of the Grand Commander, to the Scottish Rite Cathedral by Albert Pike Consistory, No. 1, of this city, headed by the United States Marine Band. Sir Knight John H. Olcott acted as Grand Marshal of the escort."

At the banquet, the toast "Our babies" was responded to by C. G. Morrill of Kansas City. Whether reference here was made only to the blue lodges, or all the swarm of secret societies which are filling our land, the uninitiated may only conjecture. But, dear reader, do not you think the hosts of hell will hold high carnival as the "prince of the power of the air" gathers in his minions.

A bullet fired into the brain of Alfred B. Mullett by himself gave occasion for another Masonic funeral yesterday. The Star says of the funeral:

"The first service was that of the Episcopal church, and it was read by Rev. Dr. Harding of St. Paul's church. Just as this was concluded the Knights Templar and other bodies of the Masonic fraternity arrived, and representatives of the former, in full regalia, marched into the room, where the coffin of him who had been a fellow knight, was covered with knightly insignia. The ritual was read by Eminent Commander Brummett and Prelate Macfarlan of Washington Commandery, No. 1. The ceremony was most impressive. Gaslight, and that dimmed, afforded the only illumination in the room, and in it glittered the swords and jewels. Ten blades upheld by as many members of Washington Commandery, formed a pointed arch over the casket during the earlier portion of the service. When the Sir Knights had retired, the room was occupied by members of Hiram Lodge, No. 10. Worshipful Master James B. Newlin read the ritual, the glimmering tapers were extinguished and the Masonic ceremonies were concluded."

Mr. Mullett has for years been a prominent citizen of Washington. He was a skillful architect, and at one time being the Supervising Architect of the Treasury. Under his direction the Army and Navy building was erected. Accustomed to prosperity and excesses he was poorly prepared to stand the little adversity which came, and his star went out in night.

What warnings to young men are on every hand! The glittering sword of the professional strutter cannot give true happiness here, and will avail nothing before the Great Judge.

My success in securing readers for our paper among colored friends in this city is very encouraging. I am visiting pastors and leaders in various churches. Some twenty of those I have seen have received me cordially and become readers of our paper. President King of Wayland University will doubtless arrange for me to address the students there soon. I hope to visit Howard University to-day. Rev. Beckett of the Metropolitan M. E. church, the largest of that denomination in the city will arrange a service for his people soon. My meeting in Plymouth Congregational church was well attended, notwithstanding it was a rainy night. The people were very cordial and I shall hope to meet them again. I was rejoiced to see Bro. Countee's letter in the last Cynosure. The Lord rewards those who are faithful to him.

FROM THE CALIFORNIA WORK.

From a business letter from Bro. Nichols we take a few extracts that serve to show the difficulty of his work. He writes under date of October 16:

"I circulated the 'Address to American Pastors' in the M. E. preachers' meeting last Monday and it caused something of a flutter. The P. E. is a Mason, and called the attention of the pastor of Central Church to the fact of my identification with the N. C. A., who remarked, 'Masonry is the meanest thing I know of, and Anti-masons are meaner.' Fine logic and moral philosophy, that!

"So far, I have been unable to secure any place to lecture. The churches are all afraid to have the lodge discussed in their places of worship. Nearly all the anti-secrecy churches in this place admit persons belonging to some of the secret orders. If I were able to hire a hall and advertise, I would do so. I am doing my utmost to secure subscribers for the Cynosure, and in the distribution of tracts at the churches, missions and to individuals. Where I find a man who has ever read the Cynosure I am almost certain to get his subscription. I ought to have a large number of Cynosures to distribute amongst church members and Christian workers.

"As soon as I get the cause under way here, I will work my way down to Los Angeles. The people in that section of the State are better material for N. C. A. work than here. Most of the Methodist churches and conferences are infested with secrecy.

"I learned a terrible thing about the Odd-fellows' temple here. A young man who used to work in a restaurant under it and was converted, told it. The building was built by a company, and has underground vaults, named after heathen gods and with the constellations and heathen symbols gilded on the ceilings, and used by the order as a resort for drunkenness and debauchery." How would it do for me to write up this matter and Harcourt and Dr. Barrows for the Cynosure. I think that some of the diabolical doings of the Board of Bishops of the M. E. Church."

We pray that Bro. Nichols may be sustained and supported in his arduous work. As he has no State Association to raise funds, any money sent to the N. C. A. treasurer to aid him will be forwarded promptly.

Correspondence.

MISSION WORK IN SOUTHEASTERN KENTUCKY.

Whitley county, Ky., is in the heart of the Cumberland mountain region, peopled by Unionists, who are largely Baptists of the most intense kind. There are, however, some of the Cumberland Presbyterians who readily affiliate with us, and many Methodists, who stand on one angle of the triangular relation of the three denominations.

I preach three times a day, riding in the saddle thirteen miles. To do this I go down to the lower end of the parish Friday or Saturday, and start northward, Sabbath morning, preaching at 11 o'clock, 3 o'clock, and in the evening. We have church buildings at each place, but the three places have suffered from betrayal and neglect till other churches have come in at one point and scattering resulted at all of them.

I came over the range on horseback from Tennessee 150 miles. The trip would interest you, had I the ambition just now to "write it up." The poorest of the poor live on that route,—people who see $5 a year in money, and no more; who are where New Englanders were fifty years before the first railroad. Many of them do not have even tallow candles. A photograph of one scene would have shown the host politely holding a frying-pan with a burning rag lying in the fat, lighting me to bed, and holding it in the doorway till I said, "All right." The pleasant thing about it is that they make no apologies. Everywhere, they were kindly disposed, very hospitable, refusing my money as a rule, and I could only avoid offense by making the wife or daughter a "present."

They are almost universally religious; have services once in two weeks, which by alternation between neighboring districts gives them a pretty fair supply of preaching and Sabbath-schools. They seem rather contented, but not animated. The results of coffee and tobacco are manifest in the bloodless look of some of them—which is partly due to living so much in darkness. There are no windows, light entering at the door,—rag-light for night cooking, smoke invisible but smellable, and a regular accompaniment of supper-getting. Nothing to read; no pictures; chairs hard, too low for the table; food monotonous and subject to culinary accidents; women too tired, girls and boys too old with coffee; clothes too old also,—such is the picture which the stranger carries away from many of the mountain "homes" remote from the railroads.

But they know about the great busy world outside. The school-master is there, and he is generally a bright young man and not a "foreigner," but a native-born. At one place I found a bushy-headed young man sitting at the fire with a book and so busy over it that I hardly felt at liberty to interrupt him. A stout young woman, barefooted, proved to be his wife. Two children stood by in shirts. He was having a vacation as teacher, and was putting in his time to get ahead of the classes and pass examination for a higher grade. When he found I could help him, he was in an ecstasy and managed to detain me quite into the afternoon, and I found that he had a mind equal to any undertaking,—vigorous, quick, original, exact,

The opportunities offered for easy religious conversation made the hard trip a pleasant reflection. There is a possibility in this people that deserves our best efforts; and political prejudices are passing away. The new parties are doing good in disintegrating the old political solidity. The Prohibition movement meets general endorsement by the people. It has reached the option stage and will not go back. Yours very truly, A. J. Chittenden.

THE WORLD'S FAIR AND THE PASSION PLAY.

Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 20, 1890.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—A meeting was held yesterday afternoon in the Chambers Presbyterian Church to protest against opening the World's Fair in Chicago on Sabbath-day. One thousand people are reported present. Samuel Small was the chief speaker. He said: "The Constitution of the United States is devoid of all religious character. We have nothing to appeal to but public sentiment. I am in favor of amending the Constitution so that we will have a basis for the Sabbath and all other laws based on Christian morality. The press has interviewed the Commissioners of the World's Fair, and the majority of them are in favor of opening the gates on Sabbath. The Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia in 1876 closed its gates on the Sab bath. The English-speaking exhibitors in the Paris Exposition kept their exhibits covered on Sabbath; and it would be a burning shame to open the World's Fair on the Sabbath. Chicago may wish it, but the Christians of this nation are opposed to it." Strong, ringing resolutions were adopted.

I have spent the last few days here assisting Rev. R. C. Montgomery of the Kensington Reformed Presbyterian Church at his communion. On Sabbath afternoon I preached on Moral Reforms in the Third Reformed Presbyterian Church, Rev. Matthew Gailey, D. D., pastor. This is an old and strong congregation. Dr. Gailey has been their pastor for twenty-two years.

On Friday I had a very pleasant interview with Dr. Barr of the Christian St. United Presbyterian Church, Dr. Collins of the Christian Instructor and Rev. J. C. McFecters of the Second Reformed Presbyterian Church. Calls were also made on Rev. John Graham of the First Reformed Presbyterian Church, Rev. Fitzgerald of the Frankford Ave. United Presbyterian Church and Rev. Crowe of the Susquehanna Ave. United Presbyterian Church.

On Monday I attended the Presbyterian ministers' meeting in their Book Rooms. The paper was read by Dr. Thompson on "The Passion Play." He witnessed it in Bavaria last August. It occupied eight hours. It was to him a most disgusting affair. He would never go again and advised all his friends to stay away. It is sacrilegious and borders on the sin against the Holy Ghost. The brethren expressed themselves as in fullest sympathy with the views expressed, and asked that the paper be published.

HOW ABOUT THE GOOD TEMPLARS?

Greene, N. Y.

In the Cynosure of Oct. 16 is an article by Albert M. Paull on the Good Templars. Now, dear editor, if he knew as much about the Good Templars as I do, he would feel ashamed of his own production. I belonged to the Sons of Temperance and afterwards to the Good Templars, and will say that in moral character they compare favorably with the Christian churches; and many of them, yea, most of them, members of the churches. I was chaplain and used the prayer. I think it a good one. He says, "this worship of ungodly men and women," Good Templars are not such; but most of them fit for membership in the best of churches, and were and are engaged in the glorious work of making their friends and neighbors better; and I hope the said Paull may never do anything worse than they do; but I will leave him, simply saying he does not know what he is talking about.

Some time ago there was another article from some such a man as Mr. Paull saying he would not vote the Prohibition ticket if they nominated men for office that belong to secret societies. He might say that if the Prohibition party was the largest party in the country then he might talk. So far as I am concerned, I belong to the Sons and the Templars; and I do not think there is anything about them that is very wicked, neither do I think they should be condemned with Masons, Odd-fellows, G. A. R. and others. Yours respectfully, James Ramsey.

Note.—For friend Ramsey's information we would say that Bro. Paull has been a member of a secret temperance order (perhaps more than one), and has made a careful study of the religious features of them all. His argument is not understood by the writer of the above. It is, in brief, that since the Good Templars do not require evidence of saving faith in Jesus Christ, a lodge of the order may have many, or few, or not one such person in its membership. It has, however, in every case a form of prayer, etc., forming a religious ceremony. This must be addressed to some being. The Bible says to God or devils. If we say it is to God, then such prayers spoken by impenitent and faithless persons, are blasphemous. It is evident that they were never honestly intended by the framers of the order to be addressed to the true God, else there would have been also some provision to have them addressed according to the will of God given in his Word. We must therefore condemn this society for providing a religion for men who have no true faith—no care for the true religion. Though one lodge might all be able to honestly use a prayer to God through Christ, in the next town there might be another of exactly opposite character. Beside in its pledge of perpetual secrecy these orders are both un-American and un-Christian, and no patriot or follower of the Lord Jesus should have anything to do with them.

PITH AND POINT.

GOV. ST. JOHN'S SPEECH AND TESTIMONY IN MICHIGAN.

John P. St. John, of Kansas, devoted a considerable part of his lecture at our county-seat, a few weeks ago, to the tariff question—speaking much in favor of free-trade, but not particularly for those things that the poor and hard-working farmers cannot afford or have no taste for. Of course intoxicants should be prohibited as a beverage not legalized by taxation. I asked him if he was a reader of the Cynosure now, and he answered affirmatively, and added, "I am member of no secret society and my work is all open and above board." As to the liquor traffic, among other things he said in brief: The saloon keeper is no worse than those who grant him license and those who sign his bonds; the person granting a license no worse than those who make the license law, and they no worse than those who vote for men whom they know will make such law. I ask, are not the people who vote for the saloon the real liquor sellers, and the licensed men their agent, as Prof. Grimes put it?—R. S. Nichols, Jonesville, Mich.

GRATITUDE AND HOPE.

I feel greatly encouraged in the growth and enlarged usefulness of your paper. The Lord has done great things for us, whereof we are glad. God in his providence is opening very many wide doors for the truth to enter. Oh, that we could arise and possess the land! I earnestly desire to do my part in lifting up a standard for the truth, when the enemy is coming in like a flood. It grieves me I can do so little. We endeavor to divide the Lord's tenth among the varied avenues and calls in the home and foreign field as best we can. I would be glad to do more. It is according to what a man hath that is required. [$5.00 are enclosed.] I trust that God will open the hearts of those that have this world's goods to do his work. I am so pleased with the Christian Cynosure. Its clean, pure face is a welcome visitor in our house. I feel thankful for the manifestations of God's favor and presence. Read the 129th Psalm and you have my feelings.—James Matthews, Morissa, Ill.

WHAT MAY BE FORCED UPON US.

If we had the means we would like to do more to help on the work. Secretism is becoming so violent, I think the law will have to take hold of it, and put it down soon. The earth appears to be filled with violence, but God reigneth. He can make the wrath of man to praise him. —Wm. Matthews, Ambrose, Pa.

GOOD WORDS.

Still wishing the cause prosperity.—I. M. Pidgeon, Salem, Iowa.

We hope to send our donation to the N. C. A. work next month.—M. B. Park, Alexandria, Neb.

I like the paper very much, and am in harmony with the truth it holds.—Rev. H. W. Fish, Saratoga, N. Y.

Please find $5.00 enclosed: $1.50 for the renewal of the Cynosure, and $3.50 to aid the work of the N. C. A., and will send you $5.00 more by April 1, 1891. Would like to do more but am at great expense in our church work. Pray for us in our struggle against the lodge.—Jacob Phillips, Smithdale, Ill.

LITERATURE.

Christian Life Songs. By S. W. Straub. Price 35c. S. W. Straub & Co., Chicago.

This new music book is intended especially for the Sabbath-school, but like the late popular "Gospel Hymns" it is adapted to prayer and praise meetings and social worship generally. A considerable portion of its new music is of the sentimental chorus and repetition order which is happily passing out of fashion in our best conducted Sabbath-schools. This transition is hinted at in one of the excellent suggestive notes which open the volume. "Sing one or more solid church tunes at every session," is the wise counsel of the author. "All will like it," which is very true; though some indifferent and inexperienced musicians are very sure it is not so, and that children must always be singing "Hi-diddle-diddle;" than which nothing is more untrue. Another excellent note is, "Explain in simple language the meaning of the words, and insist upon proper expression of them." If this were often done children would understand that their singing is part of the worship of the holy God, and not a mere formality on the one hand, or a time to scream on the other.

Our Day in the current number opens with an article on the observance of Sabbath day at the World's Fair of 1893 by Rev. W. F. Crafts, written with all the earnestness and vivacity of this widely known advocate of the sanctity of the Lord's day. He makes so clear a case that even cupidity cannot answer it, and it can only be defied by those that hate the day and its Lord. "Is Henry George a Safe Leader," by Prof. E. W. Bemis of Vanderbilt University, discusses a subject of national importance, which has engaged some of our most acute minds. Prof. Bemis is not always so clear in his generalizations as a writer on social science should be to secure undivided attention, but his answer to Henry George is an able one. There is no doubt that the reverses of business and the financial stress into which many farmers are cast is inclining the people more and more to a trial of the single tax theory as a possible remedy for difficulties which seem to have no solution under our present methods. Mr. Cook's portion this month is his Monday lecture on Mormonism, and another on "New Combinations of Temperance Forces." The former, while it charms the reader with its eloquent and strongly drawn conclusions, yet leaves the question unanswered, What would Mr. Cook say now, in view of the recent manifesto advising submission to the law against polygamy? The concluding editorial notes are a most valuable part of the number.

The publishers of the Century announce that they have secured for that magazine a series of articles consisting of extracts from the manuscript of one of the most famous autobiographers of our generation,—the Talleyrand Memoirs, the publication of which was deferred for thirty years by the wish of Talleyrand when he died in 1838, and again postponed at the request of Napoleon III., who was permitted to examine extracts in 1866 or 1868, and who found them to conflict with his uncle's memoirs written from St. Helena. The appearance of these memoirs has been long looked forward to —not only for the light they will throw upon the events of one of the most interesting of historical epochs, but for the personal opinions and experiences which they are known to contain. Talleyrand, made a prince of the empire by Napoleon, in turn leader of the clergy of France and excommunicated by the pope, president of the French assembly, ambassador to England, friend of kings and ministers, three times foreign minister of France under three different masters—the Directory, Napoleon, Louis XVIII. (winning the post the first time by reason of his remarkable utterances upon America and her relations to the mother country, England), was without question the ablest diplomatist of an age when the art of diplomacy was at its height. It was Talleyrand who, after the defeat of France in 1814, succeeded, at the congress of Vienna, in breaking up the confederation of the allies and re-establishing the power of France among the nations of Europe, and who concluded the secret treaty between England, Austria and his own country.

Mr. F. G. Attwood, the widely known cartoonist, began his permanent connection with the Chicago America in its issue of October 16. In a clever, instructive cartoon he represents Napoleon McKinley driving away the commerce of the world, while forty centuries look down upon the performance with amazement. Mr. Attwood's cartoons will alternate with others by Frank P. W. Bellew (Chip), who has also been engaged to draw regularly for America, an arrangement which will add strength and variety to its cartoon department.

LODGE NOTES.

The grand council of Ancient and Improved Order of Red Men" held its annual meeting in Indianapolis last week. There are 109 lodges in the State.

A new student chapter of the order known as the Alpha Phi was established at Cornell University lately. The ceremonies were followed by a banquet held very appropriately in Odd Fellows' Hall.

It was reported from Pittsburg, Tuesday, that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers which had been in session several days had rejected the proposal of federation with the trainsmen's organization.

The Imperial Council of the Order of United Friends met in Buffalo last Tuesday morning. There are over 23,000 members in the order, and $476,000 was paid out on death claims during the past year.

The sixth annual convention of the Catholic Knights of Illinois was held at East St Louis last week. There are forty-seven branches in the State with a total membership of 998, carrying insurance to the amount of $1,324,500.

The Supreme Lodge of Odd-fellows, composed of men, has ordered that "Hereafter no National Conventions of Degree of Rebekah shall be held." The Rebekahs are the foolish women who think themselves honored by getting into the woodshed of Odd-fellowship.

The "Daughters of St. George" is the title of a woman's lodge, presumably English, which has 2,200 members in the country. The annual meeting was lately held in Chicago by some two dozen women, who spent a considerable time in initiating other women. It is an assessment organization.

Abner M. Wright, a prominent and wealthy business man of this city, former president of the Board of Trade, died a few days since. Although the papers gave his membership in the Masonic lodge prominent mention, it was very significant that the order was not invited to perform the funeral ceremony.

The Houston and Texas Central railway has employed Negro watchmen in its yards for several years. About two weeks ago a demand was made for their removal by the Knights of Labor, the places to be filled with whites. The demand was refused and the foremen all struck. "Grand Master" Wilkenson of the order tried to adjust matters, but without avail, as the officials of the Central argue that if the colored men are good enough to sit in the councils of the Knights of Labor they should be good enough to work with.

The "Supreme Commander" of the American Legion of Honor announces the death of a member who once held the same office whose secret lodge proclivities are thus set forth: "He was a member of the Masonic order for thirty years, and was a Past Master of his lodge; a Past High Priest of his chapter, and a Past Eminent Commander of his commandery. In 1879 he became interested in mutual beneficiary insurance, and was most zealous in introducing and building up many of the orders. He was a member of many of them, and held many prominent positions." He instituted twenty-two Councils of the Am. Legion of Honor during four months. March 25, 1880, he assisted in organizing the Grand Council of Pennsylvania, and was elected Past Grand Commander and the first Representative to the Supreme Council. At the first session of the Supreme Council he was elected Supreme Vice-Commander, and at the annual session of the Supreme Council, held at Boston, August, 1881, he was elected Supreme Commander. During the following year he instituted 350 new Councils.

REMARKABLE OFFER!

Nearly everyone is familiar with the name, but it has been estimated that only one in every two hundred and eighty persons in the United States is fortunate enough to have access to the valuable information contained within the covers of the grandest work ever written by mortal man,

Webster's UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words, we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent.

Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface.

In addition to the 100,000 words it contains a portrait of the author, together with his biography and a valuable table of 12,000 synonymous words.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and seventy-five cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1890.

As promised last week we present the views of Mr. Porter, editor of the Hartford Evening Post, on the College Secret Societies this week, and will print further from his Century article in our next as well as from ex-President Julius H. Seelye.

Our portrait is of Rev. John G. Fee, the reformer of Kentucky and founder of Berea College, a name everywhere known to be honored. Mr. Fee's position against the secret lodge system is as well known as was his hatred of slavery. His history should be better known among the students of America. They will find in it one of the noblest exhibitions of devotion to God's truth and self-sacrifice for the good of humanity which American churches or colleges can supply. It is an example that will stimulate their moral courage and strengthen their faith in God.

DR. WALDENSTROM'S REPLY.

We respectfully request the Swedish papers which have published our strictures on Dr. Waldenstrom, to give also this our reply to his letter in this number. We ask this favor especially of the "Missions Wannen" of Chicago, and the "Ykoffaren" of Sweden, as a kindness to all parties.

Our statements concerning the character of Mr. Ingersoll were not controversial, but matters of fact within our personal knowledge. The writer was often in the court-room, City Hall, in Washington, D. C., when Mr. Ingersoll was defending the notorious "Star Route" frauds. The opposing attorney had a strict gentlemanly bearing; but Mr. Ingersoll took offence at some remark and threw his inkstand at him. The judge called to order, and Ingersoll said, "I apologize to the court, but not to that man!" "I WOULD THROW AN INKSTAND AT GOD ALMIGHTY IF HE SHOULD TREAT ME SO!" The National Republican next morning gave a severe rebuke to Ingersoll. As he professes disbelief in God, his vulgar blasphemy is a gratuitous insult to all who believe and trust in God for their salvation. His sole redeeming trait is genius, and of this he makes a most deplorable use.

We expressed, and still feel regret that Dr. Waldenstrom should have suggested that this man, who scouts all that other men deem sacred, including such minds as Webster and Gladstone, had probably been driven into infidelity by false views of the atonement held by some of the best men on earth. It seemed like apologizing for him.

As to the controversy concerning "vicarious" atonement, we do not know how this matter is treated in Sweden; but we do not believe there are any heresies on this subject taught here by Scandinavian or other Christians. All receivers of the Bible believe that "Jesus Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures" (1 Cor. 15: 3). Dr. Waldenstrom says, in his "Blood of Jesus," p. 5, the world "could not be saved in any other way." And if the Swedish king and bishops are any of them unregenerated, we do not think splitting the hairs of doctrine on the atonement will reach and remedy the evil. All enlightened Christians, too, believe that Christ and the Father are one in the august and stupendous work of the atonement. And if this beloved brother, in visiting this country, had devoted his energies to warning the Americans of the fatal influence of the secret lodges, which omit Christ and yet promise salvation by their ceremonies, he would have laid us under lasting obligation; and, perhaps, reached and saved his king and State church bishops from the accursed secrecy of the lodge, and our land from the papacy, the Mormon Endowment, and all "traditions of men," which present themselves as substitutes for the atonement, and which, like the maelstrom off the Scandinavian coast, make men giddy with the dark whirl of their sorceries, and sink them irretrievably beyond hope.

THE FREE METHODISTS.

This denomination is little more than thirty years old. Its founder, Rev. B. T. Roberts, who is still its first "superintendent," was cast out of the M. E. church on a charge of disrespect to the authorities of the church, based chiefly on a paper censuring the methods of raising funds for building a popular Methodist church in Buffalo. Among the methods, condemned by Mr. Roberts, were dancing booths, church lotteries, etc. There are now two other superintendents, viz., Rev. E. P. Hart of California and Rev. G. W. Coleman of Wisconsin.

Supt. Roberts spoke with exceptional power at the Conference in Chicago last April against secret lodges. And the Free Methodist church disfellowship all secret societies, vote for prohibition, and, in short, are pronounced against everything which obstructs the cause and kingdom of Christ. The tenet to which most prominence is given by this denomination is sanctification or personal holiness, in seeking which, as in the days of the Wesleys, many of them give violent expressions to their emotions by shouting, screaming, leaping, etc.

There would seem to be one defect in the teaching of this interesting people, viz., their ministers overlook or omit the fact that in the book of Job, perhaps the oldest of the inspired writings, devils are said to attend religious meetings. And ever since that time the profoundest attention of demons has been given to those churches which set themselves squarely to resist the works of the devil. The soothsaying damsel of Philippi, and the sorcerers Elymas and Simon Magus, were actuated by demons in the revivals conducted by the Apostles. See Acts 8: 20; 13: 10 and 16: 18. The Free Methodists, as one of the most faithful and aggressive denominations against the works of the devil, are most exposed to his assaults. They therefore need faithful instruction as to his "devices."

In the beginning God appears creating, and Satan marring and mingling his work with God's. Both angels and devils, heavenly hosts and Satanic legions, existed prior to our globe. The angels ("sons of God") "shouted for joy" when earth's foundations were first laid. Job 38: 7. And at the first recorded meetings of the angels, the devil came among them. Job 1: 6 and 2: 1.

At the Free Methodist General Conference in Chicago last week, Superintendent Coleman insisted that the praying should be "with the Spirit and with the understanding also." And he laid strong emphasis on "the understanding." But sincere women screamed and nervous men leaped and shouted in ways which excluded all use or exercise of "the understanding." We have witnessed similar manifestations in seven camp meetings in the State of Pennsylvania in one year, and, indeed, in various parts of the United States, and have known no good to come of them. Now, while Satan, as god of this world, can work as effectually in cold and formal as in hysterical and nervous persons, churches which devote themselves to reforms, pulling down the strongholds of Satan, as did the Apostolic churches, are most exposed to his terrible "devices." And we respectfully suggest to the ministry of the Free Methodist church, that they take special pains to enable their people to "stand against the wiles of the devil:"

1. By showing them that good and evil spirits may be influencing persons at once.

2. That the best Christians, as Peter, are most exposed to their siftings.

3. And that extravagancies and indecencies do not help but hinder the cause of Christ and the interest of religious meetings.

These troubles cannot be cured by authority, as no one man's taste is a universal standard, and "haply he may be found to fight against God." But simple Bible teaching concerning the agency of devils in religious meetings will cast them out.

STATE OF THE CHURCH.

The Free Methodists have now 28 conferences, 600 preachers, 600 local preachers and more than 20,000 members.

We cordially extend the right hand of fellowship to this interesting people. We mourn with them over some who "did run well," but have fallen by the way. And we believe that when all Christ's children are one, as he and the Father are one, and Satan is at last bound, the Free Methodists will share in the general joy.

THE NEXT WORLD.

The Spiritualists have Satan's version of a great truth, to-wit, that we are in the midst of the spirit world. This great truth has been put off beyond a future resurrection, when our bodies are to be called out of our graves. Satan seizes on such dim and neglected truths of the Bible, and uses them to attract attention and procure worship for himself, by mixing them with lies.

Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, and Elias; also, the angel-prophet in the Revelation, were personally and entirely alive, without waiting for future resurrection of their bodies. So, doubtless, are all departed saints who are alive and where Christ is. For Paul speaks of departing and being with Christ, as equivalent to each other.

The Westminster divines teach that "the souls of believers, at their death, do immediately pass into glory; and their bodies, being still united to Christ, do rest in their graves till the resurrection."

Doubtless the divines who were called together by Cromwell's Parliament, after Luther had freed mind from the Pope; and Henry from the bishops, and they were not yet hardened into sects,—those divines had, perhaps, the best opportunity to get and give the exact meaning of the Bible of any body of men on earth.

But the resurrection is a theme so vast, it concerns the uncounted and countless myriads of mankind, and that in eternity not in time; and as we only know it "in part," and see eternal things "through a glass darkly," that it is unsafe to dogmatize concerning the minor details of the resurrection state. Our natural bodies, from infancy to age, are not composed of the very same particles of matter in any two successive moments of our lives; though the infant is the same identical person from birth to manhood; and Moses and Elias were the self-same persons in the mount that they were 1,500 years before in the flesh. The spiritual bodies in which they appeared did not destroy their identity, or hinder their being recognized as Moses and Elias. So all the holy dead departed, and being now with Christ, are the same persons they were here; though at death they have "entered into the joy of their Lord."

What uses may be made of our material forms in the stupendous scenes of the final judgment, perhaps we only "know in part." But it is joyous that the Scriptures everywhere affirm the instant happiness of departed saints.

RECENT COURT DECISIONS.

The recent decision of the Supreme Courts of Kansas and Iowa, that in spite of the Wilson bill the prohibitory laws of those States are inoperative until re-enacted, is resulting in the return of the "original package" saloons in those States and encourage their establishment in all other States, without reference to prohibitory or license laws.

At first glance it looks like a back-set to the cause of prohibition. Its temporary effect will be to greatly increase the consumption of alcoholic liquors and add immensely to the sorrow and crime that follow in its wake. But this is the divine plan to compel the people of this nation to recognize the greatness of the evil and to compel them to put it away. Politicians have vainly sought, first to brush this question aside; then to compromise on high or low license, and at least in some way to get rid of temperance as a political question. They made precisely similar efforts to get rid of the slavery question. God does not suffer great moral issues to be thus set aside. He often makes national sins so hateful that the voice of universal conscience shall be reinforced by the instincts of self-preservation. Men may say, "Peace, peace; but there is no peace." The war is upon us. It is a life-and-death struggle, not simply for the liquor traffic, but for good order, morality and religion. Even to-day God says of the workers of iniquity, "Their wine is the poison of dragons, and cruel venom of asps. To me belongeth vengeance and recompense. Their foot shall slide in due time, for the day of their calamity is at hand, and the things that shall come upon them make haste." Deut. 32: 33, 35.

Some weeks ago we noticed a remarkable book on the importance of adopting Bible principles to guide the nation in all its legislative, judicial and political action, written by Thomas M. C. Birmingham of Altus, in western Arkansas. The work had a large sale in Arkansas, where the author was well known as an elder in the Southern Methodist church. It seems to have been displeasing to Democrats, but the Republican Labor party nominated Mr. Birmingham for Superintendent of Public Instruction. He was therefore doubly criminal in the eyes of his political opponents, who first hanged him in effigy and then ordered him to leave the country. John M. Clayton had been shot in the same district to keep him from the seat in Congress to which he had been elected, and Mr. Birmingham therefore took a prudent course and left. He was not able to take his family, and himself became a fugitive escaping from the vengeance of the foes of free speech in this free country.

Addressing a large and intelligent audience lately in this city, Rev. Dr. Noble was mentioning with enthusiasm the greatness of Chicago. A city so young had no such ruins to display as in Europe, but the ruined reputation of Mayor Cregier was a spectacle to contemplate with horror and alarm. The applause that greeted this severe witticism was tremendous and prolonged. It was the most popular hit of the evening, though followed by an address by Rev. Dr. Richard S. Storrs of Brooklyn, the most eloquent of the Congregational divines. It revealed the popular disgust of the creature of Freemasonry whom the secret lodges have elevated to a position that he has hardly even a friend left who dares to say he is fit to fill. There are few records of more complete deception of his supporters by any city officer. And yet so potent is the lodge in our ward politics that it is urged when this Masonic mayor is dropped he must be taken care of by the World's Fair directors with a fat job worth $15,000 a year!

—The New England secretary last week visited Worcester, Putnam and Willimantic and preached on Sabbath day at Bristol, Conn. He is much cheered by the cordial support of the Baptist pastors of Boston. Calls for the literature of the reform are increasing. The Home Guard circulates 3800 copies monthly, and there is enlarged demand for sample copies of the Cynosure for examination.

—The Delta Upsilon college society held a convention in this city last week. This society is modeled somewhat after the Greek-letter secret fraternities, but with the principle of anti-secrecy in its constitution. The first organization of the name dates from Williams College in 1834—during the days of Morgan Anti-masonry. It has thousands of members among our colleges; but its anti-secret principles are modified and are now simply non-secret without any aggressive principle against the numerous secret student orders.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Rev. H. H. Hinman is visiting various points in Ohio, Dayton, Xenia, Cedarville, Oberlin, etc. He spoke in Dayton in the United Brethren church on the subject of Christian Unity on the 19th inst.

—Rev. W. O. Dinius of Dayton, Ohio, was locked out of the churches in Arlington and Brookville, O., lately by the Masonic element in the United Brethren, who took this means to prevent his preaching the Gospel.

—One of the contributors to the College Fraternity discussion in our October number was a Mr. Jerome Raymond. He is, we learn, a student who has been for a time stenographer to Miss Francis E. Willard, and has just been selected for private secretary to Bishop Thoburn of India, and will with him make a tour of the world in 1891. His contribution was kindly solicited for us by Miss Willard.

Are you, kind reader, making those 50,000 subscribers a matter of prayer? If you pray well, you will think well, plan well, and work well for such a list.

IOWA CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, is hereby called to meet in the Free Methodist church at Fairfield, Iowa, Tuesday, Dec. 2, at 2 P. M., to continue its sessions through the following day. Efforts will be made to secure some of the ablest speakers on the subject to address the convention. The committee hope to furnish free entertainment to all delegates. All churches and associations opposed to secret societies are urged to send delegates to this meeting.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE SABBATH ASSOCIATION OF ILLINOIS.

The officers of this body beg leave to call the attention of all its members throughout the State to the fact that the annual meeting will he held in Chicago on the 11th and 12th of Nov. next. Never was there more urgent need of a large and enthusiastic meeting of the friends of the Christian Sabbath. Never was its foes more active and unscrupulous. We are on the eve of great events affecting the dearest interests of our Christian civilization in America.

There is shortly to be held in Chicago, the metropolitan center of the continent, an exposition, the like of which the world has never seen before. An exhibition which shall set before all nations the results of four centuries of republican progress in the New World.

It is seriously proposed and vehemently urged that the gates of this Exposition shall be thrown wide open and the Exposition run on the Lord's day as other days of the week, thus violating all the most sacred traditions of American history and flaunting defiance in the face of the God of our fathers.

Unless the Christian people of this land rise up in moral majesty and thunder their righteous protest, this infamy will be perpetrated.

We therefore earnestly urge all friends of our free institutions and all lovers of God and humanity to come up to this annual gathering.

At the same time and place there will be held a mass meeting of representatives of the Central District of the National Sabbath Union, comprising the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. The meetings will be held at the First M. E. Church, and will last two days, and will be addressed by distinguished speakers.

In issuing orders against the further employment of Knights of Labor on the New York Central Railway, Vice-President Webb has only taken the wise precaution of a manager whose control of his own business was challenged by an irresponsible and unscrupulous organization. The Knights of Labor have sowed the wind and they cannot complain if, in the whirlwind their course has provoked, they are crushed and annihilated. In a hundred strikes they have brought loss upon the country and distress upon themselves, and no one should regret that their strength is on the wane. They will be succeeded by other labor organizations, which will survive or perish as they are guided by cool and sagacious heads or by designing and self-seeking agitators.—America.

The commandments are not obligatory on a Mason as a Mason, because the institution is tolerant and cosmopolite, and cannot require its members to give their adhesion to any religious dogma or precepts, excepting those which express a belief in the existence of God and the immortality of the soul.—Mackey's Ency. Freemasonry, p 205, Art. "Decalogue."

This explains the Sunday picnics of the lodge, its Sabbath-day funerals and parades; and also the partial and one-sided protection that it offers to female virtue, a specimen of which is given below:

"A defender of Freemasonry told an acquaintance, who detested the system, that he knew a case where a man was almost in the very act of perpetrating a shameful crime, when the woman noticing his Masonic square and compass, remarked, 'My father used to wear such a pin.' He immediately left her, and this would-be apologist, for the lodge, cited it as a proof of the moral worth of Freemasonry!"—Independent Christian.

During the last eight years, the liquor-saloons of Paris have increased from 24,000 to 29,000. In the last thirty years the consumption of alcohol has been trebled; in the last ten years doubled.

San Francisco has at present one saloon to every eighty-six inhabitants, and New York city one to every one hundred and sixty-six inhabitants. This makes a saloon to every seventeen voters in San Francisco, and one to every thirty-three voters in New York city.

THRICE BLESSED.

A GIFT OF LOVE, OF SACRIFICE AND OF FAITH.

The following letter from a brother in the East, whose name we withhold for manifest reasons, was sent to the financial Secretary of the N. C. A., and is published at his request in the hope that it will encourage many friends who bear the cause represented by the N. C. A. before God daily. Let there be a thousand friends who shall be moved to follow so good an example:

Dear Brother Blanchard:—I have not been unmindful of the appeal you made some months ago for donations for the National Christian Association. (God bless that Association!) But I have only a "widow's mite" to give, and have been hesitating to decide how much I ought to give. The church to which I belong, and of which I am an elder, has for some years been under financial embarassment. Every year there is some emergency for which we need to raise every cent we can, and I have pledged every year more than I could promptly pay, to keep our church out of debt. Consequently I had nothing to give for the anti-secrecy cause, which I believe to be peculiarly God's cause, and for which I pray and wish to contribute and labor.

But as those providential emergencies continue to occur year after year, I believe they are not a mere matter of chance. But as God is the author of providence, I believe he has a controversy with us as a church, and I have been looking to see what it is. Our church is mixed up with secretism. Quite a number of its members are Masons and Odd-fellows. Its Sabbath-school superintendent is chaplain of the Masonic lodge, and but for my protest would bring the Christless ceremonies of every Masonic funeral into our church. Two of our elders are Masons; our pulpit is muzzled; and I have been told that our present pastor is an Odd-fellow, which I hope is not so. But certainly there is no trumpet blast from our watch-tower, while young men are drawn into the lodges, and I can see just cause for God's frown upon us, on that ground. Another thing, —our members are all temperance people of course, but most of the male members advocate and vote to license the cursed liquor traffic.

Under these circumstances I have decided to use part of my mite for the anti-secrecy cause. I have been paying $—— dollars a year for the support of our church. I will for the next year give five dollars of that to the National Christian Association, leaving future developments to decide duty for another year.

I want to identify myself henceforth while I am spared, with those dear, self-denying brethren and sisters, who have so nobly stood up against the works of darkness.

"WE SHALL NOT GO TO CANOSSA."

This is a very good cry, and it is well to shout it loudest when you are actually going. It produces a good effect. You can pick old Protestant books denouncing the mass, vestments, lights as theatrical; denouncing the keeping of feasts; denouncing set forms of prayer. Yet they are bravely getting back to them. Protestant churches have altars, vestments, crosses, even crucifixes, reredoses, rood screens, and people have learned to like them. They are not theatrical nowadays, but highly devotional, Scriptural, apostolical.

Now, a Sunday-school convention, representing of course many Calvinistic bodies, has resolved to have special services on Christmas, Easter, Ascension, Pentecost, and Good Friday. What would the old Scotchmen who fought so bravely against the introduction of a bag of pipes, as they called an organ, think of all this? Moreover, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, Baptists, and others, are adopting or adapting the Episcopal marriage and funeral service. The tendency all along the line is to Canossa.—Catholic News.

When the Romen Catholics begin to chuckle in this way, it ought to open the eyes of all who are not Protestant only in name.—Signs of the Times.

Ex-Gov. Larrabee, of Iowa, claims, after an extensive observation, that there is not one-twentieth part of the intoxicating liquor consumed in Iowa at the present time that there was prior to the passage of the prohibitory law.

The Home.

EACH DAY ANEW.

Each night I lay me down to rest,
And dare the vanished hours survey—
Their sins of thought and word and deed,
I mourn another wasted day,
Of good intentions come to naught,
Strong purpose to half-action turned,
Weak, yielding to the ancient sin,
While yet my heart with sorrow burned.
How may my soul to sleep be calmed,
With all the fruitless day in view?
This single thought sustains my hope,—
I can begin each day anew.

I pray for faith and grace and strength:
My soul forgets its bitter pain,
And, ready for the daily strife,
Upon the morn I rise again.
What though before me lies a day,
As all the other days now past,
Of struggles, trials, doubts, and fears,
And often failure at the last?
I issue forth to meet my foes,
Strong in the hope I may subdue.
Behind me lie my old defeats;
I can begin each day anew.

And so from day to day I strive,
With all the sins that wound my life,
In tears and sorrow, oft despair,
And yet the better for the strife
That teaches me who would be proud,
How I am weak and vile and mean,
And could not struggle for an hour
Unless on Jesus' arm I lean,
Who comforts me with words of love,
While I my weary way pursue,
Sustained at night by this sweet thought,
I can begin each day anew.

TESTED AND REWARDED.

A pastor was holding extra meetings in a schoolhouse in a rich, rural, neighborhood. A wealthy farmer living a mile distant had not attended, nor had any of the family, when the wife, an unemotional woman, but of rare good sense, went to the meeting one evening. Although it was the first one she had attended, she was convicted of her sins, sought the Lord, and was happily converted before the meeting closed.

Her special cross now was to tell her husband of her new experience. Reaching home, she found the family had retired. Her husband, arousing from sleep, said, "You are a little late home."

"Yes," she said, "I have been to the meeting, and I've been converted, and I want you to come with me."

He was silent a minute or two, and then said: "Mary, you could not have done a thing that would have displeased me more. Don't ever speak of it to me again. Come to bed."

It was the most abrupt remark he had made to her in twenty years of wedded life. But she knew his will, and not a word was spoken until the morning. She did not sleep, and silently the whole night commended his case to God. She also knew that he was far from having a night of rest.

Farmer-like, they ate breakfast by candlelight. No sooner was he seated at the table than he said: "Children, your mother says she was converted at the meeting last night, and she won't want to eat without a blessing being asked. So keep still while she asks one."

The good woman would not deny her Lord. She asked the blessing the best she could.

There was silence during the meal. When the hired man pushed back to leave the room, the man of the house said, "My wife says she is converted, and of course she will want to read and pray before we go to work; you better sit down." Nothing daunted, the persecuted but saved woman, without a murmuring word, set herself to the untried work, read a chapter, and, kneeling alone, prayed. As the son was leaving the room, the father said: "In an hour you hitch the gray horses to the cutter. Your mother and I are going to C—— for a visit."

Ordinarily he was a kind husband, consulted his wife about social and business affairs, and few homes were in better accord. But this was the first intimation to the wife of the proposed visit. Shall she submit, and thus be ignored? Shall she leave the meetings, where she hoped her children would be saved? These and other similar questions were pressed on her conscience, yet somehow she believed God was to be glorified even through this abuse. In an hour she was seated by her husband, and silently they drove twenty miles, when he reined up to a hotel and ordered dinner. When they entered the dining-room, a few boarders and a half-dozen commercial travelers came in. With a knife-handle the man rapped, and as the company looked about, he said: "My wife says she was converted last night, and she will not want to eat unless she asks a blessing. Please keep still while she says grace."

Although faced by twenty strangers in this cruel arraignment, yet she would not deny her Lord, and in stammering utterances thanked him for the food before them. There was no jest uttered, and the meal was eaten in silence.

An hour later and the team was brought, and the man turned their heads toward home. After they had gone a few rods, the wife said, "This is not the way to C——."

"I know it," and, bursting into tears, he said, "Wife, I've used you mean; but you've got the real thing, and I'm going to the school-house to-night to see if I can get converted."

The rest of the story is short. The days were but few before the whole family, including the hired help, was converted, and she who was put to such unjust and unnatural tests, but who demonstrated her conversion by unflinching Christian courage, has seen her husband a leading and worthy official in the church of God for many years.—Northern Christian Advocate.

AN AIM IN LIFE.

In one of the Western States lived two boys about the same age. Fred Brown was a quiet, plodding boy of sixteen, who had attended the district school part of the time since he was old enough, as he was the eldest of a large family and his father was not strong. Fred had to work hard as soon as he was sufficiently strong, but by dint of hard study at home when he could not attend school, he managed to keep up with his class; and when they took the county examination he was at its head.

But Charles Gurney was a different kind of a boy; he was the only child of indulgent parents, who gratified his every wish and humored every whim. When Charles felt a little lazy or indisposed and did not get up in time to breakfast with the rest of the family, his fond mother kept his breakfast warm for him. At such times he was almost sure to be late for school; but that did not trouble him much: if he could only have a good time, he did not care for such trifles. What if his teacher did look vexed? What if he did get a tardy mark? Such things were of too common occurrence to trouble him.

When spring came, Fred had plenty of work to do; the ground was to be plowed, and planted mostly in corn. How the corn did grow that spring! The small valley in which the boy lived, seemed almost one waving mass of corn, as viewed from a hill near his home.

Fred's corn was well cultivated; and his heart swelled with pride, at words of praise from his father. He had his plans all laid to go to college, in the fall. His father was poor, but he was strong, he could work. Then there were his chickens; if he managed right, they might help him. He saved every cent he could, from the sale of eggs and chickens; his father allowed him to work for a neighbor when the busy season was over; and if the corn would only do well, he could afford to help him some besides.

But about the first of July, the dry weather began, and the corn, with all other crops, suffered from the drought. There would come light showers, the corn would revive, every one would feel more cheerful, but still there was dry weather. How people watched and prayed for rain! but it came not. All signs failed. Every cloud was watched as one would watch for a faithful friend in time of need. Sometimes a cloud would work up and a few drops of rain would fall; then it would soon clear off, and be as dry as before. Now the little streams are going dry, and myriads of fish may be seen, crowded together in little pools of water. A few days more, and even these pools are dried up, and the poor fish are lying heaped together, dead. And now the corn, or the corn-fodder must be attended to, and a busy season it is with the farmers. There have been weeks of watching and days of dullness and inactivity, when almost every one is too blue to talk of the prospects. But now there is work to do, and plenty of it. It lightens the hearts when we make up our minds to make the best of the situation and go to work, knowing that, in some way or other, "the Lord will provide."

So thought Fred's father as they cut the corn, and as they worked they had many talks as to the possibility of his going to school, now that the crops were a failure. But it was still over a month before school would begin; and, besides helping his father, Fred would have time to cut corn for a neighbor who gave good wages, and could thus increase his store.

Charles Gurney's father and mother had determined to send their son to college, and as there was no lack of means, the design could easily be accomplished. The boy did not care, he had no high aim in view, but being assured he could have a good time out of school, and thinking he could make out some way with his lessons, as he had always done in the schools he had attended, he consented to go.

Charles chuckled to think that the great drought had not affected his father's means, or made it hard for him to send his only child to school. He had no pity to waste on those it had so affected.

Besides other investments his father had bought up thousands of bushels of corn last year, when corn was so plenty and cheap that farmers had to stack it in great heaps because it took so much corn to get money to put up cribs.

And now this great drought would be an advantage to him and many others who had had the foresight, and the money, to buy the corn, and store it up; they could get a high price for it. This drought was their opportunity as it would surely make the price high. A pleasant boarding place was selected by Charles' parents, and everything was put in readiness for him to go.

In the meantime Fred Brown had gathered together his hard-earned money from all sources, and was the proud possessor of a sum sufficiently large to enable him to attend college the next fall and winter. Sometime before our story begins, on account of his mother's sickness he had learned all kinds of plain cooking. He had thought it quite a trial at the time, but now he felt it had been a blessing in disguise.

Thomas Edwards, a neighbor of Fred's, wanted to go to college also; so they agreed to go together, rent a room and do their own cooking. Their mothers and sisters were much interested in getting things ready for them, and at last the day came when, as Fred said, they would emigrate to their new home.

Mr. Edwards, Thomas' father, took them and all they needed in his farm wagon, while good, kind Mrs. Edwards went along to help them set up in housekeeping. Mr. Brown also went to the city that day with his daughter; so it was quite a large and a decidedly merry party that gathered around the table in the boy's room for dinner.

The day was warm and bright, their friends were with them; so the room looked quite cheerful and homelike to the boys. The dinner over, the dishes were hurriedly washed by Mrs. Edwards and Fred's sister, and the boy's were left to themselves.

It was Saturday night, and the boys were in a strange place. The pastor of the church to which their parents belonged had called on them and invited them to attend church next day. Thomas Edwards belonged to this church. Fred Brown had never joined it. He could not be called a wild or wicked boy, but he was certainly careless of "the one thing needful." His aim in life was to get an education, and to be somebody, as he expressed it. He thought there would be time enough for religion when he should get older. He reasoned, as I have heard older persons do, that he knew many people outside the church who seemed to be better than some who are in it. He did not stop to think that he was judging his neighbor, which we are commanded not to do, and that he had only his own sins to account for.

Sabbath morning came, and with it the Sabbath bells calling the world to worship. The boys arose early, and after performing their household duties had time to study their Sabbath-school lessons, before going to the church, where they were taken into the pastor's class.

The subject for this day's lesson was "The Prodigal Son," and Fred was led to see, as never before, the strength of a father's love, and that if a father on earth knows to give good gifts unto his children when they ask them, our Father in heaven is much more ready.

Of the days that followed, there is not much to write. Their experience was much like that of other boys.

Of Charles Gurney they saw but little, except in school. Their taste differed so widely that they chose entirely different associates.

Charles' spare time was principally devoted to card playing and loafing. What wonder he was enticed to visit the house of "The Original Package," and imbibed too freely of the vile stuff sold therein, put up in packages to suit purchasers.

"Did you see our friend Gurney this evening?" said Fred to Thomas one evening as they were sitting before their cheerful fire for a friendly chat before retiring for the night.

"Why, no, what has he been up to?" "If he has been up, he has been down, too, and that is what I wanted to tell you about. As I turned the corner at Fifth avenue and Chester street, I met Charles with a friend on either side supporting him. He showed unmistakable signs of being intoxicated. I noticed as he passed me that his eyes were bloodshot, his face pallid, and almost idiotic in its stare."

"Did he not recognize you, Fred?"

"No, I think not. He muttered something like 'How do ole feller?' but he did not know me. I went on down the street, where I met one of the boys who told me how it happened. He had heard them talking about the package and how they could get it. There was one difficulty they thought of; it is against the law to sell strong drink in any form to minors, and so they might get into trouble, as these temperance people are watching so closely. They finally decided that the oldest one, who was almost of age, and looked much older, should purchase the liquor, and they would go off somewhere quietly and have a good time. He went in alone so as not to attract attention, and soon returned with his package well wrapped up. Judging from the size, it must have been one of those dollar packages we have seen advertised as containing two bottles of beer and one of whisky.

"These boys have all been well brought up. In this great Prohibition State before the Original Package movement there has been little temptation, and none of them had ever tasted strong drink. Charles went with the boys to their room, and I suppose they thought they were having a fine time. That was nearly three hours ago, Tom; and now what a change! I'll tell you what it is, I will never taste strong drink, if it makes one look and act like that."

"Amen!" said Thomas. "It cheers me to hear you speak that way, Fred. I was afraid you would be led off, because of your love of company and a good time. Ah, Fred, you must guard against bad company; then it will be so much easier to keep out of the way of temptation. But since I hear you speak that way, I feel sure you will shun all such evils. I will keep on praying for you, and I trust that you will have such a high aim in view, that you will never give up to temptation such as overcame Charles Gurney. And now I also have a story to tell, which I heard this evening.

"A man who lives several miles out in the country, came to town yesterday morning for medicine for his wife, who was sick with cholera morbus. He visited the Original Package man, and bought one of his vile packages. Before Prohibition days he had been a drunkard, but through the influence of his wife, and because of the lack of temptation, he had abstained from the use of strong drink for years. But now the tempter had come, and when the man saw the sign, 'Whisky, Beer and all kinds of Liquor sold here,' his old appetite revived, and he could not resist the temptation to have just one drink. That he could not get without taking a whole package, but he reasoned, 'I have been up all night and need it so badly, I will get one; I may need a drink again.' That one drink made him want more and still more. His head swam, his reason fled, and he soon sank to the floor to spend the rest of the day in a drunken stupor.

"The barkeeper soon put him out of sight, and this morning, half awake, he groped his way out of the vile den, got his horse, and started for home. When within a mile or two of his house, he met two of his neighbors who were coming to find him, bearing the sad news of the death of his wife. He had not come to himself yet, and so met them with reviling and cursing.

"His friends and neighbors raised money needed to buy a coffin and bury his wife, while he was still under the influence of liquor. Did you ever hear of such a thing in prohibition days?"

"How very sad that story was, Tom. One would think that man would never drink again."

"That's true; but ten to one he will back to town very soon, and try to drown his remorse in another package."

Before the term was out Charles Gurney was expelled from school for his dissipated habits. About this time his father suffered heavy losses; his vast store-houses for grain were burned to the ground with all they contained, for he was still waiting for a higher price. Besides this he suffered other reverses in business, and Charles was compelled to earn his living by the sweat of his brow.

Our boys, Tom and Fred, still prospered, their lessons were well learned, they kept away from bad company, and were regularly found at the prayer-meeting, church services, and Sabbath-school.

It was a bright and beautiful Sabbath morning that they attended church for the last time in this place. The text was found in the thirteenth and fourteenth verses of the seventh chapter of Matthew's Gospel: "Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat. Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." The sermon was grand and beautiful. And as the preacher compared and described the two ways, and the people who traveled therein, Fred's heart was touched; he felt that whatever other aim in life he might have, the goal to be reached by all traveling the narrow way, was the highest aim of all. His plans and purposes for life seemed small indeed when compared with this, and he there resolved to start without delay on the way to Eternal Life. —Christian Instructor.

TEMPERANCE.

ROBBING THE FARMERS.

The Western Rural of Chicago on the 27th of September contained a masterly arraignment of the high license policy of robbing the farmer to pay the criminal expenses entailed upon the tax-payers of the county by the city saloons. The following extracts are quoted from the able editorial:

It seems hardly necessary to write for farmers on the evils of the saloons. No one pretends to deny the general charge that the saloon is a bad thing. It is our purpose to speak briefly of this national curse to the farmers, as a class. The licensed saloons in the towns and villages of this country impose a double and underhanded form of taxation upon the farmers that would not be tolerated under any other name. Towns license saloons to help pay their own expenses. They build sidewalks, pay policemen, build jails and become extravagant in proportion as the income from saloons increases. The farmer, or their sons and laborers, help to maintain the saloons, and lose their efficiency and often their farms. When the crop of crime is ready to harvest, the farmer is again called upon to pay taxes into the county treasury to cover the expenses of detecting, convicting and punishing the criminals that have been turned out by the village saloons. In addition to this, the farmer pays more than his share of the direct tax by reason of the tangible character of his possessions which are more easily found by the assessor and more readily valued than many other forms of wealth.

The open saloon, especially in large centers, consumes a large part of the wage workers' earnings, and thus destroys a vast resource which should be invested in the products of the farm for food for their families. The wage workers being exposed to special temptations by reason of their proximity to the saloon, are more likely to fall under these temptations, and thus spend large sums of money in a wasteful manner. The annual saloon bill of Chicago is estimated to be about $70,000,000. Of this amount probably more than one-half comes out of the pockets of the laboring men and women. This will show that the laboring people of this one city spend each year a sum large enough to support on salaries of $62.50 per month, 50,000 heads of families, or a population of 250,000 people. Of this sum the farmer receives nothing for the products for which he is seeking a profitable market; while this money goes into the pockets of an idle, lawless class of saloon keepers, or wealthy monopolistic brewers and distillers, and a vast sum of money is thus diverted from the ligitimate channels of trade where it would be used to pay for the produce that laborers' wives and children would use if they could get it. The tendency of our time is toward the centralization of population, of wealth, and of power. Cities and towns are increasing in population while country places are being in a measure deserted. In them may be found much of what is best and noblest in education, art, science and religion. In them there is also found much of what is meanest and vilest in corrupt humanity. The open saloons of these cities are not a menace to the people of the cities alone.

By its influence in politics the saloon has a most serious effect upon the farmer and his best interests. The stronghold of the saloon is in cities, and the larger the city the greater its influence. It becomes a controlling element in politics. It becomes the resort of repeating voters, and harbors a class that is ready to sell its vote for a pittance in the form a glass of drink. It dictates nominations for local offices, and with its hand on the lever of the political machine, it becomes a controlling influence in state politics. The state holds the balance of power in national affairs, and thus it comes that the liquor interest often has the nation at its mercy. The saloon vote being at all times and in all places a purchasable commodity, it naturally follows that any immoral or corrupt enterprise that can obtain this vote will have such a foothold in state and national legislatures as often to make it an easy winner over all respectable opposition. Of all resulting legislation the farmer is reasonably certain to be at least one of the victims.

High license supporters in Nebraska have mobbed the Rev. Mr. Jordan, cut in pieces the tent of another prohibition speaker, egged ex-Gov. Larrabee, of Iowa, pelted with rotten eggs the Rev. George Scott, and also Mrs. Wright, her child and her aged father who were in the wagon with him going home from a prohibition meeting held in a church. "The Bankers and Business Men's" liquor association are conducting a very rotten or corrupt campaign. The leaders against prohibition are blamed by some of their own papers with corrupting the funds. Some of the supporters, or the supported, throw rotten eggs at governors, ministers, the aged and women and children; and others throw at crowds rotten arguments and corrupted statistics. A cause that uses such bad means is a bad cause.—Midland.

Jacob Renner brought suit against Dennis Murphy for $11.30 for money loaned, a bar bill, and a shave at East St. Louis. The attorney for Murphy claimed that his client was not liable for the bar bill, because he was a drunkard, and produced decisions of the Supreme Court to the effect that if a man was drunk five times in two years he would be considered in law a drunkard. The attorney proved to the satisfaction of the court that his client had been drunk that number of times in two years and that a saloon-keeper can not recover moneys for liquor sold to a drunkard. The Judge rendered judgment for $1.00 borrowed money and for a 10-cent shave, but decided that the liquor bill was void.

The liquor dealers of Morgantown, Ind., are in a state of siege. Saturday night a dynamite bomb was placed under M. T. Hancock's drug store, and the explosion which followed scattered his "red rye" promiscuously, damaging stock and the building to the amount of $1,500. A notice was placed on Joseph Norman's drug store door saying his place was next in line. William Musselman, a saloonist, was notified to leave within twenty days or suffer the consequence.

From recent statistics we learn that of the one hundred and odd counties in Kansas thirty-seven have empty jails, fifteen have only one prisoner each, and forty-four have no paupers.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Peter's denial. Vs. 54–62. Peter followed "afar off." There is always danger to a follower of Christ who keeps at a great distance from his Master. If Peter had fled like the others he would not have been tempted to deny his Lord. We need to have our courage constantly fortified by a near view of the face of Jesus. It always brings a great strain on the loyalty of a Christian when he leaves a space for the world to come in between himself and Christ. It was only a maid servant, one of the menials of the palace, who charged Peter with being Jesus' disciple. He was under no necessity of giving account of himself to one who held such an inferior position, and whom the matter could not possibly concern one way or another. Yet he was so greatly disturbed about it as to deny his Lord, even with profanity and cursing. How often the same thing is repeated to-day. Instead of bravely defending their own conscientious convictions, men too often quail before their moral and social inferiors. Many who were all ready to embrace a Christian life have been turned away by the laughter of their companions. Others have fallen into habits of intemperance, not because they were not individually strong enough to resist temptation, but because they were not strong enough to resist ridicule. There are those who despise the secret lodge system, yet become tacit apologists for it rather than be identified with so unpopular a cause as anti-secrecy. Yet they who thus deny the truth for fear of man succumb to their inferiors. We find neither large brains nor great souls among those who would ridicule a man for doing right. Any dictation or censorship of his opinions from the world with its lower aims and standards a Christian should feel as an impertinence. "And the cock crew." It was a very trivial thing, yet enough to bring to Peter's mind the full sense of his terrible guilt. God often uses strange preachers. A reproof from a woman who was herself wicked and profane was one of the turning points in the life of John Bunyan. Yet it was the look which Christ gave Peter that brought him to repentance. The crowing of the cock only brought conviction. It is a sight of Jesus and his forgiving love which breaks the sinner's heart.

2. Christ mocked. Vs. 63–65. To see the Son of God, the meek, unoffending, lowly Jesus made the scorn and derision of sinful men, sends a shudder through the soul. But how often he is put to an open shame through the inconsistencies of his professed followers. The keenest ridicule that has been heaped on church fairs, suppers, Sunday-school theatricals, and other devices for gaining money has come from irreligious sources. Let us stop and think before every act or word, "Is this going to honor my Master?" For there is no neutral ground. If our lives do not positively honor they will surely dishonor him.

3. The faithful and true Witness. Vs. 66–71. We come now to the only show of serious earnestness in this mock trial. Failing in the witnesses they had suborned, they would try to make him witness against himself. Christ in his answer plainly avows his rights, and the utter illegality of their course; yet with all the awful consequences before him he shrinks not from the prime test. Boldly, fearlessly, he witnesses that he is Christ, and thus becomes the first in that "noble army of martyrs" who have sealed the truth with their blood. He is the faithful and true Witness, and every Christian in his measure is called upon to follow in his steps and be a witness bearer; but this is impossible while we are walking with the world, for such companionship will surely stifle our testimony. It is for this reason that there is so little witness-bearing in the church to-day. Christ witnesses for his elect against the accusations of Satan. So we are to stand up for him before the bar of worldly opinion and prejudice, and confess him as our Master. We notice that one chief point in Christ's witness before the high priest regarded his second coming in glory. This is a proof of the great importance of the doctrine, and the high place which it should take in our Christian testimony. A sign of a backslidden church is the fact that she no longer loves to think and talk of her Lord's appearing. "What need we any farther witness?" These words were spoken in malicious triumph, but they contain a deep truth. Our testimony for Jesus, and for all truth which his religion represents, should be so explicit, so plain, so uncompromising, as to leave no doubt in the mind of any whose we are or whom we serve, so that the world may say of us as it did of him, "What need we any further witness?"

Religious News.

—The First Presbyterian Church of Cincinnati and the Presbyterian Church of Pleasant Ridge celebrated the 100th anniversary of their organization Tuesday at Cincinnati.

—The Illinois Baptist Pastoral Union met at Elgin last week, and discussed Christian Endeavor work. It was generally urged that there should be an organized society of young people, but within denominational lines. Rev. P. S. Henson, D. D., of Chicago, gave a powerful address on "The Lord's Day." He deplored the evident intention of the management of the Columbian Exposition to open its doors on the Sabbath, to hold carnival and debauchery on the Lord's day. He strongly denounced this, and a motion was made and carried that resolutions be passed by the Illinois Baptist Union protesting against this Sabbath desecration.

—The Roman Catholic papers, we notice, have a great deal to say of the success of Catholic and the failure of Protestant missions. We may prick that bubble with a few figures. The Catholics have been at work in India for three hundred years, the Protestants for one hundred. According to Marshall's "Christian Missions," which Catholics swear by (II., p. 247), the Catholics of British India in 1857 numbered 895,000. By the census in 1872 they were 914,691, and in 1883 they were 963,958. They had increased in 26 years by 68,058, or 2,596 annually. The statistics of Protestant missons gave 102,951 adherents in 1851; 213,570 in 1861; 318,363 in 1871, and 528,500 in 1881. This gives an increase of 425,539 in thirty years, or 14,184 per year, or more than five times as much as the Catholics. The Catholics have 701 European mission priests in India; the Protestants in 1881 had 658 male missionories in India (including Burmah), and may now have 760, while their decennial statistics show 700,000 native adherents. Now let our Catholic cotemporaries muse on these facts just a little—and try to explain them.—Independent.

—The Illinois Baptist Covention at Elgin adjourned Friday. The committee on resolutions reported at great length, and offered the following, which was adopted:

"Whereas, The Roman Catholics and some Lutheran churches have assumed a position against our public-school system, hoping to cripple it, that our hearty sympathy be extended to those cities that have surrendered to the control of such churches.

"Resolved, That politicians who have catered to them through hope of personal gain be condemned, and that the Baptist Association cling more closely to the Bible and to home institutions."

On the Sabbath-observance question it was resolved to address to the World's Fair managers a protest on behalf of ninety thousand Baptists of Illinois, opposing the opening of the fair on the Sabbath. On the temperance question the resolutions declared against the manufacture, sale and use of liquor as a beverage as one of the greatest evils of our time, and urged upon all connected with the Baptist church and others to use their influence and vote for the suppression of the traffic, lending no countenance to the pernicious license system, and expressing a hope for the ultimate absolute and universal prohibition of the infamous evil.

—Describing the late Mrs. Booth, the wife of the Marshal of the Salvation Army, as a woman of singular ability, refinement, and culture, the London Star says: "There was a certain saintly atmosphere about Mrs. Booth's personality—a suggestion of gentleness and peace. She had a beautiful voice, with a clear thrilling note in it, and she had the genuine gift of oratory. Her religious teaching had that note of passionate devotion which one associates with Charles Wesley. In a word, Mrs. Booth was a poetess. She was largely the mind and soul of salvationism, as the General has been its organic center. Her creed was a kind of perfectionism, always with a mystic touch in it. She was one of the great women of the century."

—A missionary, Mr. Appenzeller, in the Independent, says, that when mission work began in Korea, the missionaries presented a Bible to the king. The prime minister took the Bible to the palace, showed it to the king, and then, with the king's approval, tore it in pieces. Years afterwards, a Kentucky man presented the Korean minister at Washington with a bottle of the best Bourbon whisky for the king. This was accepted. Then the Christians of Kentucky resolved to show the king, at as early a period as possible, that the country produced something better than whisky. Recently they sent, through the Korean minister, three Bibles, one for the king, one for the prime minister, and one for the foreign secretary. The present has been accepted.

—At a meeting of Congregational ministers at Boston Monday, a resolution was adopted declaring against the opening of the World's Fair on Sunday. The same action was taken at Reading, Pa., by the Eastern Synod of the Reformed church.

—The latest statistics of Moravian missions show an increase over last year of 620 communicants and of 1457 in the total membership of the congregations in the foreign fields. The number under the direct care of the missionaries now amounts to 87,263, and of these 30,591 are enjoying the full privileges of communicant membership.

—Rev. A. J. Diaz, an evangelist of the Southern Baptists, in the Island of Cuba, has been wonderfully successful in preaching and organizing churches. He is a native of Cuba, and preaches with great ease and freedom in his own tongue. The Roman Catholic Church has moved against the heretic, and suppressed his services by the power of the civil law. During the present year Diaz and his helpers have been arrested, sent to jail, and harrassed in all possible ways. Diaz is out on bail, but the courts hesitate and keep him and his friends in suspense. The intervention of the American Government has been invoked.

Educational Notes.

—President S. C. Bartlett, of Dartmouth College, has issued a circular to the parents of the sophomore class asking their aid in putting an end to hazing and rushing in the institution.

—There are between fifty and sixty students for the ministry enrolled among the students of Shurtleff College. This is the largest showing in this direction that the college has ever known.

—Rev. Dr. Charles F. Thwing, pastor of the Plymouth Congregational church of Minneapolis since 1886, has resigned to accept the presidency of the Western Reserve College at Cleveland, O.

—The Treasury department has decided that books imported for the use of colleges, schools, etc., are admitted to this country under the new tariff law substantially as they were admitted under the old tariff law and subject to the same restrictions.

—D. H. Talbot, a wealthy collector of natural history specimens and a well-known scientist, has given to the Iowa State University his scientific library and his collection of specimens of minerals and animals. The value of the donation is nearly $75,000.

—The first case brought to court in the compulsory school law in Champaign county, Ill., resulted in victory for the law. Peter Paulson, a farmer, in the northwestern part of the county, refused to permit his children to attend the district school, and the jury to-day found him guilty. It was made a test case.

—The interesting case against the college boys of the University of Illinois for illegal voting came up in the Champaign County Circuit Court lately. The case of Z. Foster was the case under consideration. The jury remained out long enough to write a verdict of not guilty. All of the other cases against the college boys were dismissed except one, that of B. D. Burt, formerly from Nebraska, which has been continued, but it is believed that the case will not be prosecuted.

—The Association of Collegiate Alumnæ held a reception in the parlors of the Woman's Club at the Art Institute in this city, Friday evening. This organization is composed of 1153 graduates of fourteen different colleges. It is the outgrowth of a meeting held in Boston about ten years ago by seventeen young women who assembled to form an association which would perpetuate college friendships and serve the advancement of their sex. The results have been highly gratifying. It has been instrumental in founding several fellowships, has established various branches throughout the country and has done much to awaken and foster a desire for literary pursuits.

—The University of Michigan Daily of the 14th says of the attendance at Ann Arbor: "As will be seen in another column, the attendance up to last nigh was 2,246, over 300 more than at the same time last year. This means that about 2,500 students will be here before the first semester closes. The increase is in every department of the university, showing that it is a natural, symmetrical growth. If we have 2,500 students this year, the attendance will be just fifty per cent over what it was when the present senior class entered three years ago. The total then was 1,667. Since '82 the attendance has doubled." The official report of the number of students now enrolled in the University of Michigan is made public. There are 2,246 students in all departments, as against 1,943 at this time last year. The number registered after the second week of last year was 244. If there is a proportional increase this year the number of names in the calendar will exceed 2,500. Of the present enrollment the literary department has 1,045; law, 523; medical, 382; pharmacy, 93; dental, 130; homeopathic, 73.

In Brief.

In an orchard near Visallia, Cal., 1,102 pounds of prunes were recently gathered from one tree, which is six years old. Other trees in the same orchard are equally prolific and the product of one acre has brought $1,900. A few years ago the land was considered to be valueless.

The record of the last nine months, ending Oct. 1, shows the organization in the South of upward of 3,000 new enterprises, including almost every line of industry from the small saw-mill to great steel and iron works, and the last quarter of the year bids fair to be the most active ever seen in the South.

"How do you reckon the speed of a train?" "Why, easy enough," replied a railroad man. "You know every time the car passes over a rail-joint there is a distinct click. Just count the number of these clicks in twenty seconds and you have the number of miles the train is going per hour. This is a simple matter of arithmetic, as the length of the rail is uniform."—Detroit Free Press.

A careful estimate made a short time ago by George W. W. Houghton, an authority on the subject, showed that the number of pleasure carriages to be seen on a favorable day in Central Park alone approximated 20,000, valued at $20,000,000. There are more than a dozen manufactories in the United States that turn out between 15,000 and 20,000 vehicles yearly, and one concern in Indianapolis makes over 200,000 road carts every year. Four hundred new manufactories were established during 1889.

The Parnellite business has, says a London correspondent, cost the London Times £180,000. That is the exact figure, everything included, and it has been paid by the shareholders of the paper foregoing their divdend for last year, and for the first six months of this year. The Walters, however, are not losers to the extent commonly supposed, for John Walter stands towards the paper in a two-fold capacity. He is the owner of sixteen shares out of sixty, and the dividend on each share for 1889 was $15,000. Therefore John Walter's loss was, on his sixteen shares, $240,000. But he is also printer of the Times, and this printing business is kept separate from the publishing. He supplies paper, ink, printing, etc., and the profits thereon belong exclusively to him. On these he lost nothing, for it was decided that the printer of the paper could not be called upon to bear any share in the general losses accruing to the publishing department. The whole of the $900,000 has now been paid off, and, as the circulation of the paper and its receipts for advertisements have increased, it is reckoned that a dividend of $10,000 will be paid per share at the close of the year.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The wonderful redwood tree shipped from Tulare county by a Mr. Van Doorman, which will be exhibited at the World's Fair in Chicago, has arrived at San Francisco. Three flat cars were required to haul the exhibit to that city. It weighs 70,000 pounds. It will be exhibited at the Mechanic's Fair in San Francisco. The section of the tree was taken from a mammoth forest in Tulare county, California, within thirty-five miles of Porterville. It was cut from a forest giant 312 feet in height, growing at an altitude of 6,325 feet, and was severed from the parent tree 28 feet above the stump, at which point the tree measured 60 feet in circumference. Of course the tree was considerably larger at the stump, but a section from the base could not be cut for the purpose of transportation for the reason that a solid cut 20 feet in diameter and nine in height, was the maximum of the railway freight limit on flat cars. The entire piece of wood consists of 16 sections as follows: The lower section is a foot in height by 20 feet in diameter, all in one solid cut, weighing 19,728 pounds. This will be arranged as a floor, placed on nine elegantly carved and enormous pedestals made of the wood of the same tree. The next cut is 7 feet in height by 20 feet in diameter, which is hollowed out and will be placed on the floor cut. The last and final cut is one foot higher and similar in every respect to the floor cut. The whole of this remarkable curiosity will form a sort of hall, and will accommodate about 100 people, and will be entered by a swinging door made out of one of the portions of the second section. Two hundred and fifty incandescent lights will illuminate the section inside and out, and a number of skilled wood carvers have been engaged to manufacture souvenirs for distribution among the visitors. —St. Louis Republic.

COMPULSORY KISSING.

"That child cannot have a very affectionate nature. See how she turns her face when one goes to kiss her."

How many times have we heard such criticisms of little ones from those who ought to know better, and how frequently those of us who are mothers have been sorely tried by an inability to know what it was best to do in this matter of kissing!

"Come and kiss me, darling," says an adoring relative or friend. The child demurs.

"Go and kiss auntie," mamma remarks coaxingly.

"Come right here, precious, and give me a good smack," auntie entreats. Still no response.

"Do you hear what I say?" mamma asks presently in a tone that means business. Then the poor baby sidles along slowly and reluctantly, and presents her cheek for the caress she despises. Auntie is shocked and disappointed. The little one draws the line at the cheek, and sets up a shrill remonstrance when the rosebud mouth is insisted upon, and the result is general discomfort. Sometimes insult is added to injury by a quick wiping off of the remains of the obnoxious kiss.

Having a good opportunity for interviewing an intelligent child of four years a short time ago on this subject, the writer took advantage of it, and this was the conversation:—

"Grandpa felt very unhappy when you wouldn't kiss him this morning," I remarked tentatively.

"I did kiss him," my companion replied. "I kissed him in a clean place right by his ear," she added.

"But, Flossy, grandpa wanted you to kiss his lips," I went on.

"I know it, but I won't," was the decided response.

"Well, why won't you?"

"Because it makes me feel bad right here." And the child placed her hand upon her stomach with a gesture and an expression of countenance which I shall not soon forget. "O auntie! I don't like hardly anybody's moufs. Mebbe their teeths ain't brushed."

In talking the matter over with the mother, she said to me with a sigh:—

"Now see what a position I am in. Grandpa has gone away to-day with a real grudge against me for not compelling Flossie to kiss him as he wished to be kissed. He told me I had 'no government whatever,' and that children who were allowed to have their own way in such things were always disliked by everybody. Also, that he had heard several people remark that Florence was anything but an agreeable child. Now, I know how she suffers, for I can remember my own unutterable agony when I used to be compelled to kiss everybody who came to the house. There were some excellent people—indeed, the very salt of the earth—whom I learned to hate sorely on this account, and I dislike them intensely to this day. Flossie is learning this lesson of hating just as I did, and what am I to do?"

It seems to me that sensible mothers should take such matters into their own hands and dispose of them without fear or favor. "My child is not fond of kissing, and you must excuse her if she declines," would soon establish a praiseworthy precedent and relieve the little one from the obnoxious and everlasting teasing.

Some mothers are wise enough to decline to have their children indiscriminately kissed in babyhood. "In order to protect my baby," I heard a mother remark to a gushing visitor one day, "and in order to be perfectly fair to everyone, I have made a rule to have my baby admired at a distance. If I allow kissing and squeezing from one person whom I know I can safely trust my child with, then I offend some good soul whose contiguity I object to."

This parent did not need to tell me that she had undertaken a hard fight, or that she had become exceedingly unpopular with many of her friends. But she was right, and this was the main point after all. Infants and young children seem to be regarded by most people as public property, and the child who possesses enough individuality to protect itself from promiscuous kissing is sure to be regarded as a disagreeable, unloving little creature, who, more likely than not, will come to some "bad end."

We all profess to believe in "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Surely, if we do, we shall more carefully guard the lives of our children, and grant them the liberty to choose whom they shall kiss, and make them happy by seeing to it that they are not forever beset by hunters for kisses.—Babyhood.

FARM NOTES.

THE YIELD PER POUND OF MILK

The range of yield per pound of milk is very wide, says a dairy authority, it taking from six to eight pounds of the richest milk up to thirty and over of the poorest to make a pound of butter. The average of common stock in this country is about twenty-five pounds. Anywhere between that and twenty pounds of milk for a pound of butter is good. Below this is very good and extra down to ten pounds, which is extraordinary. Yet the record shows that some of the Jerseys, and Guernseys give milk as rich as this. From reports made in England, it is judged we have either better dairy stock or better feed than the English. Professor Long, of England, says Jersey and Guernsey cows seldom make less than a pound of butter from eight quarts of milk, but less is required in Autumn—how much less some of them take he does not specify. At ten pounds to the imperial gallon, eight quarts would be twenty pounds of milk. The Professor says the same is true of some of the Shorthorns, of the Red Poll, and of the Devons; but ordinary cows yield a pound of butter in Summer from three gallons of milk, or thirty pounds. In Autumn it takes ten to eleven quarts of milk, or twenty-five to twenty-seven and one-half pounds to make a pound of butter. If these figures can be depended upon, and we estimate the weight correctly, American cows give considerably richer milk than the English cows yield.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

DOES IT PAY TO FEED?

Answering this inquiry, James Wilson says: "That depends. If you have cattle that are to sell when fat at $3.50, don't. If you have to feed ear corn and do not have plenty of healthy shoats, let it alone. If you depend upon hired judgment to make your money by feeding 40-cent corn, keep clear of it. But if you have a few well-bred steers and a comfortable place to feed them, by all means feed them fat. If you grind the ears, and tie up the cattle, and do the work yourself, you will be certain to make money. That's the way Eastern people compete with us. They grind and mix with hay and tie up and do the work themselves, and compete with 100 steers fed with ear corn among mud and northwest wind. We never knew a farmer to feed good steers and lose money. We have known money lost, lots of it, by feeding scrubs. Let the scrub strictly alone this year. You may have to feed him until another crop puts more hope in the horizon. The big feeder will operate. He will buy steers from the farmer who never improves. He will buy corn from the man who sells at the lowest price. The big feeder is an abnormal quantity. A sharp fellow. A philosophic dealer. A friend of yours and mine, but better breeding and feeding among the farmers will lose him acquaintances. Beef will be higher; it must be. Great Britain, our greatest consumer, for good beef, raises less and less. We must furnish more. Nobody else can, because we have the cheapest, best grain. Yes, feed, feed all good cattle. It will pay.—Inter Ocean.

"Does your cow cringe and curl," asks the New England Farmer, "and appear nervous and fidgety when you sit down to milk her?" Well, not much she don't. She isn't that kind of a cow. She isn't one of your shy, timid, bashful cows. She just fixes her eyes on vacancy with a glare that will raise a blister on an oak knot, sticks her tail straight up in the air, stiff as a poker, plants three feet firmly on the ground, and then feels around with the other for the milk-pail, milk-stool and milkmaid; finds them; fires them up somewhere into the empyrean, and remarking, "Ha, ha!" amid the shouting, jumps over a six-rail fence, and tramples down an acre of garden. Don't talk about cringing and curling to a cow that has to be milked with a pipe line and pumping station.—R. J. Burdette in Chicago Journal.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a Weak Stomach.

The Liver

When out of order, involves every organ of the body. Remedies for some other derangement are frequently taken without the least effect, because it is the liver which is the real source of the trouble, and until that is set right there can be no health, strength, or comfort in any part of the system. Mercury, in some form, is a common specific for a sluggish liver; but a far safer and more effective medicine is

Ayer's Pills.

For loss of appetite, bilious troubles, constipation, indigestion, and sick headache, these Pills are unsurpassed.

"For a long time I was a sufferer from stomach, liver, and kidney troubles, experiencing much difficulty in digestion, with severe pains in the lumbar region and other parts of the body. Having tried a variety of remedies, including warm baths, with only temporary relief, about three months ago I began the use of Ayer's Pills, and my health is so much improved that I gladly testify to the superior merits of this medicine."—Manoel Jorge Pereira, Porto, Portugal.

"For the cure of headache, Ayer's Cathartic Pills are the most effective medicine I ever used."—R. K. James, Dorchester, Mass.

"When I feel the need of a cathartic, I take Ayer's Pills, and find them to be more effective than any other pill I ever took."—Mrs. B. C. Grubb, Barwellville, Va.

"I have found in Ayer's Pills, an invaluable remedy for constipation, biliousness, and kindred disorders, peculiar to miasmatic localities. Taken in small and frequent doses, these Pills on the liver, restoring its natural powers, and aiding it in throwing off malarial poisons."—C. F. Alston, Quitman, Texas.

Act Well

"Whenever I am troubled with constipation, or suffer from loss of appetite, Ayer's Pills set me right again."—A. J. Kiser, Jr., Rock House, Va.

"In 1858, by the advice of a friend, I began the use of Ayer's Pills as a remedy for biliousness, constipation, high fevers, and colds. They served me better than anything I had previously tried, and I have used them in attacks of that sort ever since."—H. W. Hersh, Judsonia, Ark.

We have noted the decision of several Iowa courts to the effect that the "original package" saloon business was now prohibited by the present laws of State and nation. These legal declarations are having their effect. At Topeka, Kansas, all the drinking houses lately opened under the former decisions have counseled with their fears and shut up until a decision from a higher court shall make it more safe to take the risk of heavy fines in the future.

A remarkable movement for the closing of all Sunday business has been for some weeks agitating the three neighbor cities of Moline and Rock Island, Illinois, and Davenport, Iowa. It was begun by the clerks who were being pushed into seven working days per week—and long days at that. The churches joined them, sent for Mr. Crafts, and held rousing meetings. The argument and the enthusiasm were almost irresistible. But a few obstructionists held out, chiefly foreigners who hold to the infidel notion that their personal liberties are in danger if they cannot keep up the Sabbath slavery of the working classes. The latter are united in the battle for their liberties, and if wisely led will achieve a great victory for the rational liberty which every true American demands and has a right to enjoy.

President Harrison expects to make a journey of 2,000 miles this week, to cast his vote. He will remain but a few hours in Indianapolis, and he has no other motive for his visit to his home than to set a good example to patriotic Americans. To many of our citizens who would resent the imputation of disloyalty, are yet so untrue to their obligations to the country, that they have generally permitted its local government to slip into most unworthy and untrustworthy hands. Mr. Harrison's example is better than a dozen campaign speeches. America expects every man to do his duty. We shall not judge our President in respect to his ballot. But we believe it can be demonstrated that if it were cast for the nominees of the Prohibition party it would most nearly be fullfilling the object of his journey.

The biggest corner-stone ever laid in Chicago was put in place by Mrs. Carse with the help of several thousand children and friends of the W. C. T. U. last Saturday. The massive block of polished New Hampshire granite that will bear up the principal corner of the Temperance Temple was seven feet square, and weighed ten tons. It bears the inscription, "For God and Home and Native Land. 1890." The exercises began early at the Cavalry Armory with addresses and religious exercises and the singing of two thousand children. These made a beautiful procession, waving flags on their way to the Temple. The picture of the Temple shows one of the most beautiful business buildings to be seen in this or any other country.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the appointment of the Romanist prelate of Chicago as bishop, was the excuse for a grand demonstration of his friends last week for the good of the election. Whether Archbishop Feehan is as popular as the masses, banquets, processions, speeches, fireworks, and all-day receptions at the Auditorium by children and parents, might seem to prove, is a question nobody can answer. An important election was at hand, and the absolute authority of the priest in the parochial school is at stake. The whole two days' performance had an unmistakable air about it, that discredited the sincerity of those who participated. It had much of the Masonic grace in this respect. But in another it was less presumptuous than the lodge. They always parade in the day-time, when they can interfere as much as possible with the business of honest men. The Roman Catholic procession was at night, but it stopped the street cars till twelve o'clock, to the great inconvenience and injury of the public.

The assassination of the Chief of Police in New Orleans by an Italian secret society is arousing that city much as Chicago was startled by the Clan-na-Gael murder of Dr. Cronin a year ago last May. The Mafia society was described in these columns in 1883 at considerable length. It is a secret society peculiarly located in Sicily. Its means of securing its ends is assassination. It is one of Beaconfield's lodges of massacre, which have compelled the governments of the world to take extraordinary efforts for their suppression. The Mayor of New Orleans says of them in his proclamation: "For years past the existence of stilletto societies among the Sicilians in this city has been asserted. Appeal was made to me by a prominent Italian during my former administration to protect him from blackmail and murder, but as he was afraid to give any names I could do nothing for him. It is believed that these horrid associations are patronized by some of the wealthy and powerful members of their own race in this city, and they can point out who the leaders of these associations are. No community can exist with murder societies in its midst. These societies must perish, or the community itself must perish." These declarations are very good; but of what effect are they when the whole community winks at the horrible Masonic oaths with which no others can compare in murderous expressions?

The race prejudice which lies close to the bottom of the opposition of the German Catholics and Lutherans to the school laws of Illinois and Wisconsin, is very frankly confessed by F. A. Hoffman, a German infidel and politician of this city. In a recent speech he declared that present compulsory school law was aimed against German schools, German churches, and especially against the German language. On the contrary it is aimed against neither of these, but only to give the English language a chance. Such a speech is as false as words can make it, but it serves a purpose with such demogogues. It reveals also a bitter race prejudice on the part of men who have removed to this country from despotic Germany to better their condition through the advantages America has ever freely offered.

The Chicago Herald, the ablest Democrat daily in the Lake region, two weeks ago gave up the party to defeat in Wisconsin. Mayor Peck of Milwaukee found the school-house question would probably keep him away from Madison and the governor's chair by 50,000 majority. Before this number of the Cynosure reaches our readers the fact will be known. Gov. Hoard is lauded by his friends and honored even by his enemies for his courageous adherence to his convictions of duty and right. He has not wavered in the struggle for the school law, though at times he seemed to be deserted even by political friends. In Illinois the old parties have been forced to take up an issue they were quite willing to have forgotten. The secret operations of some of the Germans has aroused the people, and there is no more popular word than the common school to-day in the State. It is a matter of much regret that some Germans, whom we know to be capable of better things, are appealing to national prejudice and arousing hatred against non-German-speaking citizens by their so-called declarations of war on the Puritan element. One candidate for the Legislature is reported by the News to have said he was ready to sacrifice every political connection or interest to the one desire to see the German element placed beyond the reach of American law. He claims the German nationality have as much if not more rights to sovereignty in this country than the American or Yankee nationality, and warns German voters that they would be in worse slavery than the Germans suffered in Russia unless they should arise like one man and defeat the Republican party, because the latter was inspired by a Puritan hatred for all that is German; and asserts that it is proposed to shut up every German parochial school, and to force the Germans to adopt the sham religion of the Americans. The author of such sentiments is about as bad as his fellow Germans, the anarchists. It would be a mercy to him to send him back to Germany and keep him there.

ICONOCLASM.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

"See, I have set thee this day over the nations, and over the kingdoms, to root out and to destroy, and to throw down, to build and to plant." Jer. 1: 10.

Jeremiah was a true iconoclast. None of the prophets was called to a life of greater persecution, suffering and ignominy. No character stands out in history as so thoroughly misunderstood, misrepresented and traduced. We wonder that so good a man should have cursed the day in which he was born; but looking at his history we see great, if not just, occasion for the imprecation. Notice how exactly like modern haters of righteousness were those of old time. "I heard the defaming of many; fear on every side. Report, say they, and we will report it. All my familiars watched for my halting, saying, peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him, and we will take our revenge on him." Jer. 20: 10.

Such, to a greater or less degree, has been the character of all reformers; for like Jeremiah they were all iconoclasts. The men who cut down and cleared away the great forests that covered our land from the Atlantic to the great prairies of the West, were iconolasts. They threw down, rooted up, and destroyed, that others might build and plant. Doubtless the destructive work was much the harder of the two. It gave no present remuneration. It seemed even wasteful, for there was both beauty and value in the forests. No great honor ever came to these pioneers. No grand monuments are erected to their memories. They lived simple, toilsome lives, and they sleep in forgotten resting places. Yet how needful was their work! How vastly better than they knew or thought, grew the great fabric whose foundation stones they laid of in patient suffering! Far worthier they of shafts of granite, than those whose claim to praise is based on the number that they killed or conquered.

The reformers of to-day, like Jeremiah, are all iconoclasts. Their work is to uproot, and to throw down those systems of wickedness which in their original conception may not have been wholly wrong, and which may still include some elements of good, but which as systems, have become the refuge of oppression, and "the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird." Not always as wise and patient as Jeremiah, often with the mistakes and follies of a Samson, the reformer goes

> "Smiting the godless shrines of men
> Along his path."

And yet he does for mankind a most needful and noble work, and prepares the way, like the frontier settler, to build and to plant. Much of the reproach that falls upon reformers comes from good people. They forget that some of the most eminent saints and the greatest of the ancient reformers were the greatest iconoclasts. Moses greatly shocked the sense of propriety, and struck a terrible blow at a vast pecuniary interest, when he demanded of Pharaoh to "Let my people go." Elijah must have been thought to be very hard-hearted when he insisted that the four hundred prophets of Baal and the four hundred and fifty prophets of the groves should all be put to death; and Jehoshaphat and Josiah must have been regarded as exceedingly fanatical when they broke down the high places, dug down the altars, and cut down the groves, that had been used for idolatrous worship. It seemed quite unnecessary to the other kings to go to such an extreme. But they alone succeeded in even a temporary reformation.

Much that seems innocent to-day, yea, some things that are loved and honored, will be found ere long to have been hateful in the sight of God, and we will be ready to do honor to the man who with his keener moral perceptions, saw it needful to smite them.

Berea, Ky.

THE MASONIC OATH ITSELF A PERJURY.

Taking the Masonic oath is itself an act of perjury, because the oath is exactly opposed to vows already taken and not annulled. Every candidate for Masonic affiliation must have attained the years of manhood, and a large proportion of those who join the order have already become, in the fullest sense, citizens of the country, while some are members of the church. In addition to this, many are sworn officers of the government or ordained officers of the church.

They are not, therefore, men isolated and free from all connections and affiliations, who now, for the first time, assume relations with other men or with an organization. They are already connected with families, are inseparably involved with those who gave them birth, those who are joined with them by the tie of marriage, and those who are their own flesh and blood inseparably connected with them in permanent relations.

Remoter relationships, in the circles of neighborhood acquaintance and general society, are recognized by all healthy and honorable minds. The men are few who do not feel and acknowledge their connection with society, enough to assert claims and support just demands for recognition, courtesy and protection.

Citizenship, which is membership in the nation, is not only a matter of patriotic sentiment and national pride, but is also practically asserted in voting, performing official duties, and accepting any benefit of civil law, whether in the adjudication of claims or the protection of property or person. In many cases, this is reinforced by an oath of loyalty or one of faithfulness in an official station.

Lastly, membership in the church involves an affiliation of a nature the highest and most solemn. If, in connection with this, a man is still further bound by formal consecration to religious service in the ministry of the Gospel, then a complete and absorbing relation has been recognized as involving the whole life and affecting every department of being. No plea is oftener urged in evidence that Masonry cannot be wrong, than the claim that this last crowning relation, which implies usually all the rest, is actually held by many who have entered the Masonic lodge. They already belong to the home or family lodge, the national lodge, and that higher as well as more ancient fraternity than the Masonic lodge, the Christian church.

We may therefore assume that, not infrequently, there comes to the lodge door a candidate already bound by formal and spoken vows as well as by tacit but distinctly implied obligations. If Masonic vows are to be held up as of transcendent obligation, then these, which antedate and outrank them, are entitled to paramount consideration.

Such are marriage vows, formally and solemnly taken, oaths of loyalty to the government or of integrity and faithfulness in official service, church vows, implied in voluntary membership or specified in articles of solemn covenant, with those secret promises, of the most sacred character conceivable, made in solitude by a human soul and made directly to Almighty God.

If any vows possible to man are solemn and sacred, these are. No room is left inside the lodge for obligations more binding or more profound than those already taken outside. None can be made, more sacred or more irrevocable than these.

If it is perjury to break them, it is perjury to deny them. If it is perjury to break or deny them, then it is the acme of perjury to swear the very opposite, or take an oath to break or to deny them.

More than this, an oath is an appeal to God; but to appeal to God twice for mutual contradictions is a flagrant insult to high heaven, involving the most impious elements of sacrilege.

Still further, a subsequent oath cannot supersede an antecedent one. A second oath, incompatible with the first, does not annul it and sanctify the nullification. It is itself void from the moment of its utterance. There is no room for it, no ground left for it to stand on, no meaning to give it significance or claim to recognition.

Suppose we call it a promise or a prayer; in point of fact it involves both. Then it will be, "I promise to break a promise." Is there any judgmeut throne before which a man will be called for not keeping such a vow?

Or, if it be considered a prayer, it will be, "O God, sanction and second my outspoken purpose to break thy law and disregard thy will." Yet Masons impiously say, "So help me God."

Or it could be, "O God, support thy servant in withholding service, and in violating my most solemn and irrevocable obligations."

Who offers such prayers? Who dares think of such affrontery? Yet, what else is done by Masons! The candidate, who has already put himself under higher obligations, now takes new and conflicting ones, and calls on God. What else does he do if he does not swear to break vows? And if this is not perjury then what else is perjury!

I conclude, therefore, that, if "the obligation makes the Mason," and if he who breaks this obligation is called a "perjured villain," then consistency, with the spirit of such doctrine, demands recognition of the sacredness of obligations already taken, and the villainy and perjury involved in giving and taking oaths contradictory to permanent obligations and vows previously spoken.

I also conclude that every ratification or reaffirmation of the second, void because conflicting, oath; every act of observing or honoriug it as if it were valid, is a renewal of the crime, a perpetuation of the original perjury and a continuance in sin.

COLLEGE FRATERNITIES ADVOCATED AND DEFENDED.

[Argument of John Addison Porter in the Century, September, 1888.]

Till about a dozen years ago few or none of the fraternities had a strong executive government, but were managed by the oldest chapter, or by several chapters in turn, and by the hasty edicts of the general conventions of the order. But this system proving inadequate, the leaders conceived and boldly acted on the idea of taking the general executive administration of the college fraternities out of the hands of the undergraduate members, at the same time appealing to the graduate members to assume an active share in their welfare. So far their success has been noteworthy. The graduate councils, which now form the executive department of most of the leading fraternities, are ably managed, and graduate associations of the larger fraternities have been formed in most of the important cities. They hold reunions, banquets, and business meetings, and in most essentials serve as graduate chapters of their orders, cementing old college ties and forming new ones between members of different colleges; and several of the fraternities, such as the Delta Psi, the Delta Phi, the Delta Kappa Epsilon, the Alpha Delta Phi, the Psi Upsilon, the Zeta Psi, and the Delta Upsilon, have lately taken the advanced step of establishing in the large cities regular club-houses, which are well equipped, and well patronized by men of all ages; while at Chautauqua, the "Wooglin" club-house, with its ample accommodations and grounds, is the summer headquarters of the Beta Theta Pi, by a graduate corporation of which it is owned.

The legislative functions of the fraternities still rest with the annual conventions, which are usually held with the different undergraduate chapters in turn, when, besides the transaction of routine business, the several hundred students present from all parts of the country are occupied with social courtesies extended to them by local residents, and with literary efforts in the form of orations and poems, often delivered by members of the fraternity who have attained eminence in public life.

In view of the facts already presented in the course of this narrative, a defense of the fraternities, a summing-up of all the reasons on which their existence and continuance might be justified, seems altogether superfluous. This one significant feature of the case may however be offered to the dubious without comment, as pointing its own moral—that so far, whenever the majesty of the law has been invoked by still obstinate faculties or trustees to drive the fraternities from their institutions, the law has upheld the continuance of the societies and the free rights of the students to join them, provided that in doing so they do not violate any of the proper functions of the college. It was so in 1879, when the faculty of the University of California tried to disband a society which had been allowed to erect a house on college land, and was met by the hostile criticisms of the entire press of that State; it was so in 1882, when the president of Purdue University, Indiana, striving to compel students entering his university not to join any of the societies, was prevented by a decision of the superior court of that State, and in the end resigned his office. The oue notable exception to this rule is the case of the college of New Jersey. Here the faculty succeeded in expelling all the fraternities; but it was before the era of their house-building. All of those chapters which have built houses are now incorporated institutions, paying taxes on their real and personal property, and entitled to the full privileges and protection of local and State laws.

They therefore appear to rest on a more solid basis than mere sufferaunce; and however ardently certain individuals may wish to see them abolished, it is extremely doubtful if even an organized crusade against them, headed by all the college presidents in the United States and a majority of the faculties under them, could succeed in doing more than to drive the reputable societies into a temporary seclusion, from which, in a few years, they would emerge stronger than ever. Such at least has been the case at many representative institutions.

But the above supposition is relegated to the realms of the impossible when one discovers that a large portion of the educators referred to are themselves members of the fraternities, and in many cases actively associated with their progress. This list includes such men as President Eliot of Harvard, Dwight of Yale, Walker of the Boston Institute of Technology, Seelye of Amherst, White of Cornell, Dwight of the Columbia Law School, Gilman of Johns Hopkins University, Johnston of Tulane, and Northrop of the University of Minnesota. There is not a faculty of any size in the Uuited States that does not contain society members, and few professorial chairs at the largest colleges are not filled by representatives of the leading fraternities. The "little societies" have supplied forty governors to most of the largest States of the Union; and had in the last administration the President of the United States and the majority of his Cabinet. On the Supreme Bench of the United States the fraternities are now represented by five of the associate justices. A summary, published in 1885, showed Alpha Delta Phi, Psi Upsilon, and Delta Kappa Epsilon to have furnished of United States Senators and Representatives 39, 25, and 36 respectively; while in the last Congress 13 Representatives and 2 Senators were members of the last-named fraternity alone; and in the membership of these three fraternities are included 24 bishops of the Protestant Episcopal church. In the classroom they are represented by Whitney and Marsh; in the pulpit, by R. S. Storrs and Phillips Brooks; in the paths of literature, by James Russell Lowell, George William Curtis, Donald G. Mitchell, Charles Dudley Warner, Edward Everett Hale, and E. C. Stedman; in recent public life, by Presidents Arthur and Garfield, by Wayne McVeagh, Charles S. Fairchild, Robert T. Lincoln, John D. Long, William M. Evarts, Joseph R. Hawley, and William Walter Phelps. These gentlemen were not elected into the fraternities after graduation, but were active supporters of these organizations during their undergraduate days. Whatever, then, may be the shortcomings of college secret societies, it is to their credit that their exponents are men noted for ability and prominence in every useful sphere of life, as well as for mere culture and congeniality, while from end to end of the catalogued chapter-lists run in thick procession the starred names of the most brilliant and lamented of the young officers who fell in the battles of our civil war—in the blue and gray ranks alike. Judging the system by its deeds only, it is difficult to escape the conclusion that the best societies have in reality been groups of picked men among the fortunate few, comparatively speaking, who are able to incur the expense of a college education.

In almost every college where the secret societies have flourished attempts have been made, some of them quite successful, to carry on local anti-secret societies; and there has existed for many years an anti-secret fraternity, with chapters placed in different colleges, which has been patterned very closely after the societies calling themselves secret, both as to means and ends. But in one case only, that of Delta Upsilon, have the anti-secret orders been able to keep pace with their secret rivals, in either the quality of their membership, their activity in college affairs, or their increase in material resources. Even here this has been the result of assimilation to the secret fraternities, till now, so far as Delta Upsilon can effect it, the distinction between itself and the secret fraternities is simply that the latter exposes somewhat more private business than do they, and, as to the rest, terms "privacy" what they call "secrecy."

DR. SEELYE'S VIEWS.

AMHERST COLLEGE,
AMHERST, Mass., Sept. 4, 1890.

MY DEAR SIR:—Yours of the 1st inst. is received. My views on the topic to which you refer are still the same as expressed in the Century letter, and I see no sufficient reason for re-stating them in another article. Very truly yours,

JULIUS H. SEELYE.

Mr. Henry L. Kellogg.

[Letter of Dr. Seelye in Century, Sept, 1888.]

Others can give a more accurate opinion than I upon college fraternities elsewhere; but so far as Amherst is concerned, there can be only a favorable judgment concerning them by any one well informed. Without a doubt they exercise here a wholesome energy, both upon their individual members and upon the college. Combination is strength, whether with young men or old; and where men combine for good ends better results may, of course, be looked for than where the same ends are sought by individuals alone.

Now the aim of these societies is certainly good. They are not formed for pleasure simply, though they are one of the most fruitful sources of pleasure in a student's college life. Their first aim is the improvement of their members—improvement in literary culture and in manly character. They are all of them literary societies. An effort was made not long since to introduce among us a new society, with prominently social rather than literary aims; but it not only failed to receive the requisite assent of the president of the college, but was not favored by any considerable number of the students, many of whom stoutly opposed it.

One of the happiest features of society life at Amherst is connected with the chapter-houses. There are no better residences in the villages than these, and none are better kept. They are not extravagant, but they are neat and tasteful; they have pleasant grounds surrounding them, the cost of rooms in them is not greater than the average cost in other houses, and they not only furnish the students occupying them a pleasant home, but the care of the home and its surroundings is itself a culture.

There need be no objection to these societies on account of their secrecy. The secrecy is largely in name; is, in fact, little more than the privacy proper to the most familiar intercourse of families and friends. Treated as the societies are among us, and occupying the ground they do, no mischief comes from their secrecy. Instead of promoting cliques and cabals, in point of fact we find less of these than the history of the college shows before the societies came. The rivalry between them is a healthy one, and is conducted openly and in a manly way.

The societies must give back to the college the tone they have first received. I am persuaded that in any college where the prevailing life is true and earnest the societies fed by its fountain will send back bright and quickening streams. They certainly give gladness and refreshment to our whcle college life at Amherst.

THE CHRISTIAN IN POLITICS.

The Christian should be in politics.

He has the same interest in public affairs as others. The welfare of the country is as important to him as it is to others. His love for his country should be intensified by his love to God, who gave us this land and our good institutions, and has opened to us such marvelous possibilities. No one has more at stake in the future than he, for the church and its precious interests are involved. Also the traits of character which he possesses are essential to the permanency of the nation. It is in righteousness that a nation lives. They who fear God are under his blessing and protection. Such should be chosen to office; but this can be only when Christian men make conscience of taking part in politics.

As it is they are virtually excluded. Political management has become so intensely partisan that they have not the freedom of conscientious action. The broader views of right are lost sight of in bids for success. The issues are not so much moral principles as offices and profits. The appeals are not to intelligence and conscience, but to the lower motives, and such means are used as imply the prior degradation of manhood. The saloon is too often the headquarters of the local organization; at all events its influence is so great that its behests may not be disregarded. Moral issues are avoided, and such men are chosen as may be most available and will best suit the interests of the party managers. Charges of gross corruption do not exclude men from honorable positions so long as they can successfully marshal the party forces. All this tends to drive honest, Christian men away from all part in public affairs.

The duty of Christians becomes the more imperative because such is the present condition of our political affairs. The permanency of a nation rests on its moral character. God will not allow injustice and vice to go on indefinitely. They who fear God are the salt of the earth. Christian conscientiousness is required in making up the issue. The real issues are not commercial, they are not partisan; they are moral. The first great duty of a nation is to do right. There is wrong in the land, there is vice and iniquity, there is extortion, and thousands groan under oppression. The remedy is in the intelligent, Christian sense of right towards all, of every standing in society; to the humblest and poorest as well as to the highest and richest. This can be attained only by Christians taking an active part in political affairs. It is useless to lament; we must work. We need not to fall upon our faces and cry out in our despondency, but to rise and go forward, as our duty may appear.

The Christian should be independent in his politics. Parties necessarily arise, and there will always be divisions as to policy and measures. But the first point is to do right. A party long in power may easily become corrupt, and in that case it forfeits all claim upon the support of its members. We cannot live upon the past; we must live in the present, and by doing present duty. No man may hold his conscience at the command of a party. No carefully-worded platform can stand against the personal character of candidates, no finely-phrased promise of reform can satisfy the conscience so long as corrupt practices are tolerated and great moral issues are avoided. The safety of the nation lies in the independence of the Christian voters.

There should be no delay in this declaration of independence. The plea is made for postponement. Admitting the evils that cause uneasiness and disobedience to party call, it is urged that just now it would imperil other great interests to refuse to support the party candidates. At the next election it is the same. Promises are made, but they are broken. The time for duty is the present. If a party will not maintain its allegiance to right, loyalty to right requires disobedience to its orders. Just so soon as the Christians of the country show that with them right is above party, so soon will there be a purer political atmosphere.

The Christian should be in politics, taking an active part in the formulating issues and the nomination of men. He should be there, with manly independence, in the freedom of an intelligent conscience. He should be there in the name of God and purity and right.—The Evangelical Repository.

THE REASON WHY.

WILL SOMEBODY RISE AND TELL?

In an audience where the secret lodge system was under consideration, a lady rose and said, "I belong to the Good Templars in ——," naming a certain New England town. "We have done a great work for temperance. Nearly all the members of our lodge are Christians. Now would you condemn such a lodge and advise me to leave it?"

"What is done in your lodge that needs to be covered up and kept from the good people in your city?" was asked.

"Nothing," was the prompt reply. "We march and sing, take a pledge and drink a swallow of water, etc."

Certainly if these are proper and innocent acts, then why should such ceremonies, simple even to childishness, be covered up under the same veil of secrecy that is used by the Mormon, the Jesuit or the Hindoo Thug? And as "he that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be manifest," would it not be better to avoid even the "appearance of evil" and "walk in the light as he is in the light."—Christian Witness.

A Cedar Rapids (Iowa) woman has sued three saloon-keepers and the owners of the property on which the saloons were located for $2,000 damages each for selling liquor to her husband. It is to be hoped that by a fearless application of the principles of law and equity here involved the owners of the saloon property will be mulcted in adequate damages. It is the same principle that obtains in the Illinois statutes against gambling. The owners of property which is used for gaming purposes are liable for damages, and can be sued by any person who loses money in these dens.

Governor McKinney, of Virginia, says that it is not at all necessary for a public man to drink, as is often asserted. It has been his invariable practice to decline all "treats" in his political campaigns, and he believes that instead of losing, he has gained votes by his abstinence.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Matters political.—A disgraceful affair.—The Industrial Alliance.—A new phase of the labor war.--A unknown God.—The Andover case.

Says F. W. Robertson, "When we say two men are talking politics, we often mean that they are only wrangling about some mere party question." In this sense "politics are in the air," but it would be well for the contesting parties—and it would certainly be a saving of newspaper space, that might more profitably be taken up with other things—if they would remember the old proverb that the pot should not refer in uncomplimentary terms to the complexion of the kettle. Governor Brackett's endorsement of the West End, and above all his failure to use the rarest opportunity ever afforded an executive, to put down the lobby, are now returning to haunt, and very possibly, spoil all his dreams of a re-election; and it is of no use though it may be very convenient for him to say that "the lobby is not an issue in this campaign." Moral questions are as obstinate as Banquo's ghost, and this one has so far refused to obligingly seek its place among the shades of defunct issues, because the Governor asserts that it ought to. On the other hand, the Democratic party, which is working it with might and main, as a handle by which to defeat the opposite side, is just as deep in the mire of legislative corruption. Its ticket is even headed by the attorney of the West End corporation! But the people are getting tired of these extraordinary displays of political virtue, just before election time, and the probability is that Massachusetts will see a much larger independent vote than usual cast this year.

The Worcester Times is responsible for a story which ought to make every Christian Prohibitionist in the State hang his head for shame. The Young Men's Christian Association of New Bedford, recently laid the corner-stone for a new building to be erected by the organization, and Governor Brackett was present and assisted in the exercises, which was all in the highest degree right and proper, but, alas! for the scandalous sequel! In the evening Mayor Clifford "gave a reception to the Governor and other distinguished guests, together with numerous well known citizens, including several clergymen," at which the liquor flowed in such abundance that the affair ended with a debauch in which, according to the Taunton Gazette, "some of the city fathers lost their balance." The mayor who disgraced his office and the city to which he owed it, by thus providing the means for so scandalous an exhibition, is not more worthy of blame than those ministers and members of the Association, who could remain as guests and witness such scenes. The Y. M. C. A. has done a good work in the past, but good works will not save a religious society any more than they will save the individual members; and the Association must not only eschew such "receptions" in future, but must cease cultivating the acquaintance of wealthy brewers, in order to get a pull at their pocket-books, if it wants to retain the sympathy and support of Christian people.

The British Citizen says that "Massachusetts has now over fifty thousand men pledged to support the public schools against Romish encroachments." United with the Prohibitionists they will make a powerful factor at the coming election.

The Industrial Alliance is another organization which is making quite a stir in the political field. It is a rather heterogeneous body, socialists, nationalists, and Knights of Labor, but all united in demanding governmental control of all public works, the eight-hour law, annual instead of biennial elections, raising the school age for children, opposing the employment of private armed bodies such as the Pinkerton, and others of like tenor. The Alliance does not favor any special party, but have sent out circulars to the various candidates asking their views on these questions. The Prohibition candidates, I notice, endorse their platform very generally, and from them the Alliance would undoubtedly get honest support in most of its measures. The great weakness of all labor parties which have yet arisen, seems to me to be this:—that they apparently recognize no deeper need for the laborer, than is involved in the mere material issues from which they create their platform, or the importance of removing those moral evils which block the way to his attainment of even these. A writer in a recent number of the Nineteenth Century, has a paper on "The Ideals of the Masses," which inquires, "What are the deepest motives in the working classes to which an appeal can be made, and are their leaders willing and competent to make it?" So long as the workingman is tacitly taught by his leaders that the chief end and aim of political action on his part is merely to get his share of the good things of this life, all labor movements will be a failure. He will be the prey of lodge-men, saloon-men and demagogues; but once link his cause with that of moral reform, and not all the moneyed monopolies of the world could stand before it.

Another young man, this time in Brockton, has gone wrong and confessed himself a forger to the amount of $100,000. As usual, heavy speculation is the cause. So long as we make a god of financial success, so long men will sacrifice soul and reputation on his altar. Take up any paper for youth, even of the most moral class, and notice what kind of public men are therein held up for imitation. Almost invariably it is the successful business man, seldom or never the scholar, the preacher, the philanthrophist, who remains poor because, like Agassiz "he has no time to make money." Says Carlyle, "Show me the man you honor; I know by that symptom better than by any other what kind of a man you yourself are." And just as surely does a nation write its own character in the ideals it sets before its ambitious youth.

Two more fatal accidents have recently been added to the long list of injuries to life and limb, which lie at the doors of the West End. It is said that the company in order to give the men no opportunity to organize into trades unions, are continually weeding out old and trusty employees, and filling their places with new and inexperienced hands, which is the reason of so many serious casualities. If so, this is a new phase of the labor war, and one calculated to set the public to thinking.

The Supreme Grand Lodge of the Ladies' Loyal Orange Association, has recently held its meeting in Boston with the usual lodge display of Supreme Grandism, which certainly crossed the line from the ridiculous to the blasphemous, when the Grand Secretary in her address spoke of "our Supreme Divine Grand Master," by whose permission they were thus allowed to assemble "and devise means and ways for the advancement of the Protestant religion." One may well pray God to save the Protestant religion from "ways and means" devised by those who so little understand its genius and spirit. Luther and Calvin worshiped no such "unknown God" as the Supreme Divine Grand Master.

It is said that half a dozen bushel baskets will hardly contain all the voluminous mass of writing evolved by the famous Andover case, which now goes to the Supreme Court for settlement. It is fortunate that questions of theology seldom become questions of law, for when they do they are usually dragged out to almost interminable length. Andover was founded to teach the Puritan type of doctrine, and it certainly seems an unlawful diversion of the original funds to allow another and radically different type to be taught there. This has happened, however, to other and older universities than Andover. It is a curious fact that John Wesley was educated at Lincoln College, which was founded in 1424 by Richard Fleming, for the purpose of training theologians to exterminate the principles of Wickliffe. One can but faintly imagine the horror of the original founder, could he have foreseen that from its walls should go forth the Apostle of Methodism.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 29, 1890.

The Department of Justice has sent a circular letter to U. S. Marshals and District Attorneys, calling attention to the new anti-lottery law and directing them to spare no effort in its enforcement. I quote the following paragraph therefrom:

"Every violation of this law, either by an individual or a corporation, in the dissemination of lottery literature or in any other way, should be brought to the attention of the grand jury, and whenever indictments are found, vigorous prosecutions should follow, to the end that this nefarious business may be suppressed. In the enforcement of this law there should be a hearty co-operation on the part of the District Attorneys, Marshals and Postoffice Inspectors."

To all of which all right minded-men and women will say, Amen.

The semi-annual meeting of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal church will convene here tomorrow morning, and it is expected that it will take them the rest of the week to get through with their business, which consists of a review of the work done for the past six months and the mapping out of the work for the next six months. The Bishops will attend a reception tendered them by the colored members of their church on Thursday evening, and on Friday evening another tendered by the whites. On Monday evening next they are all to attend a monster mass meeting in the interest of the proposed Methodist University in this city. President Harrison is expected to preside; and Bishop Hurst, who is at the head of the University project, has returned from Europe and will tell what has already been done and what is expected to be accomplished in the near future toward the realization of what he has so much at heart—the establishment of a great University under Methodist auspices.

A striking object lesson in temperance is furnished by a suit just filed in one of the local courts. A woman, who acknowledges that she is an abject slave of the rum fiend, charges that certain individuals, knowing her weakness, plied her with liquor for the purpose of fraudulently purchasing her interest in certain real estate, and that while in a drunken stupor she signed papers disposing of her interest for a nominal sum. She now sues to regain possession of the property. Ah! rum, how much misery thou art responsible for, and how terrible is the thought of the devastation and ruin brought by thy aid upon the bodies and souls of men and women, who should be as they were intended to be, "only a little lower than the angels!"

The Washington ministers of all denominations are taking a deep interest in the question of preventing the World's Fair opening on the Sabbath, and I should not be surprised if they took some formal action in the matter before Congress meets again. I understand that Mr. Harrison has expressed himself privately as being opposed to having the exposition open on the Sabbath day, and Mr. Wanamaker is also known to be opposed to it. In fact, in my opinion, all that the opposition to this desecration needs to do is to combine and make itself heard. It is entirely too strong to be ignored by Congress.

The question of allowing women to act as delegates to the General Conference, which has been a source of much good-natured contention among the Methodists, was voted on last night, and the total vote was 467 against, 394 for. The vote is ridiculously small when the large number of Methodists is remembered, and indicates that the great majority are indifferent in the matter. *

Mr. Spurgeon, in preaching at Brighton last month, made reference to the request he had heard in one of the churches in Rome soon after the death of Cardinal Wiseman, for the prayers of the worshipers for the repose of the cardinal's soul. Mr. Spurgeon continued: "Now I don't pretend to know where the cardinal has gone to, but it was evident that his own people thought he was not very comfortable where he was, or they would not have been so anxious to pray for his repose. If that was the case with one of the princes of the Romish church, what are we to expect with reference to its ordinary members?"—Inquirer.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE EVANGELIST MILLS AT OBERLIN, AND OTHER OHIO NOTES.

Oberlin, O., Oct. 29, 1890.

Dear Cynosure:—I reached home on the 25th for a brief visit with my family, having been absent about six months. Oberlin, though it has yet no president, has more than its usual number of students, and, as I was glad to learn, was not hurt by the failure of Mr. Peters, of Michigan. He had paid nearly all that he had promised.

For more than two weeks, there has been in progress here, a remarkable revival of religion. It reminds me of the earlier days in the "forties," when there seemed to be a constant and continual revival, which only at times was more earnest than at others. Mr. B. Fay Mills, a distinguished evangelist, has done the preaching. A. M. Greenwood has conducted the song service. There have been three services daily, and since no place of meeting could hold all who desired to hear, they have been often alternately for men only, or for women only. When there were several congregations at the same time, they were mixed.

Mr. Mills looks youthful and cannot be over thirty-five, perhaps younger. His manner is much like Mr. Moody's, but he is doubtless a man of greater advantages and more culture. There has been great calmness connected with the movement, and the appeals have been almost wholly to the reason and the conscience. In his theological views he seems to follow Mr. Finney quite closely. He is always impressive, and sometimes eloquent. More than 700 persons, I am told, have signed cards declaring their purpose to lead a Christian life, and it is hoped that the end is not yet reached, for though Bro. Mills leaves today, the pastors expect to continue the meetings.

As might be expected, there has nothing of a denominational character entered into these meetings. All the churches here have been most cordially united. I do not know whether Mr. Mills is connected with any denomination, but feel quite sure that he belongs to "The Holy Catholic Church."

Not the least of the blessings that have come from this revival is the waking up and unifying the members of the churches. Oberlin church-members had, I fear, become much like the Republican party, disposed to live on their past record. It is to be hoped that henceforth they will be like Paul, "forgetting those things that are behind, and reaching out unto those things that are before; I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Phil. 3: 13, 14.

I observe that your excellent correspondent, Bro. J. M. Foster, has an article in the last Christian Statesmen, in reference to the importance of the National Reform Association, which will apply equally well to the National Christian Association. The fact especially emphasized is, the importance of Christian union as a condition of success. I am glad that so careful a thinker and writer sees this matter so clearly. He says:

"The work of public reformation requires the co-operative effort of all the churches to accomplish it. But the denominations cannot and will not do it. These divisions in Christ's house have been the cause of the church's weakness and have brought defeat and disaster. There is now a crisis upon the church. The different evangelical bodies must unite to meet it or suffer a shameful defeat. But the denominations are not prepared for this co-operative effort. If one undertakes it the rest will stand aloof. They will, however, unite in supporting an association for this purpose. The National Reform Association is a human device to meet this emergency, to counteract the evil effects of schism in the church, and to secure the co-operation among Christ's followers in a work that cannot be done except by the united efforts of all. When these divisions have been healed and the church is one, there will be no necessity for such an expedient, and it will quickly pass out of sight. But until these wicked divisions, which originated in human depravity, and have resulted in unspeakable harm, have been put away, the National Reform Association will be indispensable to the Redeemer's kingdom. May the day soon come when for the divisions of Reuben there shall be 'great searchings of heart.'"

All of which is true and timely, but applies equally to the N. C. A., the W. C. T. U., and some other organizations. But since it is these "wicked divisions" which have "resulted in unspeakable harm," are the occasion of their necessity, why, I ask, is it not better to donate at least a part of our energies to a reformation in the church? At least ought we not, one and all, to cease from all complicity with such divisions and such unholy results?

UTICA, Ohio.—No great prophet was ever raised up to plead for Baal. The old prophets always appealed to the higher and nobler sentiments. Baal worship represented the lowest and basest impulses of humanity. Baal could plead for himself, and it was a work of gratuitous folly to plead in his behalf. What was true of the old heathenism is equally true of our modern systems of wickedness. No man who has any just comprehension of the nature of the saloon or of the lodge, and is not lost to all true self-respect, will think of pleading in their behalf, and no one ever does so without forfeiting the respect of even the ungodly. The world understands quite clearly that those institutions and practices that have their origin in selfishness and which ministers to depraved appetites and propensities ask only to be let alone. When forced to fight in self-defense, it is always on a false issue. They can never make a candid appeal to man's moral nature or even to practical common sense. Common honesty revolts at the idea of doing service for iniquity.

And yet, strange to say, there is here and there a man so conspicuous in his folly that he takes it for granted that Baal needs his support, and that it is his wisdom to plead for him.

A case of this kind has just come under my observation. This little village of Utica, Ohio, has four churches, no saloon, a Masonic and an Oddfellows' lodge. Two of these churches—embracing a majority of the professed Christians in the place, are committed against the lodge system, while in another, the Presbyterian, there is a considerable anti-secrecy element. The lodge influence, however, is strong and favors those preachers who fail to rebuke it. The pastor of the Presbyterian church has, I am told, until recently maintained a position of careful neutrality, but last Sababth evening he preached a sermon in defense of the lodge system, in which he tried to show that not only were the effects of this system most beneficial to society, but the means by which they were accomplished quite in harmony with Christian principles. I am told that he enumerated particularly the secrecy, the oaths, and the signs of recognition, and found their counterpart in the practices of the earlier Christians as well as the Jewish church. The remarkable fact is, that while making this plea, he declared that he was not a member of any secret order, and was entirely ignorant of the internal character of the system.

One great, and I trust, lasting good will grow out of this (to call it by no harder name) gratuitous folly. The testifying churches of Utica had nearly gone to sleep on this question. It had been difficult to awaken an interest in the secrecy question, and the stealthy lodge influence was pervading and poisoning the moral atmosphere. Now they are quite awake, and hope to get Dr. H. H. George to come and give the lodge a thorough ventilation. No man can do it better.

AN HISTORICAL VALLEY.

FAYETTEVILLE, Pa., Oct. 29, 1890.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—It has been my privilege to spend a few days in the Cumberland Valley. This is one of the richest, most beautiful and healthy valleys in the United States. The greatest mistake Gen. Lee made was to lead the army of Virginia into it. When they saw it, there was "no more spirit in them." They said, like the Queen of Sheba when she saw the glory of Solomon's court, "Behold, the half was not told us." The defeat of Gettysburg, which followed three weeks later, occurred in the hearts of his soldiers when they entered this valley. Any one wishing to purchase a farm of rich land, in the midst of the most enchanting scenery, at the door of the best markets in the country, at anywhere from $30 to $60 an acre, with the purest and most invigorating atmosphere, neighbors of the best type, educational facilities of the first order and religious privileges of the most pronounced evangelical type, would do well to go to the Cumberland Valley.

I first stopped at Hagerstown, Md., twenty miles north of the Potomac river. This is a growing city of 11,000. Lee's army made a levy of $20,000 upon them. They are now having a boom. In two days $75,000 worth of lots were sold to Baltimore and Philadelphia capitalists. They expect to have 20,000 people within five years. The Blue Mountain House overlooks them. Last summer, during the heated term, some eighty Congressmen were wont to come out there Saturday, and return to Washington Monday.

An appointment had been made for me to lecture in the Presbyterian church at Greencastle, Pa., a town of 1,500 about twelve miles north. The continued heavy rain literally drowned out the meeting. Two of Mr. John Kennedy's sons drove in three miles. But they have Covenanter blood in their veins and are always in line when service is called for. Rev. Hunter, the Presbyterian pastor, Rev. Lutz, the Reformed pastor, these two young men and an elderly man were all who ventured out. We had a pleasant talk and planned for future work. We were entertained at the home of Rev. Joshua Kennedy, D. D. He was pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian church of this valley for sixteen years. Then he was chaplain in the army and organizer of missions among the Freedmen in Florida. Then he served as pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian church of Bovina, N. Y., for sixteen years. He had a stroke of paralysis in 1884. Since that time he has lived in Greencastle. He received a call from the Third Reformed Presbyterian church of New York city; also from two large Presbyterian congregations in this valley.

We next saw Chambersburg, the town that was burned by the Southern raiders during the war. It is ten miles north of Greencastle. The next four days I assisted Rev. W. J. Sproull of the Reformed Presbyterian church of Fayettville, Pa., at his communion. This brother served as missionary from the Reformed Presbyterian church to Syria for six years. He was one of the best Arabic scholars in the field. He has been laboring here for two years. His praises are on all lips. As an accomplished scholar, a clear thinker, an attractive preacher, and a great-hearted pastor he has won golden opinions from all. The Board of Foreign Missions offered him the Cyprus mission last summer. But his people will not think of giving up their pastor. I spent Saturday night at the home of Mrs. White. Gen. Lee's tent was only ten yards from their front gate, the night before the engagement began at Gettysburg. He seems to have been surprised. He expected to march to Baltimore and Washington without let or hindrance.

On Sabbath evening I lectured in Bro. Sproull's church on "The Basis of Moral Reforms." This meeting was held under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. They have not been organized a great while, but there is not a licensed saloon in Fayetteville. We had a full house. Rev. Cyrus Cort, of the Lutheran church, offered prayer. At the close he said, "I wonder that such a presentation of the facts does not set the people's hearts on fire." I replied, "When the wood is wet it takes a great many coals and much blowing to get the fire to burn." The Abolitionists made little headway until John Brown threw the bombshell with lighted fuse into the powder magazine. It may be that a similar sacrifice will have to be made to precipitate the great moral conflict that will bring in the third and last reformation. The agent at the Fayetteville station and his good wife were out. He has been a reader of the Cynosure for years. They are in the front ranks of the Reform army.

Bro Sproull's congregation is perhaps the oldest in the Reformed Presbyterian church. It and the congregation of Coldenham, N. Y., were organized near the same date. As would be expected they are the best friends the National Reform movement has. Prof. Coleman went through this valley some years ago, also Secretary Weir not long ago.

THE GOOD WORK OF THE EVANGELIST, WOLFE.

MAZOMANIE, Wis., Oct. 21, 1890.

DEAR EDITOR OF THE CYNOSURE:—I want to lay before your readers some interesting information respecting the soul-saving labors of J. E. Wolfe, the evangelist, at the following places, namely: "Arena, where he began work on the 7th of August, Barneveld, Dodgeville and Mazomanie. His work has been owned of God in the conversion of many souls and the quickening of the churches. There has been indeed a mighty shaking among the dry bones. His Bible readings were grand; his preaching was with the power from on high. There was much of Holy Ghost power in the meetings. Like a man of God, Bro. Wolfe demonstrated that he feared neither men nor devils. He assailed with strong words the wicked practice of dancing. His picture of the evils resulting from the different kinds of dances, was truly appalling; and he did not forget to rebuke those ministers of the Gospel who are connected with secret societies, or who stand by the side of or purposely uphold the existing systems or institutions of soul-destroying wickedness.

Mr. Wolfe also laid a heavy hand on Romanism, the confessional, the celibacy of the priests; and he had plenty of books and facts on hand, which made him more than a match for the papacy, which aroused one of the priests and his followers almost to violence.

His assault on Odd-fellowship and Masonry was masterly and crushing at Dodgeville, so much so that one minister, named Baker, aban doned and publicly denounced Odd-fellowship; and the head Mason of the place showed his badge and said that is the last of it, and a number of others left the lodge forever.

Bro. Wolfe commenced preaching at the above named places Aug. 7th, and closed Oct. 19th, and started the same evening for his home at Vinita, in the Indian Territory. Two young ladies from Arena accompanied him, Miss Alice Hamilton and Miss Lizzie Billington, for the purpose of acting as teachers and otherwise assisting in the establishment in the work of training the Indian children. Mr. Henry Richards of Mazomanie, goes to take charge of the carpentering business, and a number of other young persons from Barneveld and Dodgeville will follow. The number of converts at all the places are reported to be 316.

Bro. Wolfe and his excellent wife are doing a great work for those Indian children, by taking them into their home, feeding them, clothing them, civilizing them, Christianizing them, and teaching them trades by which they can obtain a livelihood; and not only so, but they have another noble aim which should be noticed and highly appreciated, and that is to have as many as possible of them qualified to act as missionaries among the other Indian tribes. In that way they are seeking to bless the entire Indian nation, and helping the civilization of the world. In this grand effort which they are putting forth, they ask the prayers and sympathy of the Christian world.

AMOS ELLIS.

THE EVANGELIST NEEDHAM IN ST. PAUL.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Oct. 25, 1890.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Rev. G. C. Needham has been holding meetings in this city the past three or four weeks. He was asked to give his view of the religion of Masonry as compared with that of the Bible. He replied by saying that not being a Mason he knew nothing about it, except that it was a charitable institution; that he was not aware that it was a religion, but, if so, it was an anti-Christ, as are all religions except the religion of the Bible; and that he was like the Irish pilot who knew nothing of the rocks and shoals, but he knew the channel, and always kept the ship in it. At the same time, we observed that he did not hesitate to faithfully warn the churches against Romanism, church lotteries, progressive euchre and the theatre.

However, he subsequently said in private that Freemasonry and all other secret societies are blasphemy. And one prominent Mason who some three months ago renounced Masonry, gave Bro. Needham his costly secret society jewels, and promised not to go into a secret lodge again.

As Jesus said, "If I say the truth, why do ye not believe me? He that is of God heareth the words of God; for this cause ye hear them not, because ye are not of God." May not these words have an application in the Christian's testimony to the truth about the infamous lodge worship? Surely we are all responsible to God for letting the truth that we possess, in regard to secret lodge blasphemy, shine. And it ought to be proclaimed in trumpet tones from every pulpit, and by every Christian in every prayer and conference meeting. Yours truly, W. FENTON.

PITH AND POINT.

A MAN BOTH DANGEROUS AND IN DANGER.

There is a man holding a meeting at our town who calls himself a Christian preacher. He is a Mason and an Odd-fellow and advocates the lodges on the streets. I gave him some of your tracts. He looked them over, and when he come to "Christianity and Odd-fellowship," he remarked that the two worked well together. I told him that I did not know that devil worship and Christianity would work together. I gave tracts to most all of the congregation of which I am a member, and have refused to support this preacher either with my money or presence. I was an Odd-fellow about four years, and I got a glimpse at the light and I came out from among them. This preacher told the people a few nights ago that he would not go to any place where Jesus would not go.—JOSEPH BALL.

NOTE.—Bro. Ball wishes our opinion of such a preacher. He is surely a very much mistaken man, and therefore is a blind leader of the blind with the ditch before him; or else he is a wolf in sheep's clothing, whose disguise should be torn off, and his real character made known.

TRUTH THAT WILL STAND.

I should feel lost without the Cynosure, as I greatly appreciate the reformatory truths it vindicates from week to week. They have been my sentiments for forty years, and now, as well as in the days of my youth, they are as food to my soul. I most fully believe them to harmonize with Bible teaching and, as such, stand approved by the Judge of quick and dead. Let us all labor and pray for their complete triumph among all men. So may every branch which our heavenly Father hath not planted be speedily rooted up.—E. THOMPSON, Senecaville, O.

WILL READ IT AS LONG AS HE CAN.

My health and eye-sight are fast failing; but I want your noble paper as long as I can see to read it. I would like to have sent you quite a number of subscribers, but times here among farmers are very close and hard. Now may the good Lord bless you all in your every effort to destroy all those combinations and rings that are now a curse to our nation.—JEREMIAH KIRKPATRICK, Shelby, O.

FOR OUR MOTHERS, WIVES AND SISTERS IN THIS REFORM.

The National Home Guard is designed for a special work, and instead of interfering with other plans, is and will be a helper in shedding light on the secret abominations which are becoming so common in the land. The workers on this reform must stand together and make one harmonious whole, as does the body. In speaking to those who are members of minor secret societies I find that to say anything against Masonry or Odd-fellowship is considered as an attack upon themselves; nor do we hear of Masons or Odd-fellows, etc., crying down these minor societies, for they are aware that they train men for taking something stronger in secret work. So I regard the Home Guard and other papers; they will tend to build up the old and tried "Pole Star" of reform.—ANNA E. STODDARD, Boston.

GOOD WORDS.

Success is my wish for the cause you are working in, and I will help it all I can.—E. P. W., Rochester, N. Y.

I appreciate very highly, indeed, your good work, and wish you the greatest success.—REV. C. B. CURTIS, Oberlin, O.

Please never stop the Cynosure. I and my family have an understanding that it visit us while we live, unless Religious-Telescope-like it ingloriously surrenders to the lodge power—of which we now entertain not a fear. Long may the paper live, and greatly may the cause it advocates prosper by the blessing of God, who is always on the side of right.—REV. L. A. WICKEY, Eshcol, Pa.

LITERATURE.

"POWER FROM ON HIGH. Do we need it? What is it? Can we get it?" With such pointed questions Rev. B. Fay Mills, the young evangelist, for a time associated with Rev. Dr. George F. Pentecost in his monthly "Words and Weapons," introduces a remarkable discourse which Mr. Revell, the evangelical book publisher of this city, has just issued in neat form. This little volume ought to be read by every professed Christian. It reaches to the depths of the heart, and in eloquent but earnest and pointed language urges the church to fail not of fully accepting and availing of the glorious privileges of grace through Christ. These are some of his sentences:

"There is no more distressing sign at this day than that so many people are ready to stand up in their places—consecrated people in a measure—and say: 'I want to be used.' It may be just as cursed an ambition to want to be used as to want to have money, or to want to have one's pride fulfilled. What you and I need to have as an ambition is not to be used but to be filled."

"How can we get spiritual power? WE CANNOT GET IT. No man ever possessed it; no man ever used it. It is a question, not of our getting power, but of God's getting us; not of our using God, but of God using us."

"Some one has said that the disciples had to wait ten days and that there were ten days in which they were being filled with the Holy Ghost. That is a mistake. They were not waiting ten days to be filled; they were waiting to be emptied."

We should like to print the whole. The publisher's price is 20 cents. It is too much. Such words as these should be put in a penny tract and circulated among the churches by the million.

ALDEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA of knowledge and language. Vol. 24. Price, half morocco, $1.00. John B. Alden, New York. Though conducted in a quiet manner, this Cyclopedia is one of the great literary undertakings of the time. Something of its magnitude may be seen by the fact that the closing topic of the present volume is Montem. Sixteen more volumes will be required to complete the alphabet, all of which are promised within the year 1891. In the present volume, five States are treated: Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri and Montana. Mexico is also treated at length. Among the cities described are Memphis, Tenn., and the historic Memphis of Egypt; Meriden, Mexico, Milan, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, and Mobile. Among the important topics in other lines are Meteorology, Methodist Episcopal Church, Miasma, Michigan University, Microscope, Mind, Mining, Miracle, Missions, Mohammedanism, and Money. The matter is well brought down to date, and the illustrations are numerous and helpful.

"HEALTH NOTES FOR STUDENTS" is the title of a small volume by Prof. Burt G. Wilder of Cornell University, and required for admission into that institution. Prof. Wilder is well known as an author and lecturer on physiological and anatomical subjects, and this little conpendium is a very practical and valuable treatise on topics in which students should be fairly informed early in their course; as, food, ventilation, clothing, breathing, bathing, sleep, exercise, stimulants and narcotics, etc. A special warning is given against tobacco, private vices and the college secret societies. The work is published by G. P. Putnam and sons of New York.

Scribner's Magazine for November contains three remarkable illustrated articles of travel and adventure of widely differing characteristics, embracing elephant hunting in Africa, a perilous voyage through the Canon of the Colorado (the first trip ever made from the source to the mouth of that river), and cruising with the White Squadron along the coast of France. Robert Brewster Stanton, civil engineer, tells in "Through the Grand Canon of the Colorado," the story of the railroad surveying expedition which he led along the course of the Colorado River, from Grand Forks to the Gulf of California—a distance of twelve hundred miles. No previous party had traversed these canons except that of Major J. W. Powell, in 1869. Herbert Ward, the African traveler, writes a "Tale of a Tusk of Ivory"—giving, in a vivid narrative, the history of a tusk from the trapping of the elephant to the sale of the ivory on the coast. All the iniquities of the traffic—the raids by Arab traders and the resulting slavery and ransom—are described. "A Day with a Country Doctor," by Frank French, is the record of the amusing, pathetic, and vexatious incidents which make up the life of a benevolent old physician in a rural district. "The Training of a Nurse," by Mrs. Frederick Rhinelander Jones, is an account of the education for what has been called the new profession for women. Prof. Shaler's final paper treats of the physical features of the section of English North America west of the Mississippi, and concludes with some general observations on the persistence of race characteristics in those who represent a residence on this continent for five generations.

The Missionary Review of the World for November opens with a strong article by Secretary Dr. Ellinwood on the Duty of Christendom to the Jews. Dr. A. T. Pierson follows with a paper on "The Wonderful Story of Madagascar" in his series entitled "The Miracles of Missions." It will enchain the attention and thrill the soul of every reader. It reads like a new chapter in "Fox's Book of Martyrs." Dr. Pitzer of Washington, shows that God allots the inheritances of nations. The article on the Congo Missions by Mr. Laffin and Miss Clark is fresh, reliable and full, as Mr. L. has just returned from there after three years' mission work and exploration. The shorter papers are full of interest, and the translations from foreign missionary magazines highly instructive. Annual reports of more than a dozen missionary societies, and a monthly bulletin of latest news from the entire mission field, rounds out a number that cannot fail to interest, inform and inspire the friends of missions everywhere.

The Baker & Taylor Co., of New York, have purchased from Robt. Carter & Bro. the electrotype plates of Rev. Dr. Cuyler's "God's Light on Dark Clouds," "The Empty Crib," "Pointed Papers for the Christian Life," and "Stray Arrows;" also Pierson's "Crisis of Missions," Ryle's "Expository Thoughts on the Gospels," and Morell's "History of Modern Philosophy." These books they will hereafter publish.

Current Comment and Legal Miscellany in its last issue prints a carefully prepared sketch of Chief Justice S. P. Chase, giving especial attention to his career as lawyer and judge. The "New York Ballot Law" is a lawyer's examination of the law regulating elections in that State. The summary of the work of the late International Conference will be valued by many for preservation.

The November Agriculturist is a handsome and popular number. The farms of Burmah are described and illustrated, also the irrigating ditches of California, and the pioneer's home. Devon cattle and Suffolk horses have each an article, and the magazine is well filled with valuable notes for the farmer and his wife.

The American Garden is rich with illustrations of the sumac and mulberry, and with articles on the destructive fungi of our orchards and vineyards, on cranberry culture, California truck-gardening, tomatoes and lettuce under glass.

Lodge Notes.

Although the siege has been raised in the Covington, Ky., diocese in regard to admitting members of secret societies to communion in the Catholic church, nothing has been done in Chicago. Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, Knights of Honor and kindred societies are included in the ecclesiastical amnesty, but the Freemasons are debarred. No action has been taken by the priests of Chicago, as no order has been issued by Archbishop Feehan relating to the subject.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen are in trouble about Negro labor. Their "grand masters," etc., have lately been in Texas settling it. It seems that not one of all the secret unions of railroad men accepted colored men as members. The white railway men refuse to take the colored laborer into their orders. There are many colored firemen, brakemen and switchmen in the South, but the colored man is not made an engineer or a conductor. Wages paid to such employes are not equal to the rates on Northern roads. The white employes are endeavoring to raise the wages in the South, but colored labor underbids them. The colored railroad men have organizations throughout the South.

Senator J. N. Dolph of Oregon, and J. M. Browne, Surgeon General of the Navy, were among those present at "the Supreme Council of the Thirty-third degree of Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry," held lately in the "Holy House of the Temple," "Venerable Grand Commander" Albert Pike presiding. At half past twelve all Scottish Rite Masons as high as the fourteenth degree were admitted into the Supreme room to hear the Grand Commander's allocution. The Grand Sword Bearer of the Supreme Council, Senator Henry M. Teller of Colorado, was absent on account of illness. Bishop Dudley of Kentucky was expected later. The "Royal Order of Scotland" was conferred on Rev. Canon Carmichael and a number of other prominent Masons.

The besotting influences of the Masonic rite known as the "Mystic Shrine" are indicated in the following notes from the Chicago Times: "Medinah temple will hold the regular monthly meeting on the Oasis of Chicago next Friday evening. Sons of the desert and followers of the prophet are requested to attend at 6:30 P. M., as there are novices to be conducted along the Arab's path. The traditional banquet will be spread at 10 o'clock P. M., and visiting Nobles are invited to share in the festivities." "Lu Lu temple of Philadelphia had an unusually fine meeting last Wednesday night, and eighty travelers found the sands of the desert unusually hot and oases few and far between. When the pilgrimage was ended, however, the skins were found to contain an abundance of liquid refreshments for the weary travelers."

In the Common Pleas Court at Columbus, Ohio, Judge Evans lately rendered a decision that has been looked forward to with the greatest interest by the Masons. The fight was between the Northern Jurisdiction and Cerneau Scottish Rites. Two years ago charges were preferred against twenty-five members of Goodale Masonic Lodge, of Columbus, for un-Masonic conduct by identifying themselves with the Cerneau Scottish Rite. In January of the same year the expulsion proceedings, instituted under the charges, were stopped by a temporary injunction secured by Mr. William A. Hershiser, one of the members against whom charges had been preferred. This injunction was against S. Stacker Williams, the then Grand Master of Ohio, and officers of Goodale Lodge. Judge Evans placed the secret societies on a plane with other organizations, such as churches not organized for profit. He held "the power to determine who are members of this Masonic lodge, and the power of expulsion exists in the lodge itself, and was voluntarily conferred on it by its members, each of whom on becoming a member is presumed to have known the nature and character of the lodge and that it had a disciplinary power over all its members." Judge Evans further held on the important question of property rights in a lodge: "By then voluntarily becoming a member of the lodge he (plaintiff) acquired, not a severable right, but the rights only of a member of the society so long as he continued to be a member." This was a legal fight between the Northern Jurisdiction men and the Cerneaus, rivals in Scottish Rite Masonry, and there was great hope that the Court would go into the question of the validity of the Cerneau branch. This question was before the Court, who dismissed it with the holding that it was purely a Masonic question, the merits of which the Court would not enter for the want of jurisdiction.

Grandpa was a fine-looking young fellow then, so the old ladies say, and he is a fine-looking old gentleman now. For lingering coughs and consumption (which is lung-scrofula in its early stages) it is an unparalleled remedy.

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.
HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1890.

THE ARGUMENTS and statements of ex-President Seelye and of Mr. Porter in defense of the college societies are not by any means unanswerable, and we shall give some attention to them next week. The latter seriously misrepresents the case of Perdue University, which it must be inferred he never fully and fairly examined. We shall give some attention to this case in our next, as it was quite celebrated in Indiana, and engaged the attention not only of the courts but of the legislature. We shall print from official documents which must be regarded as reliable.

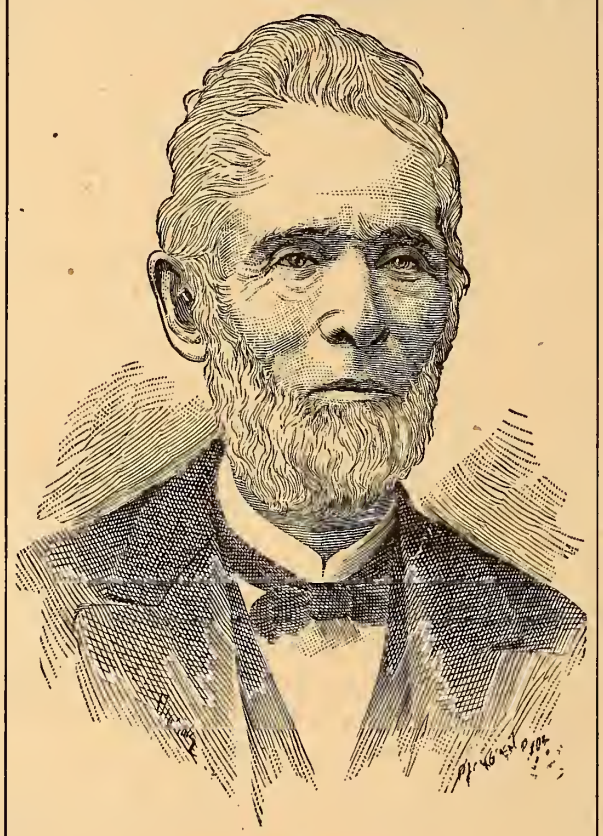
Our portrait this week is hardly that of an educator in the literal sense. But the influence of Dr. Nathan Brown in producing that hopeful and healthful moral state of society, which it is the highest aim of the educator to subserve, was second to none of his college contemporaries.

In this number the article on the perjury of the lodge oath on the second page, by an excellent Baptist pastor of Massachusetts, is most earnestly commended to our readers in the colleges.

A GREAT LIFE. *

Whoever buys and reads THE LIFE OF NATHAN BROWN will find it a very extraordinary book. It paints accurately early rural New England life; especially Vermont life as it was when the cabin smoke curled up amid forests which are now cut down. Every child of a New England farmer, throughout the West, will feel a heart-thrill in reading its pages. Instead of a common book-notice, we give our readers this editorial, and they will thank us for it.

The book is not a simple biography, but a section of United States history cut out of the middle of our national struggle for life, and given by an anti-slavery, anti-secretist editor, who lived and wrote in the beginning and end of that earthquake period, and yet spent twenty-two years in India and fourteen years in Japan as a founder of missions and translator of the Bible and hymn-book. The regenerated Japanese are now singing his hymns.



The book, which is sold at the Baptist Publication rooms, 122 Wabash Ave., Chicago, looks at first discouragingly large. But whoever reads it will be thankful it is no smaller. It paints Asiatic pagan society to the life. It gives Abraham Lincoln in words equal to his pictures; and they were always true. Dr. George B. Cheever and Salmon P. Chase appear accurately in the White House discussion of the Proclamation, Emancipation in which Dr. Brown bore a part as one of the committee of the clergy who went to Washington to encourage Mr. Lincoln to his mightiest act.

Dr. Brown, a graduate of Williams College, met Garrison in Birmington, Vt., in 1829. Garrison was an editor, and Brown preceptor in an academy there. Next year (1830) Dr. Brown went to Brandon, Vt., as editor of The Vermont Telegraph. Here he and his beautiful young wife, nee Miss Eliza Ballard, began housekeeping, and of his paper, the book says: "Slavery and secret societies were discussed and opposed by it in the face of disapproval by cautious friends." The writer of this was then a sophomore in Middlebury College, nineteen years old, while Brown was but four years older. His brief editorship made The Vermont Telegraph familiar as a household word in that State. Garrison's Liberator was started next year, in 1831.

Brown was a Baptist, and their foreign missions were then being accelerated with a new zeal. Dr. Bolles, the secretary, went to Brandon, and with other leaders of the denomination, set apart Mr. Brown and his wife, and sent them missionaries to Burmah. Whoever wishes to see Asiatic heathen society alive, and exactly as it contrasts with American society, must read this book. Mr. and Mrs. Brown toiled there twenty-two years. Health failed and sent them home in 1855, five years before Lincoln's election, when the slavery struggle was at white heat.

Mr. Brown was nursed by the well-known Friend, Levi Coffin, in Cincinnati, O., and put his restored body and full soul into the anti-slavery struggle for national life, which he regarded as equivalent to the life of the world, and the hope of the coming kingdom of Christ.

The Baptists led the other denominations in that struggle, as they have seemed likely to do in the war for the life of the church of Christ against the lodge, which, snake-like, had hid under slavery and organized treason, secession and war in its closets in the South.

But like the other sects, they were split by the cotton power, and Mr. Brown became secretary of the Baptist Free Mission Society, and editor of The American Baptist, a paper started by Rev. Wareham Walker, the man who had succeeded him in the Brandon Vermont Teleagraph twenty-two years before.

The book gives Dr. Brown's editorals during our great national agony. They resemble the bursts of light from our national volcano, by which honest Christians and patriots could see their way out of the thick darkness which had covered both church and state.

The writer first saw Dr. Rrown (he had been made D. D. by Williams College, but declined to receive it) in 1867, in Park Row, New York, while getting up our first national convention in Pittsburgh against the lodge. He was still editing The American Baptist. The great and good man wept when told of our convention against the lodge; and said to the writer, "Every Baptist church in this great city (New York) once had a rule excluding Freemasons. But every one of our churches has given up the rule but the one where I attend, and the Masons are seeking to repeal that"!! He gave our movement his hearty benediction and prayers, and at the Cincinnati convention in 1870 he gave a powerful address on the "Immorality of Masonry."

Soon after (1872) he gave up The American Baptist after fifteen years' labor, and at 65 years of age was sent to found new missions, learn a new language, and translate the Bible in Japan.

The pro-slavery wing of the Baptists wished him out of the country, because his presence, after he had carried the argument and slavery had fallen, reminded people of the bad ambition of the worldly Baptist leaders. They fused with joy with the Free Mission Baptists in 1872, and in a great union meeting voted to send Mr. Brown to Japan.

He went; and God added fourteen years to his wonderful life. And the Japanese are now joyously reading his translation, and singing his hymns in their own tongue.

We will (D. V.) give our readers from the pages of this volume specimens of Mr. Brown's able and fearless dissection of the secret lodges. And now that the distinguished and faithful Dr. Gordon of Boston, backed by Drs. Gifford and Grant, are calling the Baptists of this nation to the light of God against the darkness of the lodge, let us join them in fasting and prayer, that Christ's kingdom may "come quickly" and the nations be illumined by the "brightness of its rising."

CHRIST'S FINAL EXALTATION.

MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS, AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH.—REV. 17:5.

This terrible designation is the name which John saw on the forehead of the symbolical woman in the Revelation, the most filthy and revolting of all human pictures, having a golden cup "filled with the filthiness of her fornication." There are some things in the Apocalypse, like the pictures and caricatures of Nast, plain, and easily understood, and this vile-woman picture is among them.

This harlot mother and her harlot daughters represent the spurious religions and false worships of the earth,—all the man-invented substitutes for true religion, which is the worship of the true God through Christ, based on the law of supreme love to God and equal love to man. Rome is the mother (Rev. 17:18), and every shrine, object, and practice of idolatry are the daughters. The discovery of this constituted the power of Luther. Images, mysteries, beads, priests, amulets, charms,—everything of human devising, to excite awe, produce worship, and invite trust, is a daughter of the mother of harlots. This one figure of speech runs through the whole Bible. Its Maker is the Bridegroom of the soul; and every art which invites man to place his supreme trust and reverence in anything or person, real or fictitious, except the one true and only God, is sorcery, divination, or enchantment. And these constitute and make up the false religions of this earth. That Freemasonry is one of these false religions, and so a daughter of the "mother of harlots," is manifest. It is "mystery." It appeals to curiosity, excites awe, and promises salvation. The mother of harlots is, and does the same; and yet is a mere body of traditions and inventions of men.

Now the burden of the closing chapters of Revelation is the fall and utter extinction of this terrible power, and the final triumph of Christ. And if we are in the latter part of "the last days," it would seem that this fearful overthrow of false worships is nigh. The divine tableau of foreshadowed events runs thus:

1. John saw an angel fly in mid-heaven (Rev. 14:6) having the everlasting Gospel to preach to "every kindred and tongue and people." This is being rapidly accomplished. The remotest jungles of Africa are being reached.

2. Then soon follows the terrible conflict produced by the "spirits of devils working miracles, which seem to be teaching forces, out of the mouth of the dragon, beast, and false prophet, the three forms of false religion; to gather men to the battle-day of God. (Rev. 16:14.) And

3. Then follows, in the 17th, 18th, and 19th chapters, a detailed account of the "judgment of the great whore, sitting on many waters," which are literalized by the angel as "peoples, and multitudes, and nations and tongues:" the realms held by the mother harlot and her daughters. The tableau runs on: a mighty angel takes up a great stone, like a millstone, and casts it into the sea, saying, "Thus with violence shall that great city be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all," Rev. 18:21.

4. Then follows the shout of angels in heaven; those beings who sung and shouted when the foundations of the earth were laid; and who cried, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will to man," when Christ was born in Bethlehem. These now raise an acclaim, "as the voice of many waters and mighty thunderings," praising God for the fall of the harlot-mother and daughters, which are the false religions of the earth.

*THE WHOLE WORLD KIN: A pioneer experience among remote tribes, and other labors of Nathan Brown. Hubbard Bros., Publishers, Philadelphia. For sale by the Am. Baptist Pub. Rooms, Chicago. Price $1.50; postage 25 cts.

5. Then John sees the heavens opened, and Christ, as "King of kings, and Lord of lords," followed by the armies of heaven. But in the conflicts which remain, after the "wars and rumors of wars" which, the Saviour said, should precede and attend his coming, and for which the nations now seem preparing, it is a great solace that Christ is to conquer by the sword of the Spirit, the Word of God, "which proceedeth out of his mouth;" and the saints in the final struggles are to overcome the dragon "by the blood of the Lamb, and the word of their testimony," instead of carnal weapons.

Now, though prophecy is not history written beforehand, and though human language cannot convey divine and infinite realities, literally, to our finite minds, this book opens with a blessing on those who read and keep its sayings. It is, of course, given for our instruction. And these stupendously sublime pictures of events coming on our earth, plainly mean the overthrow of false worships, and the exaltation of Christ. And we are certainly approaching the end. Unless wars and pestilence keep down population, our globe must soon be filled. The nations are in "perplexity," and "men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after the things that are coming on the earth." If crime continues to increase, by and by prisons will not hold the convicts, and enraged labor will not feed them. The tax-paying classes now make "Monarchs tremble in their capitals."

If God ever spoke in human language this book is his Word, and these pictures are the shadows which coming events cast before them. And the thing for Christians to do is, not to repeat the millennial follies of the past half century, multiplying sects and guessing at times. Let us set ourselves to pull down the strongholds of Satan. Let us "prepare the way of the Lord." Let us pray that the Jews, whose fathers crucified him, may soon say: "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Let us pray for the downfall of Babylon, pray that Romanism may cease to be Roman, and become the "Catholic church." Let us pray that Mormonism may cease to be Mormon, and become indeed the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints." And, above all, let us pray that the lodge, the shadowy "image" which exercises the power of the beast, may, with the beast himself, be cast into the lake of fire, as the angel said they should be. Let every village pulpit in our wide land pray for the destruction of liquor, the lodge and the confessional! Let us PRAY THE LORD'S PRAYER, not SAY it! And when we say "Thy kingdom come," and "Thy will be done on earth," let us believe that it is nigh, "even at the doors." Let us not limit God or be discouraged. "Is anything too hard for the Lord?"

—The New England secretary conducted four services in the old town of Bristol, Conn., on Sabbath, Oct. 26th. The meetings were full of interest.

—The faculty of Chicago Theological Seminary has joined Dr. Gordon of Boston in recommending that Joseph Cook's address at the Chicago Conference last April be read by all missionaries, home or foreign.

—Rev. M. B. Nichols, our Pacific Coast agent, addressed the students of the Congregational Theological Seminary at Oakland, on the evening of Oct. 27. The young men of this institution have taken some interest heretofore in the discussion of secret societies, having debated the question in their societies.

—Rev. C. E. Harroun, Jr., first vice-president of the Iowa Association, requests the Free Methodist ministers to secure a delegation from every circuit in the Iowa conference, and raise money to pay their expenses. This advice is worth accepting by all the religious denominations of Iowa. All of them should be represented in that convention.

—The special attention of every reader of this number is called to the very clear and able argument on the perjury of the Masonic oath, on the second page. It is from the pen of an earnest Baptist pastor of Massachusetts, who presents an old truth in an original and forcible way. This article can be had in tract form. Send for it and circulate by the ten thousand.

—The Wesleyan Methodist, calling attention to the "Maffia" murderers in New Orleans, says that "Pennsylvania was crimsoned with the blood of one of our own Wesleyan Methodist ministers, Rev. Ensign B. Hill, member of the Allegheny Conference. Hill had the manuscript in his pocket giving an expose of Freemasonry, and was on his way to make a contract for its publication. When last seen it was toward night-fall, with a Freemason with him in his carriage. This was the last ever seen or heard of Ensign B. Hill or his horse and carriage." Will not Bro. Wardner give us this history complete?

—Prof. H. A. Fischer of Wheaton, representing the local Anti-secrecy League, questioned all the candidates for county offices on their lodge standing. The Prohibition and Democratic nominees were ready in their replies. None of them are entangled in secretism except one Grand Army man, and he hardly thought he should be classed with Freemasons, etc. The reason for Republican reticence is easily explained. For many years the offices of the county have been in the hands of that party, and all the office-grabbing characters have wriggled into the winning party and the lodge, and by means of both manage to keep in office of some sort from year to year.

—The circulars of Baylor University, Waco, Texas, contain the following radical statement of principles. If all our colleges were as earnest in their declations and as firm in maintaining their position as we are assured of Baylor University we should have less skepticism and no political party, as now, daring to take sides with Rome against the American common school: "A great thinker, in a great speech at Washington city, said, 'Secular education now threatens to become the grave of our liberties.' Prof. W. T. Harris, now head of the National Bureau of Education, is a skeptic, and infidels are being secretly thrust into all our State schools and colleges, and praying, conscientious teachers are set aside. A secret and powerful organized plan is now being made not only to kick the Bible out of public schools and State colleges, but to blot out all Christian colleges. The first step is to tax Christians to build up godless high schools and colleges, sap the foundation of Christian schools and then make their sons and daughters skeptics. These prayerless, godless schools are flooding the land with sharp-witted anarchists and skeptics, who cry: 'Away with sectarian schools, the Bible, the Sabbath, and rights of property and rights of husbands and wives and whatever opposes Free Lovism.' Against this coming deluge of ruin, Baylor University stands as a bulwark. The Bible is our corner-stone, as it was in all the free schools and colleges of our fathers. On that corner-stone, the Bible, we build characters of undying love of country, of God, the Sabbath and the equal rights of all men, rich and poor, learned and ignorant."

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Rev. H. H. Hinman has been spending a week at Oberlin with his family.

—Rev. T. S. Hubbard, a warm friend of our cause in Vermont, has removed from Tunbridge to Stockbridge in that State.

—Rev. F. O. Cunningham, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Somerville, Mass., is to be one of the speakers at the New England Convention next month.

—Mrs. L. M. Bailey, wife of Rev. A. J. Bailey of Ogden, Utah, is addressing the churches of Southern California and arousing much enthusiasm for the cause of missions.

—Prof. Joseph Moore, of Earlham College, who prepared an address for the April Conference against the lodge, is the candidate for State geologist on the Prohibition ticket, of Indiana.

—Rev. Wm. F. Davis, the Boston Common witness, who dared a year of life in Suffolk jail, Boston, to maintain the right of free speech and a free proclamation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ in public places, was the speaker at Music Hall in that city Sabbath before last, in the series of anti-Catholic meetings. It is reported to us that he spoke with his usual straight-forward singleness of heart against the Masonic lodge also.

—A private letter informs of the death on Monday of last week of Rev. L. I. Crawford, editor of the News of Sandy Lake, Pa., for the past fourteen years. Mr. Crawford was a minister of the United Presbyterian church who faithfully maintained the reform principles of that church in every position of influence. The News, under his control, was an exceptional local paper, both for the ability with which it was managed, and its strong and steady support of the reforms urged by the N. C. A., the National Reform Association and the Prohibition party. He had been sick for some time before his death, and the control of the paper had been in the hands of his son, who will succeed him as manager.

—Miss Lizzie O. Smith, after being fifty-five years on a bed of pain, died at Willimantic, Conn., on Sabbath last. She was born at Eastford, Conn., and was unusually vigorous and active until she was 11 years of age, when she was prostrated by a violent cold, which developed a disease that settled in her limbs, making her a helpless invalid. She was confined to her bed, says the dispatch announcing her death, for nearly fifty-five years. Our readers will remember her case through the correspondence of brethren J. P. Stoddard, J. A. Conant and Elder Barlow, who was at one time pastor of the church of which Miss Smith was a member. Her case was a most extraordinary one, not only because of the severity of her prolonged suffering, but more especially because of her triumphing faith, which under such circumstances of pain and poverty gained, through Christ, the victory over all her enemies.

NEW ENGLAND NOTICE.

It has been decided to hold the next anuual meeting of the New England Christian Association Dec. 16 and 17 next, in the lower chapel of Park Street Congregationalist church, Boston. The official call by the president and secretary will appear soon. Meantime let every friend note the time, and prepare to attend and make this the largest, as it will be the most important, meeting held in New England in direct opposition to the Jesuit, the Endowment-house and the Masonic cabals, and the whole principle and system of Secret Lodges, and for Christ and his kingdom along the entire line of religious conflict.

Send in your names early for enrollment or for documents or information; and we will do our best to reduce expenses and make your burden light and your blessing great.

IOWA CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, is hereby called to meet in the Free Methodist church at Fairfield, Iowa, Tuesday, Dec. 2, at 2 P. M., to continue its sessions through the following day. Efforts will be made to secure some of the ablest speakers on the subject to address the convention. The committee hope to furnish free entertainment to all delegates. All churches and associations opposed to secret societies are urged to send delegates to this meeting.

C. D. TRUMBULL, Cor. Sec.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE SABBATH ASSOCIATION OF ILLINOIS.

The officers of this body beg leave to call the attention of all its members throughout the State to the fact that the annual meeting will he held in Chicago on the 11th and 12th of Nov. next. Never was there more urgent need of a large and enthusiastic meeting of the friends of the Christian Sabbath. Never was its foes more active and unscrupulous. We are on the eve of great events affecting the dearest interests of our Christian civilization in America.

There is shortly to be held in Chicago, the metropolitan center of the continent, an exposition, the like of which the world has never seen before. An exhibition which shall set before all nations the results of four centuries of republican progress in the New World.

It is seriously proposed and vehemently urged that the gates of this Exposition shall be thrown wide open and the Exposition run on the Lord's day as other days of the week, thus violating all the most sacred traditions of American history and flaunting defiance in the face of the God of our fathers.

Unless the Christian people of this land rise up in moral majesty and thunder their righteous protest, this infamy will be perpetrated.

We therefore earnestly urge all friends of our free institutions and all lovers of God and humanity to come up to this annual gathering.

At the same time and place there will be held a mass meeting of representatives of the Central District of the National Sabbath Union, comprising the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. The meetings will be held at the First M. E. Church, and will last two days, and will be addressed by distinguished speakers.

THE HOME.

THE SABBATH.

O pearl of days, the best;
The softest blue o'erspreads the sunlit skies;
In the still lake heaven's perfect likeness lies;
And balmy air all fragrant breath supplies.
O holy, holy rest!
Toil folds its hand, its six days' work is done,
And heaven and earth, embracing, blend in one.

Over the hills and plains
The churchly bells salute the listening ear;
Childhood and age, all full of holy cheer,
Fresh and devout, in God's own house appear,
While song's exalted strains,
And prayer and praise, in all their richness rise,
Lifting the way-worn spirit to the skies.

Tranquillity's sweet reign!
Graze in the dewy dells the fleecy sheep,
The weary oxen on the hillsides sleep,
And Sabbath laws unharnessed horses keep,
While Eden's bliss, again,
Like glints of sunlight through a storm-cast sky,
Breaks in with joy, to gladden every eye.

Touch not this holy day!
Off, vandal hands, and let it all alone!
Still let it shine as it has always shone,
Each loyal heart its ever royal throne.
Hold! touch it not, I say.
Ordained of God, on Sinai's granite height;
It still shall stand in more than granite might.

EFFECTS OF SABBATH ON MORALS AND RELIGION.

The sanction of law reconciles many consciences to what would otherwise be seen to be great evils. Testimony carefully gathered from various sections of the country reveals the fact that the local postoffice open on the Sabbath is a sluice-gate through which a flood of secular reading and correspondence pours into even Christian homes. Over wide sections of the country the arrival of the Sabbath morning mail from the city is the signal for the resort of multitudes to the postoffice. Christian men and women, on their way to and from the sanctuary, swell the throng. The afternoon of the day is surrendered to secular things. The step to common labor on the Sabbath, on some plea of necesity, is not a long one. The rapid multiplication of Sabbath-breaking occupations in all our centers of population is an outgrowth of this planting. The three allied forces referred to above are eating like a canker into Sabbath-keeping principles and practices even of the professedly Christian public. There is no other point at which Sabbath-breaking customs so successfully invade the lives and the homes of Christian people, and no other at which resistance and protest are more greatly needed.

It requires no prophetic gift to foresee the consequences which must flow from the continued operation of these forces. As public sentiment learns to tolerate and to demand this supply of secular reading on the Sabbath, all the instrumentalities of diffusing it will be enlarged and extended. The number of postoffices permitted to remain closed on the Sabbath will steadily diminish. The number of persons who will consent to receive, or will demand their mail on the Sabbath, will continually increase. The demand for the delivery of letters from house to house in cities on the Sabbath will be renewed and granted. Stores and counting-rooms will gradually be thrown open that the letters thus delivered may be received and answered. Open for this purpose, other business will be transacted. Express companies will be urged to receive and forward parcels of goods for which the Sabbath morning mail brings pressing orders. Merchants who would prefer to respect the Sabbath will grow restive under the seeming advantages gained by conscienceless competitors.

Christian principle, weakened by small concessions and undermined by treacherous currents on every side, will gradually cease its resistance, save in the bosoms of a few who will hold to the precepts of God's law and the memories of better days; and the Sabbath of the Lord, the Sabbath of our fathers, the Sabbath whose due observance is the chief pillar of national virtue and welfare, will be to all appearance lost in a rushing tide of lust for pleasure and lust for gain. With the loss of the Sabbath religion will perish; for history and the Word of God bear witness that faith in things unseen will not long survive where the Sabbath, God's chief witness among men, has ceased to give its testimony. The natural, almost inevitable, effect of the maintenance of religious forms and usages while the habitual violation of the moral law is tolerated, will be a harvest, first of formalism, and then of unbelief.

Infidelity and religion will sweep over the land; churches will be neglected; the great evangelistic agencies of to-day, which are leavening our own and other lands with the Gospel, will be shorn of their strength; the children of those who throng our sanctuaries to-day will become infidels and worldlings; our schools and colleges, perverted to secular education, will be seminaries of atheism; and only as she is scourged back to God and to duty by terrible judgments, can it be hoped that the nation will recover the advantage which to-day she is wantonly casting away. Even if there be small hope of immediate success, effort against these on-coming evils will not be lost. It will have a valuable effect on the church and on the public, quickening Christian consciences, restraining many from falling into the use of the Sabbath mails, and so tending to prevent an increase of the evil. —Rev. T. P. Stevenson, D. D.

HOW TO OBSERVE THE SABBATH.

Rev. W. T. Perrin, pastor of Worthen St. church, Lowell, in one of his effective lectures upon "The Sabbath," gives the following advice about the observance of the Lord's day:

"How can we best observe the Sabbath day? If possible, prepare for it on Saturday by doing chores, cooking, taking a bath, getting clothes ready. Rise on Sunday morning with thanksgiving. Visit the sanctuary, and, with God's people, worship your heavenly Father in sincerity of heart. If weary with the week's work, in the afternoon take a refreshing nap. Get an extra supply of nourishment from the Word of God. Call with some ministry of kindness upon those sick or in need. Have a good religious paper or volume to read. Make it the brightest, best day of the week for the children, with privileges in the parlor, with clean clothes and flowers, with picture Bible, with song, with Bible stories, and most of all, companionship. Let it be the family day, with perhaps a quiet walk. Remember the Sabbath is for man—for manhood, for physical rest, for mental improvement, for spiritual development, for growth in God-likeness, in whose image we were created. Thus our earthly Sabbath will fit us for the heavenly."

This is excellent, with the exception of the "quiet walk." How quiet would it be, or stimulating to religious feeling, or helpful to a conscientious hallowing of the Sabbath if all families took this advice and flocked to the street. It is better to remain on one's own premises, otherwise the walk develops into mere pleasure-seeking, and the drive and the picnic follow logically. It is only when the multitude of people refrain from these "walks," that those who take them have the satisfaction they seek.

SUNDAY IN PITTSBURG.

Sunday in Pittsburg and Allegheny City, is thus described by the New York Times:

"Probably no other given community of 330,000 people in this country is restrained more by the laws governing the observance of Sunday than Pittsburg and Allegheny City. Every legalized saloon and hotel bar is closed tight, and one can get no intoxicating liquors of any kind from these. The 120 drug stores will sell nothing in their line save medicines on prescription. The traveler who may want tooth-picks, tooth-brush or tooth-powder, or any other toilet article or necessary thing, must wait until Monday. The doors of the barbers' shops are locked, and the man who has not had time for a shave on Saturday must shave himself or go to church, or elsewhere, with stubbles on his face. The sizz of the soda water fountain is hushed, and in but three places in the two great cities is it possible to get soda, lemonade, sarsaparilla, milk, or other soft drink, to quench the thirst and cool the suffering citizen. The thousand stands and stores where cigars and tobacco are dealt in six days of the week are silent and deserted on the seventh, and the man who has forgotten to provide himself with a Sunday supply of these comforts must do without or borrow from his neighbor.

"Children can get no candy in Pittsburg on Sunday, housewives no groceries or meat, lovers no ice-cream, readers no newspapers unless they catch a boy in the forenoon, for the news stands do no business on Sunday. Only the street cars, the newspapers, the hotels and restaurants, and the churches carry on their affairs unobstructed. The hotels and restaurants serve meals, but do no bar business, and sell no cigars even for after-dinner smoking."

DR. JOHN HALL ON SABBATH OBSERVANCE IN PARIS.

On the whole, Paris is changed for the better since it was first known to the writer. Walking to the American church in the Rue de Berri last Sabbath morning, I was impressed by the great proportion of the business places closed, as with us, and, with the exception of a few houses on the cleaning and repair of which a few men were engaged, there seemed to be but little Sunday work. Going in the afternoon from the Hotel L'Athenee to the Scotch Church, in the Rue Bayard, on the left side of the Champs Elysees, I saw only one body of men busy over the building of a new and handsome house. It is to be hoped that the seventh day's rest—now provided by the French Legislature for the working people—will be arranged for the Lord's day, a course that would surely be for the good of the land. There are in Paris half a dozen churches which the visitor goes to see for their history or their architecture, but the number of places of worship is small for so large a population. It is gratifying to see in the official and other directories the recognition of Lutheran, Calvinist, English and American churches.—Mail and Express.

THE RAINY SABBATH.

"My dear child, you certainly are not going out in this rain!" exclaimed Mrs. Hill, as her daughter entered the room dressed for the street, on a disagreeable Sabbath morning.

"Yes, mamma, I am going to church," she answered pleasantly; "the rain did not keep me from going to that concert last week, nor from going to the stores yesterday. Tom, what did you do with my umbrella?"

"I am sure I don't know," said the young man, who had just sauntered in. "But what nonsense—you going to church this morning! You had better stay at home; you can read a sermon that will do you just as much good."

"Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together," quoted his sister. "Ah, here's my umbrella. Good-by."

As Mary approached the church, walking carefully through rain and mud, Harry Hampton, a bright-faced boy of fourteen, came rapidly down the church-steps and ran against her as she started up. "I beg pardon," said the boy, raising his hat. "Why, Miss Mary! is it possible you are out such a day as this? Let me help you up these slippery steps."

"You are going the wrong way, Harry," said Mary, pausing a moment, as he turned again toward the street.

"Well, yes," replied Harry, with a slight blush; "I looked into the church, and it looked so empty and desolate that I thought I would go to see some fellows who had invited me to their rooms to-day. I know that is not the way to spend the Sabbath, but you do not know how lonely a boy gets in a town like this, by himself all day on Sabbath."

Harry Hampton was the son of a farmer, with whom Mrs. Hill and her family usually spent the heated summer months. Mary had heard that Harry had come to town and entered a store. She had intended to ask Tom to look him up; as she now spoke she reproached herself for not doing so.

"I know you must be lonely," replied Mary; "will you not come and sit with me in our pew? I, too, am alone to-day."

"Certainly, if you wish it," and the boy's face brightened as he followed the pretty and well-dressed young lady into church.

The minister gave as his text, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve," and followed it with an earnest appeal to those who had not chosen the Lord's side. When the services were over, and Mary turned to Harry, she was startled at the earnest, thoughtful expression on his face; he refused her invitation to dinner, and walked quietly off to his own room.

Several weeks had passed, and Mary had seen nothing more of Harry; when one bright communion Sabbath she was made happy by seeing him come forward to be received into the church.

"I want to thank you for keeping me at church that rainy Sabbath," said Harry afterward. "I was on the road to ruin that day, and the sermon I heard stopped me."

Harry Hampton is an active member of the church, and Mary Hill often thanks God that He used her faithfully-spent "rainy Sabbath" in the salvation of a soul.—Christian Observer.

PETE.

BY AUNT ALICE.

I am going to tell the young folks, who are fond of pets, about my cat, Pete. To make clear who Pete is, I must give you his pedigree as far back as I know. One summer night about three years ago, a pretty tortoise-shell cat jumped into the dining-room, and went directly to my father. He petted her and gave her some milk, which she seemed to enjoy. As no one came for the cat, we kept her, till she ran away or was stolen, leaving two kittens, Pete and Jet.

On account of losing their mother, we made greater pets of them than ever. I always have been fond, of cats and for that reason, the portion of "old maid" has been assigned me by my family and friends.

Pete was my favorite and I taught him all the tricks I could. When still a very small kitten he would sit on my shoulder while I embroidered, and would even try to help me by watching my needle till it almost reached him, when he would make a grand dive for it. Then it was time for him to take a nap in my work-basket. He is too large now to sit on my shoulder, but occupies a more humble position at my feet.

He will stand up on his hind feet and beg for an ear of sweet corn, of which he is very fond. He follows me around the house like a dog, and one day I thought I would see if he knew enough to find me, so I slipped into the closet and closed the door tight. I heard Pete go to the floor above, mewing quietly, then down again and into my room. He poked about and at last came to the closet-door and scratched and purred, till I emerged and hugged him tight. At meal-time, he is always waiting for me at my seat, and there he stays, regardless of what rebukes he may receive till I am ready to leave. He is extremely fond of egg-plant and always has a goodly portion, after eating which he really seems to smile.

He is sitting beside me now, and I have told him what I have said of him. He puts his head on one side and seems to understand all I say.

HINTS FOR SELF HELP.

Young friends, kindly permit a veteran of life to remind you that highest and most lasting enjoyment comes through rigid self-control. Good habits are a powerful help; accustomed to do the right thing at the right time the thing to be done suggests itself, and is performed almost without effort. But oh, the infernal tyranny of bad habits—continuous use of intoxicating drink till its victim becomes a confirmed inebriate, illustrates their danger and despotism. Eschew tobacco. That a nasty weed, a rank poison, should come into such general use is the strangest thing in American history. The foolish idea that its use is a manly accomplishment leads boys to use it; after awhile, like opium and rum, it is taken to remove the depression it creates. Be advised by Dr. Rush and other eminent physicians to abjure and abominate it utterly. Profanity is immoral, vulgar; lowers you in the estimation of sensible people; is not tolerated in refined society; is out of harmony with the placid temper and self-control all should cultivate.

Establish and maintain friendly relations with fellow men; better never have been born than hedge yourselves in with narrow, sordid, selfish sentiments and purposes that cut you off from sympathy with people whose society you might enjoy; set high value on social intercourse; don't let business cares interrupt it; show yourselves friendly and you will have friends; life's chief joy is loving and being loved. Don't let desire of money possess your soul; with faithful constancy, unflagging industry, provide for necessities, and a reserve for sickness and old age, but flee from the blighting mania for wealth, the greed of filthy lucre—a curse and craze that stifles noble purposes and breeds innumerable villainies. Finally, hold fast to truth, not only for the sufficient reason that to do so is right, but because it is profitable as a business investment in this world, and brings "peace at last."—Hugh T. Brooks.

TEMPERANCE.

ALL LICENSE OF AN EVIL IS SIN.

The attention of the people is turned entirely away from the evil and destruction of the liquor traffic by this hot discussion of the comparative value of purely legal measures. For you will observe that so long as prohibition is pitted against high license it is a question no longer of moral evil, but of what the system will do, considered as a law of suppression or restriction.

We have lost the immense moral force of the prohibitory idea by entering the list with this purely legal notion of high license, just as a soldier who rushes into a hand-to-hand melee with clubbed musket loses his power to shoot. We have taken our matchless weapon, prohibition, by the barrel and are endeavoring to beat down opposition with the butt end, instead of maintaining our moral vantage ground and delivering a telling fire of principles. Let us take a lesson from history.

In the great anti-slavery fight one of the leading spirits of the South said: "So long as you debate the slavery question with us on legal and constitutional grounds we will meet you in a temper of fair and calm debate, but when you declare that slavery is a sin, then there is nothing left for us but a fight to the death." The seers in that great fight lifted up their voices like a trumpet, without sparing—sin, sin, against God and man! There are plenty of others who took "a calm view" on the subject, debated with their "Southern brethren" methods of expediency, and legality, and constitutionality, and they would have been debating to this day had not the prophets of abolition, prohibition, kept up an increasing and galling fire of sin, sin, sin! The calm gentlemen on both sides soon lost their temper under this rain of hail-stone and fire. Then the irrepressible conflict was joined and fought out to a finish.

Now the root-idea of prohibition is just this: All making and selling, and drinking of intoxicating beverages is a sin. Our bodies are the temple of the Holy Spirit, and anything which deranges or befouls that temple is a direct assault upon the human soul and upon Him who dwells therein. Alcoholic beverages do that very thing. To take such beverages is, therefore, a sacrilege against man, a "blasphemy against the Holy Ghost." Every true prophet then in the temperance reform must keep up an incessant fire—sin, sin, sin! To make, to sell, to drink, to let buildings for such purposes, to have anything whatever to do with it, is to have lot and part in a wickedness pure and simple. "Come out, my people; touch not, taste not, handle not, the unclean thing." You will not be troubled with any more "calm views" after the battery has opened fire. Everything will soon be "piping hot" all over the field.—National Temperance Society Tract.

WAR ON MICHIGAN SALOONS.

PAW PAW, Mich., Oct. 21.—Seventeen liquor dealers were arrested in this county to-day under the local option law, which the Supreme Court recently decided constitutional. This is the only "dry" county in the State, and the result of these cases will be watched with much interest. A detective has in his possession thirty-two half-pint bottles of whisky purchased of the various dealers in the county.

SOUTH HAVEN, Mich., Oct. 21.—The sheriff of Van Buren county has arrested the proprietors and barkeepers of the three saloons in this place for illegal sale of liquors. The county voted prohibition last spring, but these saloons had been selling under cover of the original package decision and in the hope that the State Supreme Court would declare the county option law, passed by the last legislature, unconstitutional. The court sustained the law by a recent decision. Twenty saloons in the county have been similarly dealt with.

DECATUR, Mich., Oct. 21.—Every saloon-keeper in this city was arrested to-day, charged with violation of the State liquor law. A special detective has been at work in this county for several weeks, and, it is claimed, has sufficient evidence to convict sixteen liquor men.

HOW KANSAS LADIES CLOSE SALOONS.

The ladies of the local Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Lawrence, Kan., adopted a novel but ineffective method of closing the original package-house of Henry Fritzel. The local Woman's Christian Temperance Union appointed a committee with unlimited authority to take whatever steps it considered advisable and effective to close the place. The committee was composed of twelve ladies, headed by Mrs. F. S. Grubb, State lecturer. They went in a body to the saloon early in the morning and attempted to persuade Fritzel to close his place. He declined, and then the ladies announced their intention of staying all day and making hourly appeals to him to stop his business. Fritzel remained obdurate, and, although he had sold every drop of liquor, refused to close his place. The women remained all day and did not cease their labors until 6 P. M. They say they will continue their crusade until they persuade Fritzel to quit business.

NO CRIME TO STEAL LIQUOR.

The recent verdict of a jury at Providence, R. I., to the effect that it is no crime to steal rum in that State, has occasioned a good deal of interest among prohibitionists and members of the Law and Order league in Chicago.

"It is a novel case," said the Hon. C. C. Bonney, and his smile indicated satisfaction. "I understand," he continued, "that a prohibitory liquor law is in force in Rhode Island, and supposed that the jury acquitted the defendents upon the ground that where rum is kept in volation of law it is not a crime to take and carry away what the law forbids to be kept by the party from whom it is taken. It is old law that no one can have legal protection for any act done or property used in violation of law. If the law does not punish the act or the use, it will at least refuse to aid the law-breakers. There is an old law maxim to the effect that where both parties are in the wrong the condition of the defendent is the better, because the law in such a case will leave the parties where it finds them.

"It was probably upon this principle that the jury, finding that the prosecutor had no right to have the man, refused to punish the defendants for carrying it away, as in a civil case they would have refused to give the plaintiff any damages. As legal titles and remedies exist only by law, titles will not be upheld nor remedies given to uphold violations of law."

Illinois is not in danger of having anything like a parallel to the Rhode Island case, because there is no prohibitory law in this State. Prohibitionists like the precedent, however, and say that it may be of value in those portions of Illinois which have prohibition under the local option law. They will mainly agree with the Rhode Island jury, that where prohibition exists it is not a crime to steal liquor in the night or day time.—Chicago News.

Indiana has a law closing saloons on days on which elections are held, and the Indiana Supreme Court has decided that the law is applicable to days on which primaries are held.

The report of the secretary showed that there are now 14,000 members of the W. C. T. U. in Illinois, an increase of 5,000 over last year. One hundred and forty-four new unions have been added, and but two counties now have no unions, Pope and Franklin. Six thousand seven hundred dollars have been expended on local work.

The New York Standard evidently just waking up to the fact, remarks: "Is it a sign of better days ahead that so much is said and written concerning temperance? Time was when a paragraph on temperance problems in the more important dailies looked lonesome; when temperance was touched most gingerly. The whole temperance vocabulary is now in constant use in the papers which mould public opinion."

LESSON VI.—Fourth Quarter.—November 9.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The accusation before Pilate.—vs. 1–4. Their leading him to Pilate with this new and utterly false charge—of teaching revolt against the Roman power—shows that they were bent upon his death, and would be satisfied with nothing less. The character of Pilate, as we learn from contemporaneous history, was thoroughly weak and contemptible. He hated and despised the Jews, but they on their part, though probably well aware of this feeling, felt confident that they could bend him to their wishes, knowing that he loved the emoluments of office far better than he loved justice. When wicked men have a point to carry, they are not scrupulous about the character of the tools they employ. How chagrined they must have been when even Pilate could find no fault in this man!—a confession which all the enemies of Jesus have been forced to make. Not even the bitterest foe of Christianity has been able to bring anything against that divine Life. And this is eminently fitting, that a Saviour of sinners should be himself lifted above human infirmities. A man who is drowning cannot save another in the same plight. The redeemed are "without fault before the throne of God", because they are covered with the righteousness of a perfect Christ. It is every Christian's duty, as well as privilege, so to live, that the world may say of him, as Pilate said of Jesus, we find no fault in this man.

2. Pilate's evasion.—vs. 5–7. We shall always find two classes of sinners: incorrigible blasphemers, who hate Christ with such a hatred, that they are willing, like the Jews, to take on their own souls the risk of rejecting him, and the more decent, respectable class who try, like Pilate, to evade the responsibility of making a choice. But all such would-be evasions of personal duty only make the matter worse in the end.

3. Herod and Christ.—vs. 8–12. Herod did not want to see Christ in order to be taught of him. His was the desire of a low and vulgar mind to see miracles performed, but he cared nothing for those deep truths of the kingdom, of which Christ's miracles were the seal, and which alone gave them any value. Wonders and signs are not to be sought either as a means of winning the multitude, or to increase our own faith. Jesus never wrought a miracle to gratify idle curiosity, but speaks of the morbid desire for such things as characteristic of an evil and adulterous generation. A sincere seeker after truth wants nothing better than the bare Word of God; and rightly considers that he may be deceived in signs but never in the Bible promises. The wonderful silence of Jesus stands out like a background, on which we see the accusing priests, the low-minded, sensual, brutal ruler, who could reward a dancer with the head of the greatest prophet that had arisen since Elijah, and the rough throng of servitors, amusing themselves by cruel mockery of their helpless victim. Perhaps one of the lessons we may learn from the silence of Jesus, is that it is seldom wise to debate with infidels on the truth of Scripture, or to engage in controversy with men bound not to believe. Herod evidently acquitted Jesus. He, too, found no fault in this man. But he made a mock of his claims, as thousands do to-day, who treat him with flippant disregard. How many elegantly-bound Bibles that are seldom or never opened by their owners. How many go to church to hear a celebrated preacher, or listen to fine singing from a quartette, while they profess to go in honor of, and solely to worship Jesus Christ as their King and Redeemer. By this interchange of official courtesy, as it was deemed, Pilate and Herod were made friends. Men who hate each other most cordially have found a common bond in their hatred of Jesus. Many times in history wicked rulers, who were at swords' points, have buried their animosity to unite their forces in persecuting his people whose only offence was holding fast to the truths he taught. Evils that seem the most opposite will join hands like Pilate and Herod. Rome and Masonry are ancient enemies, but as Rome needs the help of the lodge in her plans for subjugating America the indications are that they will soon be reconciled. The Pilate of high license joins with the Herod of the saloon, and justice is mocked and outraged for a little paltry revenue. The friendship of the world is indeed enmity to God.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The late Kansas Conference of the Free Methodist church had no thought of being misunderstood on the lodge question. The following is plain as the Gospel:

"WHEREAS, membership in secret societies is forbidden by our Discipline, and we believe by the Word of God, by those passages which require separation from the world, such as, 'Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers,' and 'Therefore, come out from among them; and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you,' etc.

"We believe all the minor orders, such as the G. A. R. and Farmer's Alliance, are secret societies in the sense of our Discipline. Therefore,

"Resolved, That as a conference, we will strictly enforce our rules on secret societies and do all in our power to discourage the organization of such societies. While we are in sympathy with the principles of the Farmers' Alliance, we oppose the secrecy connected with the organization."

—A new noon-day prayer meeting was opened at Lincoln Hall, No. 70 Adams street, in this city, a few weeks ago. The movers of this new meeting were led to leave Farwell Hall, because the Y. M. C. A., which controls the meeting begun there many years ago by Mr. Moody, refused any longer to allow women to take part. The Chicago Noon-day Association is managing the new meeting.

—The meetings of Rev. B. Fay Mills at Oberlin, which began Oct. 15, have been attended with deep interest. All meetings have been crowded, and business places and college classes have been frequently closed to allow attendance on them. Over five hundred cards have been signed by those professing a desire to lead a Christian life.

—Rev. C. O. Brown, D.D., of Dubuque, Iowa, son of Dea. O. M. Brown of Oberlin, has accepted a call to the First Congregational Church of Tacoma at a salary of $4,000. When he got home from Tacoma he found on his table an invitation from the Citizen's Committee of One Hundred to deliver an address on "Catholic Interference with the Public Schools" in Music Hall, Boston.

—Dr. Munhall, assisted by Professor J. J. Lowe and his wife, is conducting special services at Gloucester, Mass. The meetings have been largely attended and a remarkable work of conviction and conversion is going on. Dr. Munhall goes next to Cincinnati, Ohio.

—The Church Congress will meet in Philadelphia, on Nov. 11, and will continue in session three days. Among the topics to be discussed are the following: "Grounds of Certitude in Philosophy and Religion," "Trusts," "Do we need a Provincial System?" "Conditions of Church Growth in Missionary Lands," "Positive Gains in Biblical Criticism," and "The Proper Care of the Newly Confirmed."

—Principal Grant, of Queens University, Kingston, Canada, does not believe that the union of the Protestant churches in Canada is at all impossible. The first step, he thinks, is to unite the Methodist and Presbyterian denominations. The union of these two churches would, he says, give a united Protestant church including 1,500,000 of the population; "and such a spirit of union would be generated all over the land that we should very soon see fresh triumphs." The difficulties in the way of such a union may be summed up in one word—historic.

—At a recent meeting of Methodist clergymen in Baltimore, Md., in referring to the church's attitude on the liquor question, it was stated that "There is no difficulty in discerning that in the formulated thought of Methodism its import is not now moderation but prohibition. According to the discipline ours is a Prohibition church."

—The Chicago Avenue (Moody's) Church in this city has adopted the following: "The Chicago Avenue Church, composed almost entirely of working men and women, and speaking, as we believe, for the best interests of all people of the class to which we belong, earnestly petition the commissioners and the directors of the Columbian Exposition that the said exposition be entirely closed on the first day of the week. We note with regret and apprehension the increase of Sunday labor on every hand. Members of our church have been discharged from their situations because they would not work seven days in the week. Young men and young women are telling us constantly that they are threatened with loss of their places unless they work on Sunday. We are confident that if the exposition is opened on this day, owing to the great crowds in the city at that time, there will be a still greater number of stores open on the Lord's day than now, and the inevitable result will be that our day of rest will be taken from us. We do not see how any one who is actually a working man or woman can desire to have the World's Fair open on Sunday. We can see how some rich people who do not have to work, or clerks in wholesale houses and banks, who are certain of a holiday, might wish it, but we have made a study of this matter and believe that the only safety of the working people on this Sunday question is to fight against the opening of the saloons, stores, fairs and everything else on this day. But above our own welfare we place the higher consideration of the recognition of God and his rights, and we believe that it will honor and please him to close the fair on his day, and that the favor of God will be worth more to the exposition than all other influences combined.

—Dr. David Gregg, of the Park Street Congregational church, Boston, has been called to succeed Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, who resigned from the pastorate of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian church, Brooklyn.

—Moody and Sankey, having finished a month's campaign in Buffalo, will, after a week's rest at Northfield, resume the fight in Albany and Troy.

—The annual meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions of the Interior, was held in the Union Park church of this city last week. The attendance was large and enthusiastic, and addresses were made by a number of missionaries now in this country.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

—The Baptists of Oregon have decided to raise $175,000 to build a college at Portland, and ask the National body to give $75,000.

—Stanley has now received the degree of LL.D. from the two most famous universities of the world. Oxford gave it him just after his last return from Africa; Cambridge a few days since.

—Beulah Seminary at Clarksville, Mich., founded by Rev. N. L. A. Eastman in 1889, has been transferred to the Primitive Holiness Mission, and will be continued as a thoroughly Christian school.

—Howe Institute at New Iberia, La., was some time since placed under the control and management of President Mitchell of Leland University, New Orleans, as a preparatory and grammar school. Rev. Eli Noyes, a graduate of Lincoln University, Pa., is the principal.

—The veteran Dr. Rufus C. Burleson, president of Baylor University, Waco, Texas, has entered upon his fortieth year as incumbent of that office, a grand testimony to his popularity and efficiency. This institution was among the first to adopt co-education, and has for nearly thirty years proved the wisdom of that course.

—The Toronto medical students' Y. M. C. A., which has 179 members, has just sent one of their number, Dr. Hardie and his wife, as a missionary to Korea, and have agreed to support him "for a period of at least eight years." His destination is "Fusan, where he is to cooperate with Mr. Gale, of University College Y. M. C. A."

—Ursinus College, Freeland, Pa., made a narrow escape from destruction by fire on Sunday morning, Oct. 19. While all the students were away, fire broke out at about 11 o'clock from an overheated stove in a student's room. Timely alarm was given, and the fire which had already reached Zwingli Hall on the fourth floor was checked. The loss is about $400.

—Mr. Moody, in the Sunday School Times, tells of visits to colleges and the impressions made upon him as to religious progress. He speaks of encouraging features, and notices "the strong, manly tone of the Christian life and Christian work of these college students." He regards as a most favorable thing the fact that the Christian work in most colleges is organized.

—The destruction of the Seminary at North Chili, New York, by fire on the 9th of September, was a serious loss to the educational interests of the Free Methodist church. The loss was total, there being no insurance. Prof. B. H. Roberts goes right on with the work of the school. It is probable that when the question of rebuilding is broached the change of location will also be carefully considered.

"I do not see how any Christian, most of all a Christian minister, can go into these secret lodges with unbelievers. They say they can have more influence for good, but I say they can have more influence for good by staying out of them, and then reproving their evil deeds. Abraham had more influence for good in Sodom than Lot had. If twenty-five Christians go into a secret lodge with fifty who are not Christians, the fifty can vote anything they please, and the twenty-five will be partakers of their sins. They are unequally yoked with unbelievers. 'But, Mr. Moody,' some say, 'if you talk that way you will drive all the members of secret societies out of your meetings and out of your churches.' But what if I do? Better men will take their places. Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God, and if only one or two go with us it is all right."—Address by Dwight L. Moody in Farwell Hall, Chicago, 1876.

IN BRIEF.

The vote of the readers of the Chicago Evening Post on the question of closing the world's fair on Sunday stand 1,788 for and 3,423 against.

Wimodaughsis is the name of a society recently incorporated at Washington, D. C., the object of which is to secure National Headquarters for Women. It aims to erect a building at the capital, containing a library, reading room, parlors, gymnasium, art gallery, committee and assembly rooms, etc.

A dispatch to the New York World from Birmingham, Ala., says that the last of thirteen men, former Confederate soldiers, who, during the war, in blasphemous mockery impersonated Christ and his twelve Apostles at the Last Supper during a drunken debauch, was a few days ago found dead in a gutter. Every man of the thirteen met with a tragic death, and not one of them received Christian burial. An old man who found the dead body of the last of the band and knew the sacrilegious incident, exclaimed in terror, "It was the hand of God!"

Vice-President Webb of the New York Central railroad has announced in a circular which has been sent to the heads of the various departments that the company objects to its employes being Knights of Labor. After the company's recent experience with that organization it was hardly necessary for Mr. Webb to publicly announce the company's attitude toward the knights. His circular will, however, leave no room for misunderstandings in the future, and is a retribution for which the unwise leaders among the knights have only themselves to blame.—Daily News.

One of the most notable examples of the constant and yet almost imperceptible changes taking place in the heavens is to be found in the motion of the seven bright stars collectively known as the Big Dipper. Huggins, the noted astronomer, is now engaged in proving that five of these stars are moving in the same direction, while the other two are moving in a direction directly opposite. Prof. Flammarton has reduced Huggin's calculations to a system, arranging them upon charts. These ingeniously constructed heavenly outlines show that 100,000 years ago the "Dipper" stars were arranged in the outlines of a large and irregular shaped cross, and that 100,000 years hence they will have assumed the form of an elongated diamond, stretching over three or four times the extent of sky now occupied.—Commercial Advertiser.

About forty years ago my father had an edition of Milton's "Paradise Lost" in prose. This edition, as far as I can remember, was published in London about 1730. In a footnote of said work appeared the following statement: "Our author speaks as Columbus being the discoverer of America. In reality the discoverer of America was Prince Madawg, son of Owain Gwynedd, who sailed from a small port in north Wales, now called, after his name, Port Madoc. This was about 1215 A. D. This Prince Madawg returned from America and took a great number of his countrymen (Welshmen) back with him, but none of them ever returned. Rev. Morgan Ioney, chaplain of South Caroline about A. D. 1710, conversed with the Doeg (Madawg) Indians (who were descendants of the Welsh) in the pure Welsh language." The footnote also remarked that the tomb of Prince Madawg was to be seen at that time in Mexico.—J. H. Hobley in Chicago News.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

Distress After Eating Sick Headache Heartburn Sour Stomach

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would have a faint or tired all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." GEORGE A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

HOME AND HEALTH.

NOTES.

Teach children to handle books carefully. Show them early how to put strong, well-fitting paper covers on them, and see that this is done to all new books while they are being read by the family.

An excellent way to keep ice water in a sick-room is to wrap the pitcher in a newspaper and twist the ends tightly together, in order to exclude the air. As bits of ice may be needed for use, lift out the lump and chip them off with a pin.

An eminent physician claims that raw oysters are the most nourishing food in existence. They are excellent for all cases of impaired digestion, exert a strengthening influence upon the nervous organs, and the liquor they contain is a valuable tonic.

A hot (not merely a tepid) bath the first thing in the morning is recommended by Harper's Bazar to women who resort to bromides, or to tonics of which alcohol forms the base, in order to allay the ill feelings which one often has upon arising. A sponging in cold water, and a thorough rubbing down with a rough towel, should follow.

English and Irish women of education are showing a practical interest in cooking, which may help make that profession as "ladylike" as nursing, for instance. One of this number, who has taken diplomas for skill in cookery, dons cap and apron, and goes out to houses of the nobility to arrange lunches, dinners and ball suppers.—Congregationalist.

HOW TO COOK CRANBERRIES.

Recipes adopted by the American Cranberry Growers' Association: 1. Wash them. Wash them clean, and remove all stems and leaves.

2. Always cook in a porcelain-lined kettle or stew-pan. Never cook in tin or brass.

3. The sooner they are eaten after cooking, the sooner you will know how good they are.

Sauce No. 1.—One quart berries, 1 pint water, 1 pound granulated sugar. Boil ten minutes; shake the vessel, do not stir.

Sauce No. 2.—One quart berries, 1 pint water, 1 pound granulated sugar. Bring sugar and water to a boil; add the fruit and boil till clear—fifteen or twenty minutes.

Sauce No. 3.—One pound berries, 1 pint (scant) cold water, ½ pound granulated sugar. Boil together berries and water ten minutes; add sugar and boil five minutes longer.

Strained Sauce.—One and a half pounds berries, 1 pint water, ¾ pound sugar. Boil together berries and water ten to twelve minutes; strain through a colander and add sugar.

Cranberry Jelly.—One and a half pounds berries, 1 pint water. Boil fifteen minutes; strain through jelly bag or coarse cloth; cook the juice fifteen minutes; add as much sugar as you have juice and boil again fifteen minutes, and turn into forms or jelly cups; dip forms in cold water to prevent sticking.

Cranberry Tarts.—Either of the sauces above will make delicious tarts. Strained sauce generally preferred.

Cranberry Pies.—For pies with upper crusts the berries should be used whole, and cooked in the pastry in the following proportion: 4 parts berries, 3 parts sugar, 1 part water.

Steamed Batter Pudding.—Stir the cranberries with a light batter; steam two hours; serve with liquid sauce.

Steamed Cranberry Dumplings.—Use cranberries the same as apples; steam about one hour, and serve with sauce.

Frozen Cranberries.—Some prefer the flavor of frozen cranberries. Freeze them solid and throw into hot water; use one-fourth less sugar than in former recipes.

TIGHT SHOES.

Medical testimony is not wanting to the great hurtfulness of tight shoes, as well as to any other unnatural compression of the system. One physician, after describing the difficulty of finding any woman who would acknowledge that her shoes were too tight, as she would rather assert that they were much too large, and hurt by their looseness, describes the perfect foot for a man as follows: "It should have great breadth and fullness of instep, a well-marked great toe, a long second toe, and a small little toe." Many modern invalids owe their condition to false notions and practices regarding the feet and shoes, and might find themselves quite well or very much improved if this single habit were corrected. This is especially true of women, since men, as a rule, follow more sensible rules regarding the selection of foot-wear. If the goods are not custom made, an effort is made to at least fit the shoe to the foot, instead of fitting the foot to the shoe, while high heels, forcing the wearer to toddle around upon the balls of the feet, are unknown among business men.—Good Housekeeping.

Farm Notes.

In a Minnesota land circular, setting forth the wondertul agricultural resources of that State, we find the following statement: Minnesota's wheat crop for 1889, 46,660,000 bushels, worth to the farmer $32,662,000, will make 10,370,000 barrels of flour, worth $46,665,000; will make 2,074,000,000 five-cent loaves of bread, worth $103,700,000, being forty loaves for every man, woman and child in the United States, which, placed end to end, would make a column of bread four inches square reaching to the moon and 20,000 miles beyond. What most attracts the attention in this statement is not the size of Minnesota's crop, but the wide margin on wheat between the producer and consumer. The Minnesota farmers get less than one-third of what the consumers pay for the crop of the State. Let us follow a bushel of wheat from the farm through the mill and the bakery to the consumer. The farmer sells a bushel of wheat for 70 cents, the miller grinds it, and sells the flour for a little more than $1, and the baker makes the flour from this same bushel of wheat into bread, and sells it for more than $2.20. The consumer pays more than twice as much for the transportation, milling and baking necessary for a loaf of bread as for the wheat from which it is made. On a bushel of wheat, the miller has a margin of 30 cents and what he can get for the offal, and the baker a margin of $1.20; the farmer's margin between cost and selling is—what? His margin cannot spare anything to make bread cheaper. Of course, all flour does not go through the hands of the trade baker, but the figures given show the margin on that which does, and also shows where the consumer must go to cheapen bread.

Agriculture and manufacturing are not in conflict. They go hand in hand. For a country to reach its highest possible rank, its agriculture and manufacturing must both be fully developed, For many years the South has had its agriculture, but it has always been of the ultra conservative variety. For a few years the South has had manufacturing worthy of the name, and since its advent a change has come over the spirit of its dream, and it has been awakened to look upon the promise of an era of prosperity in agriculture the like of which it had never dreamed.

This year has demonstrated the value of the potato crop, and the need of more care in its culture to secure a fair yield in droughty season. The farmers who have persisted in potato raising, through years of plenty or scarcity, have made money—not every year, it may be, but on the average. When scarce prices are high and 150 bushels per acre brings a big profit to the farmer. When overstocked and prices are too low it pays to cook and feed to hogs and cattle.

The Hon. James Wilson says: Do you own a private dairy, and do you sell for less than the creamery? If so you are wasting your time. Private dairies can beat corporation dairies every time, because they can control all the factors and big dairies cannot. Look into this. Too much poor butter is put upon the market.

With good management and diversified farming there should be no decidedly poor seasons. Some years may be a little better than others, but the good farmer will always have some products for sale at a fair profit, and will a little more than make his ends meet. The wise maxim is: "Don't set all your eggs under one goose."

When corn and oats are high-priced it may pay to feed some of the flax meal that has been heretofore shipped abroad. Being strong and rich in fattening material a little of it goes a great ways. Our stock-growers would do well to experiment with it this year, especially if they have to buy any feed for their stock.

There is, undoubtedly, too big a margin between the prices paid to farmers for beef cattle and the prices charged for the beef on the block.

Convincing Evidence

That Ayer's Sarsaparilla cures Rheumatism and kindred complaints is abundant. This medicine eradicates from the blood all trace of the disease, and so invigorates the system that a perfect restoration to health is inevitable.

"In Oakland, La., 22 years ago, I had been sick a year and a half with sciatic rheumatism. The extreme pains that I suffered wasted my flesh to the bone, and my strength and vitality were well nigh exhausted. My skin was yellow and rough, showing a bad state of the blood, and it is more than likely that blood poison existed, as I have taken large quantities of mercury. After the sciatica was in a measure under control, I was put under treatment to cleanse the blood and give me strength. This was continued several weeks, but to no purpose. My physician then suggested the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and it is to this medicine I owe my restoration to health. From actual experience in the use of various blood-purifiers, I am confident that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has no equal."—J. W. Pickle, Farmerville, La.

"I have known Mr. J. W. Pickle for many years, and consider him a truthful man."—R. B. Dawkins, Mayor of Farmerville, La.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla —FOR— Rheumatism.

"During the past year my joints, which had become stiff and sore, caused me great pain, especially at the close of a day's work. At times my fingers were so lame I was unable to hold a needle, while the pain at night prevented my sleeping. I suffered also from nervous chills and a want of appetite. I tried outward applications and took remedies prescribed by my doctor; but all to no purpose. A short time ago my son-in-law, Wm. Woods, of Hollis, N. H., was cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla of an inflammatory disease of the eyes, and seeing him so much benefited, I thought I would try this medicine for my own trouble. The result is a complete cure of the pains, stiffness, and swelling from which I suffered so much. The Sarsaparilla has had a good effect on my appetite and nerves, so that I have better strength and no more chills."—Eliza Halvorson, Nashua, N. H.

"After being many years afflicted with rheumatism, I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla with great success."—J. B. Bridge, Boston, Mass.

Nearly everyone is familiar with the name, but it has been estimated that only one in every two hundred and eighty persons in the United States is fortunate enough to have access to the valuable information contained within the covers of the grandest work ever written by mortal man,

Webster's

UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words, we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent.

Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface.

In addition to the 100,000 words it contains a portrait of the author, together with his biography and a valuable table of 12,000 synonymous words.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and seventy-five cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

In 1886 a street car driver in Denver was murdered one night, and the cash box robbed. The crime was traced to a young colored man, who was tried amid great excitement, and hung in public. The awful sight attracted tens of thousands, who seemed animated by the spirit of that ancient atrocity at the gladiatorial shows, where men were

"Butchered to make a Roman holiday."

It was a lesson for the civilization of Colorado, and to prevent another such scene a law was passed which provides for private executions and prohibits the press from publishing accounts of them. The first execution under the law took place last Friday at Canon City. It is in the respects named worth adopting in every State. Our newspapers manufacture murderers by the score by their exaggerated and sensational accounts of every hanging. If their evil work was retaliated directly upon their managers it would soon check them.

Some time since we noted the contrast between the Temperance Temple and the Masonic building now being erected in this city. The corner-stone of the first was laid on the 1st. inst., amid the singing of innocent children and the prayers of a multitude of pious men and women. As if to keep as nearly as possible in opposing proximity the Freemasons hastened to put down their corner-stone on the 6th, though the ground is not fully ready for the foundation. They, too, had a grand parade with "Knights" and "Supreme" and "Sovereign Princes" and other dignitaries of names foreign and hostile to our Americanism. They had the notorious H. W. Thomas to do their praying, and the equally notorious D. C. Cregier to make their speech, a name that identifies their order and building with gamblers, saloons and all the vicious element of Chicago. The lodge proposes to complete its vast and gloomy structure in the same month of May, 1892, when the Temperance Temple is to be occupied. It may be God's will that this castle which will be in a sense the bulwark and protection of vice should be completed, but we believe it to be the duty of Christian people to pray that it may never be finisned under its present auspices. It is as easy for him to hinder this building as it was to prevent Julian from rebuilding the Temple at Jerusalem. Or if it is built, let us pray that it be dedicated to honorable purposes and not those of the lodge.

REV. LEONARD BACON, D. D.

The obduracy of Mohammedanism is breaking down. The tenets of that false system which make it a criminal offense to embrace Christianity are not changed, but the misfortunes of the sick man of Turkey have greatly modified their application during the last twenty-five years. Death was then the penalty in fact; and in some indirect way it has been often since, but not openly. The late trouble arising from the oppressive treatment of Armenians and their appeal to Russia are bearing the fruit of moderation. By an order from the Sultan, say the reports of last week, the governor of Erzeroum summoned all Moslems to their mosques, and there in the name of the supreme head of their church and nation, they were admonished respecting their treatment of the Armenians, who were called Christians, and brothers whom the Mohammedans were to treat with respect. It was also proclaimed that the Sultan had determined to protect all Christians within his dominions.

The Roman Catholic press has been making an uproar about an alleged assault made by the Italian police upon some of the religious houses of their sect in Naples. It seems that the Italian Minister of Justice ordered the police to visit "The Nunnery of the Buried Alive," in Naples. Because of the strenuous opposition of the doorkeeper the police were compelled to enter by the windows. Sixteen nuns were found within in a state bordering upon insanity. They were covered with rags, and their surroundings were of the most filthy description. Many had forgotten how to speak, and the demeanor of all of them was more that of animals than human beings. The Spartans were accustomed to praise their children for an adroit theft; but blamed them if they were detected. The Roman idea seems to be to condone the horrors themselves, but to fly at the heads of the agents who have exposed their enormities. Col. Leminowski, a French officer under Napoleon who retired to this country, was accustomed to tell of the unmitigated horrors discovered in the dungeons of the Inquisition which were opened by order of the Corsican conqueror.

The result of the elections in some thirty-three States last week was a victory for the Democratic party in most of them, as our readers are by this time informed by telegraph. The McKinley tariff bill gets full credit for the mischief; and the defeated Republicans are consoling themselves with the frequent examples of former "off" years. The result does not, however, hinder President Harrison from issuing his proclamation for Thanksgiving day on the 27th of November, and the business of the country will go on without very considerable change. In Wisconsin and Illinois the hope of many was not realized in respect to the school law question. A man whose reputation has been made by his buffoonry has been elected Governor of Wisconsin, and the worst of it is, the votes of good men elected him. But the news from the center of greatest real, because moral, interest is most is difficult to get. How has Nebraska gone for prohibition? It is not easy to answer. The party organs are indifferent, or suppress the news to allow frauds to be concealed. One single line we have seen says the State has gone over 40,000 against the amendment. We cannot believe such a majority possible. To the Prohibition press was telegraphed news of a startling nature of mobs, riot and bloodshed in Omaha. Prohibitionists who attempted to work at the polls seem only to have made themselves the objects of violence. Several clergymen were assailed, among them Rev. E. B. Graham, well known to our readers as the author of "In the Coils" and editor of the Midland. It is exasperating to read the story, but we remember that by such struggles and agony has every great moral reform been carried to victory.

CHRIST IN POLITICS.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

Should ministers shun moral reforms when they are political? Years ago, in England, they adopted this policy to please their critics, and soon after were rewarded by the same critics with the title of "christening and marrying machines."

God is everywhere, therefore his laws are everywhere, and his ministers should apply those laws everywhere. The fences between "secular" and "religious," between "moral" and "political," are artificial, not natural, man-made, not God-made. In the Bible there is more condemnation of political sins than of any others. Prophets and apostles frequently confronted and denounced wicked kings. God drove Moses into politics to secure to his people their lost Sabbath and their civil liberty. The licensed and protected Baalism which Elijah fought has its successor in the licensed lust, and licensed gambling and licensed tippling of to-day. Paul "reasoned of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come" before Governor Felix until he "trembled." The "kings" with whom modern prophets have to deal are presidents, governors, congresses, legislatures, parties, which together make up the court of our "King Everybody and his wife."

A minister in New Orleans being criticised for not denouncing the lottery, replied that he "did not believe in preaching on particular sins."

If Nathan had followed that plan and left the application of his ewe-lamb story to his royal hearer, David would neither have felt his sin nor repented of it. That New Orleans pastor and nearly or quite all the other pastors, as the emergency has increased, have attacked the lottery in spite of its attempt to hide from them by going into politics.

As Cambyses conquered Egypt by taking advantage of their superstitious worship of cats, giving his soldiers each a cat in place of a shield, so making it impossible for the Egyptians to kill an invader without first killing a god, rather than do which they surrendered their country without a blow, so, it would seem, the devil is expecting to conquer our country by taking moral questions into legislatures, and keeping off the attack of preachers and churches by holding up the cry of "politics" as the sacred cat that many preachers fear to strike.

In New York State, a year or two since, politics squatted on the Fourth Commandment, by requiring candidates for the Legislature to promise that they would favor surrendering half of the Sabbath to the saloons. Whereupon some of the preachers were in favor of yielding the field rather than "go into politics" by pledging men to defend the day. In the same State, and also in Montana and Louisiana and some other States, politics has squatted on the Eighth Commandment by the licensing of gambling; and I have no doubt that some preachers in these States have never rebuked the dominant party for this legislative crime. In Omaha, Missoula and some other cities, politics has squatted on the Seventh Commandment by licensing prostitution through a private police arrangement that is a crime against the State laws as well as against decency. But it is to be feared that some preachers in such cities have not attacked the officials responsible for this crime because they are "in politics." When politics have pre-empted all the commandments the occupation of such preachers will be gone.

The true watchword for the Christian minister with reference to moral questions in politics should not be, Neutrality, but Impartiality. He should not dwarf his pulpit into a "stump" by discussing anything petty or merely personal of politics, but only large questions involving rights and wrongs, handling these with such fearless impartiality as will compel the respect, if not the agreement, of opposers.

It is objected that Christ did not meddle with politics. This is not true. Like the prophets before him and the apostles after him, he condemned the rulers and parties of his day with scathing severity. Herod, the great political "boss" of his time, Christ satirized with stinging brevity as "that fox." At the popular but corrupt Pharisee party he hurled the seven-fold lightning of his seven-times-uttered "Woe unto you." He took up the great moral issue of divorce, repealed the lax law that Moses gave, which was the best that could be enforced in the early ages, and gave a new law that allowed divorce, for but one cause. He did not take up temperance and emancipation for the same reason that Moses did not give a better law of divorce, because the people were not ready for total abstinence and republicanism. He said, "I have many things to say unto you but ye can not bear them now." At last we can "bear them," and he is saying to his church that the slavery to monarchs and masters and appetites are all to be thrown off in this age of liberty. He commands us to "Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's," that is, to Government the things that belong to Government. Good men do not obey this command when they do not vote as they pray and preach as they vote.

That Christ refused to make himself a civil judge to "divide the inheritance" is ridiculously made an argument why ministers and churches should keep out of poiitics and let the saloons rule the land But that incident has no such principle in it. If Christ had appointed himself a judge, the unfriendly party would have refused his judgment and the civil government would have punished his illegal assumption of office; while the selfish applicant, who came to Christ only to fill his pocket, would have been encouraged in his selfish course. As at other times Christ refused to make himself an earthly king, so here he refused to make himself a civil judge. To do either would have meant civil war. He was seeking a deeper conquest. At last in his own way he conquered Rome, and has taken for Christendom the crowns of more than half the world.

Christ did not move on entrenched wrongs prematurely, but first undermined them by his teachings among the nations, and now, at last, the Spirit, that he said would "guide his people into all truth," is moving those who are most in touch with the mind of Christ to attack the inadequate legislation of the day as to temperance and the Sabbath and gambling and lust, as Christ attacked the inadequate divorce law of his time.

"Up, for this is the day. Is not Jehovah gone out before thee?"

THE VULNERABLE POINT IN MASONRY.

BY EDMUND RONAYNE.

Although for a number of years I have not spoken publicly against that sum of all modern hypocrisies and sham—Freemasonry—yet I desire to say to the readers of the Cynosure and through them to all others, that I am to-day more opposed to, detest more heartily, and despise more cordially, that gigantic system of deviltry and fraud, than I have at any period since I left Keystone Lodge in November, 1874.

Of one thing, however, I am thoroughly satisfied, and that is, that the present method of discussing Freemasonry will never hurt it. What do Masons or the general public care whether Masonry is a Christless institution or not? That fact only recommends it to the craft and to the great mass of the American people. Hence for church people to be continually whimpering about the pagan ceremonies, and the Christless character of the lodge, is only to help increase the membership of the lodge and to give Freemasonry a free advertisement and a certificate of "good moral character." You cannot say anything that will more highly recommend the Masonic system, than to assert, and prove, that it is absolutely and thoroughly Christless and pagan from beginning to end. That is precisely the kind of a thing that almost all classes of people want to-day—a pagan, Christless religion. And so as long as it is constantly kept before the public mind, and daily insisted upon by well-meaning Christian people that there is no Christ in Masonry and that its ritual and ceremonies though purely religious are entirely pagan, so long will Masonry flourish and robbery and wrong hold high carnival in every part of this western continent.

I am glad for one that the name of Christ is so rigidly excluded from the ritual and ceremonies of the Masonic degrees. I am really glad that the ever precious and glorious name of the blessed Redeemer is not mixed up with the hypocritical sham and the devilish debauch of the Masonic lodge. That is one thing at least in its favor if anything can favor such a vile system. But how then can it be successfully combatted and exposed. Simply by constantly exposing its illegal and terrible oaths, and its awful and inhuman penalties of death. A Mason is more afraid, as well as more ashamed, of the Masonic oaths than he is of anything else connected with that system. Repeat the Master Mason's oath to a Masonic minister—that is to a pretended Christian minister who is a Mason—and ask him if he took such an oath as that when he was raised to the sublime degree (?) and he'll swear until he is almost black in the face that he never did. Ask Mayor Cregier did he ever take or administer that oath, and he will lie every time when he says he knows nothing about it. Ask the Masonic saloon-keeper, the Masonic gambler, or politician, or even the worst Masonic bummer in Chicago or throughout the country if he ever took such an oath and he'll swear every time that he never did. Masons, one and all, from the preacher to the blackleg, are ashamed of their oaths, and hence I'd strike Masonry, and strike it as hard as I could, through its fearful oaths and penalties of death.

There is much published about that Italian secret society called the Mafia. It is unquestionably a murderous society. Yes, but is it any more murderous in its character than Masonry? I would challenge the whole world to produce in any secret gang or society on earth anything more terribly awful or more fearfully inhuman than the barbarous oaths and death penalties of the Masonic system. What can be more terrible than for a man to swear to "have his throat cut across and his tongue torn out by the roots;" to "have his left breast torn open and his heart plucked out;" and to "have his body severed in twain, his bowels taken from thence and burned to ashes?" There is nothing worse than this, if indeed there be anything equal to it among the most vicious and blood-thirsty gangs of men on top of the earth. And these oaths, and these penalties of death are nightly administered, contrary to all law, human and divine, in these United States. I desire to stamp Masonry as an illegal society. And to brand every man—minister and layman—who adheres to the Masonic institution as a man who has sworn to take human life. Who is to be the Masonic assassin of the recalcitrant brother Mason? Surely none but a Mason will be delegated to do the throat-cutting, the breast-tearing and the bowel-burning. When a Hennessey was to be assassinated Mafia brothers were chosen to commit the foul deed; and when a Pritchard, an Anderson or a Morgan was to be murdered in cold blood, none but Masons were told off to inflict their horrible and inhuman penalties of death.

I declare before God and man that it is a shame for a man—for any man, no matter how low or depraved—to be a Mason. And for this one reason above and beyond all others, that he is sworn both to lie and to kill. Beside all other wicked organizations of men both in this country and in Europe, Freemasonry takes the first rank as the leading cut-throat society; and at the same time the most shameless and brazen of them all. I would then attack Freemasonry through its murderous penalties and illegal oaths. I would impress it upon the public mind that no man can consistently be a free citizen of this free Republic and be a Freemason at the same time. And I would insist upon it, that no man can be loyal at the same time to the oath administered in a Masonic lodge and to the oath administered in a court of law. I submit this question to any Master Mason, and down deep in his heart he knows I'm right just as I knew it myself long before I had courage enough to denounce the vile thing and to leave it forever.

THE CELEBRATED CASE OF PURDUE UNIVERSITY.

This institution is the State Agricultural school of Indiana. It has no classical department, and had at one time a rule and pledge to be taken by each student against the college secret societies, which were supposed to have more affiliation for classical students and in a sense to belong to them. In 1880 the Board of Trustees was urged to rescind the rule, but referred the petition to the Faculty, who judged that such repeal would be very injurious, if not disastrous, to the University. In August of that year it was discovered that a conspiracy of students was formed to resist the authority of the Faculty and break down the rule. Believing that the influence of the parents would be of material benefit in the case, Hon. E. E. White, then president of the University, addressed a letter to the patrons of the institution giving a brief history of the case, of which the following is the principal portion:

"At the meeting of the Board of Trustees held in June, 1876, for the reorganization of the University, the propriety of adopting a regulation on the subject of college secret societies was considered. The president of the University stated that he was not prepared to make any recommendation, and, at the suggestion of one of the Trustees, the subject was unanimously referred to the Faculty with power to take such action as might be deemed best. [The rule then adopted by the Trustees was in these words: "No society shall be organized by the students except by consent of the Faculty."]

"Early in September, 1877, one of the professors called attention to the existence of a Greek fraternity chapter at the University, organized without the consent of the Faculty, and urged the necessity of adopting a regulation to protect the University as an industrial college from the adverse influence of such fraternities, representing the classical colleges. The subject was considered at a meeting of the Faculty held Sept. 11, 1877, when another professor moved the adoption of a rule requiring each candidate for matriculation in the institution to subscribe to a pledge not to join any so-called Greek society or other college secret society during his connection with the University. The rule was earnestly advocated by every member of the Faculty who had been connected with a Greek society when in college, and the vote on its adoption was unanimous.

"It was agreed not to disturb the few students who were members of the fratenity chapter, and, since each of the upper classes contained one or more such students, it was decided to require only applicants for admission to the Freshman class to subscribe to the pledge. All subscribed to it without objection and without hesitation. At the beginning of the next college year (1878–79) all students entering the Freshman class and all new students entering the Sophomore class subscribed to the pledge.

"This policy was adopted to favor the few students who were members of the Greek fraternity when the rule was adopted. It, unfortunately, permitted the presence of fraternity students in the University for three years, until 1880, when the last graduated. No one of the graduates in 1878, 1879 and 1880 had been required to subscribe to the pledge.

"Notwithstanding the consideration thus shown the Greek chapter, it early manifested hostility to the rule. In 1878 two unsuccessful attempts were made to induce the Board of Trustees to overrule the Faculty and rescind the regulation. It was urged as an objection to the pledge that the Freshmen who subscribed to it, did not understand its import, and that the long period of time covered ("during connection with the University") increased the chances of the student's being tempted to break it.

"To avoid these and other objections, the Faculty decided in June, 1879, to change the pledge to an annual pledge, to be renewed at each annual promotion to a higher class. The students who had taken the former pledge were informed in writing that the same was canceled, and they were asked to subscribe to the new pledge, extending only one year. This was done by all the students who returned, and this annual pledge has since been used. No student is required 'to take a pledge on a pledge,' as has been asserted. The pledge is binding only one year from its date.

"The annual pledge has worked well. It brings the regulation of the University to the attention of the student, greatly lessens his liability to be misled, and avoids unpleasant discipline. He knows that a violation of the regulation forfeits promotion at the end of the year or honorable dismissal. If a student is unwilling to renew the pledge, other institutions are open to him, and he can leave Purdue honorably. Very few students have thus avoided a renewal of this honorable obligation.

"At the close of the last college term, a petition was presented to the Board of Trustees by students asking for the rescinding of the rule relating to Greek fraternities. The small number of signers in the upper classes is a significant fact. The petition was signed by three of the eight Seniors, four of the twelve Juniors, and thirteen of the twenty-four Sophomores in attendance (six of the thirteen being young ladies). Three-fifths of the signers were students in the Academy and over two-fifths are girls. A majority of the signers could have no personal interest in college fraternities, and they doubtless added their names to accommodate the urgent solicitors. The number of cases known to the Faculty indicates that most of the students signed without the consent or knowledge of their parents. It is believed that few of the parents would have given such consent, as several have expressed to us a strong disapproval of the petition. The great majority of the parents who send their children to Purdue, are obliged to make personal sacrifices to pay their necessary expenses. They are not anxious to have these expenses increased from $10 to $25 a year with no tangible benefit as a return. It costs something for a few students to rent a room in the city, fit it up, etc., and pay other fraternity expenses. The possession of a room in the city for night meetings of students would be approved by very few parents.

"The Board gave those in charge of the petition a patient hearing, and, after due deliberation, referred the same, by a vote of five to one, to the Faculty as the governing body of the University in such matters. It is understood that this action is final so far as the present Trustees are concerned.

"A meeting of the Faculty was subsequently called to consider the petition. It was the opinion of the members that the repeal of the rule would be very injurious, if not disastrous, to the University, but all were willing to make any desired modification of the rule that would not lessen its efficiency. It was decided to give students their choice between the annual pledge and one covering their entire connection with the University. Those who choose the latter will be required to subscribe annually to the statement, now embodied in the annual pledge, that they are not connected with any college secret society.

"It is highly creditable to the students of Purdue that not one of them has ever been suspended or disciplined for a violation of the fraternity regulation. In 1878, two students were suspended for other offenses, and after their suspension it was ascertained that they had violated the rule. The president was satisfied that they had been misled by strong assurances that the rule would be repealed at the next meeting of the Board of Trustees, and, in view of this circumstance, they were each granted an honorable dismissal.

"In 1879, three students were reported to the president as having violated their pledges. The information was definite, including time and place of initiation. The reported students were believed to be honorable young men, and it was decided to accept the statement of each as conclusive. They were called to the president's room separately. Two made statements that were entirely satisfactory, and were so assured. The third answered somewhat indefinitely, and did not return to the University, having before decided to withdraw. One of the two subsequently renewed the pledge twice. This one occurrence in four years is the basis of all that has been said about students being summoned before the Faculty on suspicion, suspended, etc.

"Of the three to four hundred young men who have been students at Purdue since the adoption of the rule, not twenty, it is believed, have violated it, and most of these did not intend to continue in the University, or were misled by false assurances of the near repeal of the rule. Very few students have left the institution an account of the rule, and where one student has left for such reason two have entered. The attendance has nearly doubled since the rule was adopted, and the increase last year was over twenty-five per cent. It is an easy thing for a student who is too heavily conditioned for promotion, or who gets into trouble, to intimate that he leaves on account of the fraternity rule! The records of this office and other information in possession of the Faculty account for the withdrawal of the majority of the students recently named to the Board as having withdrawn on account of this rule.

"A Greek fraternity organ, recently seen by the writer, states that there were several sub-rosa fraternity members in Purdue last year. This ought to be good authority, and the Faculty is thankful for the information. If it be true, the few students implicated do not intend to return, or, if they venture to return, they will endeavor to protect themselves by involving other students in trouble. Any such attempt will be considered a confirmation of the organ's statement.

"Every parent who returns or sends a son to Purdue should see to it that he does not put himself in an attitude of hostility to any regulation. If he cannot subscribe to and cheerfully comply with every requirement, he should not be sent here. The young man who enters an institution hostile to its regulations, exposes himself to demoralizing influences and jeopardizes his success as a student."

The important subsequent results will be given next week.

All great reforms have been brought about by bold men, who in the fear of God have spoken out in plain words denouncing great social evils. They have in this way brought society to a realization of the results of evil, so that all were ready to unite for its overthrow. When they have become sufficiently in earnest, God has always rewarded their prayers and faith by giving them the victory. Every one has not an equal amount of talent to fearlessly lead on the reform, but every one can help by agitation and prayer.—The Church Militant.

It is said that United States marshals do not attempt to enforce the prohibitory liquor law granted to Oklahoma territory, and that United States revenue officers collect revenue from one hundred and four saloons in Guthrie and eighty-three in Oklahoma City, while every city has saloons.

POWDERLY'S DANGEROUS MONOPOLY.

[From the New York Mail and Express, Aug. 27, 1890.]

The Knights of Labor ought, by this time, to see that their order was based on un-American principle, and has been brought into disfavor with the people of this country and with other labor organizations, because of several reasons.

First—It is contrary to the instincts, traditions and institutions of Americans that any secret, oath-bound organization should assert the authority and assume the powers that have been claimed and exercised by the Knights, who have been compelled by a despotic and arbitrary control to be guilty of illegal and violent interferences with private and public and corporate rights, involving losses and bloodshed and class jealousies and strifes that no open and legitimate labor organization would have brought on its members and the community.

Second—At the outset of the aggressive career of the Knights when they had become a great power they were misled by ambitious leaders and deceived by wild dreams of attaining a supremacy that the American people will not long concede to any organization, especially one whose councils are secret and whose members are tied to an autocracy of their own creation by oaths that isolate them from the great mass of laboring men. But since the bloody and disastrous experiences of 1877, when a cyclone of strikes swept the country, the Knights have been rashly led into struggles that yielded results almost as deplorable as though in each case civil war had had its brief but destructive career.

Is it not time for the rank and file of this anomalous and autocratically ruled organization to call a halt and assert their American manhood? At the outset they were the misled victims of visionary schemes, false doctrines and un-American teachings, but has not Schoolmaster Experience charged terrible tuition fees that ought no longer to be invited by continuance under such mischievous leadership as the Knights have had. They ought to know that the Constitution of the United States, which is the foundation of all private and corporate rights, of all our marvelous prosperity that gives labor rewards elsewhere unknown, and of institutions under which classes are unknown and rights equal—is hostile in letter and spirit to secret, oath-bound organizations for adjusting differences between employers and employes. They ought to have learned that their worst foes are the demagogues who seek to array the railroad corporations that employ over 700,000 laborers, and that are in no sense "monopolies," for men of small means can buy their stock; that the corporations are controlled both by Federal and State Commissioners; that no other form of property is so closely regulated by Legislatures and watched by the Press, and that the only really dangerous "monopoly" is that which the Grand Masters of the Knights of Labor have exercised in dictating terms to railroad corporations or in antagonizing them and paralyzing traffic and travel.

ROME AND THE LODGE.—Many anti-Romanists are now favoring the lodge as a matter of policy; but it is very mistaken policy. Rome and secret societies are by no means the bitter enemies they pretend to be. Hear what the American says: "The leading members among the Odd-fellows in some of our cities have for years been Irish Romanists, and this order in some places is already under their control. The same is true of many secret societies alrcady. About forty Protestant secret societies are now working along patriotic lines; and it is for this reason the ban is lifted. Rome feels compelled to gain control of the patriotic organizations of America before they become too formidable." In one Massachusetts town there are nearly thirty societies more or less secret, and most of them with military drill, officered and controlled by Roman Catholics. Yes; Rome is shrewd. She is the greatest mistress of secret methods the world ever saw, and so long as Protestants play into her hands with secret societies, patriotic or anything else, she will get the better of them every time.—Christian Witness.

In all evils which admit a remedy, impatience should be avoided, because it wastes that time and attention in complaints, which, if properly applied, would remove the cause.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The Republican party in Massachusetts meets a Waterloo.—The color line in New England.—The Boston School Board compromises with Rome.—Other matters.—A testimony to Christ's power to cast out the tobacco fiend.

The Republican party has again met with one of its periodical overturns in Massachusetts. It is noticeable that one year of Democratic rule is generally enough for her, and having administered a well-deserved lesson to the Republican leaders she always swings into line again in confident faith that the lesson has had its effect and will not again be needed. The Democratic party has long been credited with a constitutional incapacity to learn anything, and the Republicans seem to have the same infirmity. Of course dissatisfaction with the McKinley bill has had much to do with a result that has surprised both sides, but it is the Prohibition vote plus the anti-Romanist—and a large plus too—which has cut down Brackett's expected plurality, and filled the Republican camp with mourning. Russell has a majority of between 9,000 and 10,000, although later returns may alter the figures.

One of the most shameful things that has lately happened, and one that ought to touch to the quick the pride of every true New Englander is the refusal of hotels to take in Rev. J. H. Hector and his family on account of their color. He has even been refused passage on a public conveyance; and thus this cultured Negro gentleman who is doing such grand work for the Prohibition cause, has been subjected to an outrageous display of caste spirit that would be disgraceful to Mississippi or Georgia. Furthermore, the proprietors of these hotels were all staunch Republicans, and very naturally their action has given the Prohibition papers a great deal to say that is not complimentary about "the grand old party." But it has been ridden by the lodge so long that it does not seem to me at all strange, however deplorable, that it should forget all its past traditions and show the true lodge spirit, which is always and everywhere to ignore and contemn the Negro. Not only Masonry and Odd-fellowship, but the pettiest endowment order is for white men only; and wherever the lodge throws its upas shadow, whether it be in the Republican, the Prohibition or the anti-Romanist ranks, the result will be, or more properly speaking, is the same. One of the latest developments of this mean and un-Republican spirit was at the recent meeting of the National Camp of Patriotic Sons of America, at which it was voted to so amend the constitution as to make all colored men ineligible for membership. It certainly shows remarkable dullness in anti-Romanists who are banding in these secret associations to give Rome such an advantage in the game she is playing to win the colored race. That the P. O. S. A. has organized as a military order is also another feature to be regretted. Rome chuckles over every false and mistaken move of her opponents, and it is best that they afford her as little of this kind of diversion as possible.

I regret to say that the New England Conservatory of Music is now agitated over the color line, because two young colored ladies, one a daughter of the collector of the port of Galveston, have entered it to complete their musical studies. But it is some consolation to say that they are but a few out of the hundreds there who have disgraced themselves and the noble institution in which they are pupils by such a silly display of caste prejudice. It ought to be no small punishment to these self-conceited young women to see how generally their un-Christian and un-American treatment of their colored sisters has been condemned by the press.

Almost every intelligent person believes that our jury system has serious defects. It is not easy to find twelve men in perfect agreement on any subject, and in Sweden there is such a realizing sense of the difficulty that they do not even attempt it; but the judge gives the verdict which is complete and final, unless the jury—for a regular jury is impannelled the same as with us—unanimously disagree with his decision, which is in that case rendered null and void. With lodgemen for judges, however, the Swedish way would have no particular advantage over ours.

The "intelligent juryman" who never reads the papers and has no opinions of his own, will soon have a serious rival in the school teacher; for the Boston school board in their anxiety to concede to Rome every possible advantage, recommended in a late meeting that when any disputed point in history came up, particularly if it had the least theological bearing, he or she must be or pretend to be a complete ignoramus, or to use a polite term, agnostic. In the extraordinary language of the board, "when he considers his own limited knowledge, the little time that his pupils can give to the disputed subject, and the disagreement of doctors—of scholars—he may well hesitate to decide for his pupils what is the truth." We shall have to revise Thomson's famous line about "teaching the young idea how to shoot." That is all going to be obsolete with Boston pedagogues. A teacher of many years' experience in another section of the country, once said to me, "I would not be a teacher in one of your New England towns or cities for anything, and have so little freedom allowed me as an instructor." The effect of such a compromise with the Jesuitical troubles of our public schools, must be to disgust the best teachers who have generally some settled ideas of their own, as well as to leave an impression on the minds of the pupils that in regard to these "disputed points" the truth is of little consequence. Surely this is not the way to train up the future generations in moral stamina, or to have an intelligent grasp of those great questions which they must settle when we are under the sod.

Evangelist Leyden, who has spoken with so much acceptance in our New England conventions, was recently hit and seriously injured by a brickbat, hurled at him by a Roman Catholic Irishman, while on his way to lecture in Amesbury, but the public press has had very little to say regarding the outrage so completely is it subsidized to Rome.

Rev. David Gregg, D. D., pastor of the Park Street Congregational Church, has concluded to accept the Brooklyn pastorate which has been offered him with its salary of ten thousand dollars, and expects to leave soon.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 5, 1890.

The event of the week in religious circles was the monster mass meeting held Monday evening in the interest of the proposed Methodist University. It was a great success in every respect. Mr. Harrison did not attend, because he had at the last minute, so to speak, decided to go to Indiana for the purpose of casting his vote on Tuesday, but he showed his interest in the object of the meeting by sending a letter, which was read by Bishop Hurst.

Bishop Ninde, of Topeka, made a splendid impression on the immense audience in a short speech favoring the project, and concluding with these words: "I want to express a two-fold wish: First, make the university a popular institution. It has been truly said that education is not the luxury of the rich, but the necessity of the poor. We want this institution to be open to all creeds and conditions. Have your classical schools and your industrial schools. Then let it be a Christian institution. Let God's name be venerated and let his book be the classic of classics. It is a great work to which you are called. You are building a glorious beacon to truth-seeking souls through the coming years." Interesting addresses were also made by Bishops Vincent, Warren, Bowman and Hurst.

The bishops have visited the site which has been selected for the University, and they are unanimous in their approval of it. They concluded their business and adjourned yesterday afternoon. To-night they are too make their last public appearance here at a missionary meeting, at which Bishops Warden, Mallalieu and Newman have promised to speak.

Our temperance folk are greatly disappointed at the action of the present Commissioners of the District of Columbia in deciding to annul the rule adopted last year providing that only 400 retail liquor licenses should be issued for the year beginning last Saturday, and the reason given for this change of front is truly discouraging. The Commissioners, or rather the two who voted to do away with the rule limiting the number of retail licenses to 400, take the ground that they have no authority to abridge the rights held by men now engaged in the saloon business, and that all they can do toward a restriction of the liquor traffic at the National capital is to refuse to issue licenses to parties not now in the business. This position is perfectly absurd. Congress, by special act, has given the Commissioners exclusive control over the liquor traffic in this District, and their right to refuse to issue licenses whenever in their discretion they may see fit, has been upheld by our courts; and if they should refuse to issue more than 100 licenses their action would be perfectly legal, and nobody knows it any better than the two lawyers who are the civilian Commissioners, one of whom, to his credit be it said, strongly opposed the changing of the 400 limit.

Isn't it about time, anyway, for reputable people to stop talking of the "rights"(!) of saloon-keepers? They have no rights that society should recognize. When a man for the sake of gain engages in a business which thrives on money that should go to feed and clothe starving and ragged women and children, and which fills our prisons with criminals, from the petty thief to the burglar and murderer, he declares war against humankind, and forfeits any rights he might have possessed when engaged in a legitimate and respectable business—saloon-keeping is neither—to the respect or consideration of society. I regret that our local rulers should have made this concession to the "rights" of the rum-sellers. It will be used as an argument elsewhere to enable those who are engaged in this nefarious business to obtain the recognition of their "rights." *

REFORM NEWS.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS AND THEORISTS.

HARTFORD, Conn.. Nov. 7, 1890.

The estimated number in attendance from abroad at the Christian Workers' Convention here is 600. The noted workers are of course here, and many others less known to the public. On arriving I applied for a hearing, and the privilege of distributing anti-lodge literature. Brethren thought it not best to bring the subject before the convention, but said they were in perfect sympathy with my work, and that the sidewalk in front of the church was free territory. Upon this hint I acted, taking the responsibility which they declined to assume. I gave to each prominent worker a copy of Joseph Cook's address on "Disloyal Oaths," and near 4,000 tracts to goers and comers, which were received in most instances with thanks. One man after reading the Moody and Pentecost tract, and the Jesuit and Master Mason's Oath, returned to ask, "Who is doing this?"

"I am, sir. Is it a violation of the laws of God or man?"

"It's a violation of the law of God," was his prompt reply.

I said, "If you propose to stamp out Moody, Pentecost, Munhall and the testimony of C. G. Finney, you have a rougher road to travel than the one you passed over between Babylon and Jerusalem." He passed on without a word in reply. Four ladies at different times said on seeing Mr. Pentecost's picture, "Oh, that's my spiritual father;" or "I was converted under his preaching," etc. One brother had some fear that I would lose my head by the hands of the Jesuits or Freemasons, etc. A kind and approving word from Dr. Gordon was appreciated as only such words can be welcomed by one facing a crowd in which there are very few who have the courage to stand by their own convictions and one who dares openly to assail the secret system of Jesuits, Freemasons, Mormons, and the whole brood of night owls, bats and evil workers who love darkness.

The noon hours were passed very pleasantly with our good sister Prindle and her friend from Florence Mission, New York, where she is now at work. She remembered and inquired very particularly about the friends in Wheaton and spoke with pleasure of her visit at the home of the "Apostle of Reforms."

Yesterday and the day before I had the satisfaction of handing out tracts at the outer door of old Park Street church, Boston, where the Evangelical Alliance was holding an annual convention. The management of this convention was in no way hostile to our special work; but I was informed by members of the committee that it had been ordered that only their own literature should be distributed at their meetings. Thanks to the committee for being quite lenient when informed more particularly of my work.

The speaking at both the above named conventions was very able; but there are some things about these dear Christian soldiers I cannot quite understand. They extol Paul for his courage; glorify John Brown and the martyrs who faced the enemy and died for their principles, and even talk of emulating their examples, and at the same time decline to put themselves in a hostile attitude to the lodge, or to be publicly known as the "backers" of any man or woman who dares and does "beard the lion in his den." Brethren, perhaps this is manly. Perhaps it is Christian, to be more considerate of those you know to be the adversaries of Christ and his bride, than you are of his friends, but I don't see it in that light. If you have any Scripture for putting your light upon this question under a bushel, won't you give a humble brother and the Cynosure readers the benefit of it? There are some beside yourselves who would like to save their reputation by silence, if only they could have a "thus saith the Lord" for it. Speak, brethren; we wait to hear the good tidings. J. P. STODDARD.

AMONG THE COLORED CHURCHES OF WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 7, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am now endeavoring to get a knowledge of our work before all the leading colored friends in the churches in the District. Sickness and the attention to the needs of the little one God has sent to cheer us in our home has hindered somewhat, but the way seems clear for a forward movement now.

Last Sabbath evening I had a blessed season in declaring the truth to those who gathered in the Berean Baptist church. The young pastor, Rev. J. Milton Waldron, I believe to be a true man of God, filled with a holy zeal for the salvation of men. His welcome was most cordial, and believing that the best method of arriving at the truth was by a frank and candid discussion, he favored your agent with his subscription to our paper, and promises his support in getting light to others. He had observed the secret societies of the South to be one of the greatest obstacles to the advancement of Christ's kingdom there.

I am sorry to report that I found a large number of the members of his church connected with the lodge, and some very much averse to any discussion. One man expressed himself as being honored by being a Knights Templar, but he did not affiliate with the colored Knights in Washington because they had so many bad men among them. I endeavored to show him that the supposed concealment of the lodge would naturally attract bad men to it. "Men who love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." The church attracts those who love the light and not those who wish to cover up wrong by a pretense of love for the light. A man going to Sabbath-school does not try to conceal it. A man going to the saloon, the gambling hell, the brothel or any other devilish place, seeks to hide it unless he has lost all sense of decency.

I have three appointments for colored churches in this city, and am invited to address a literary society in Wayland Baptist Seminary, Dec. 6th. I am not sure that I can accept the invitation of that date, owing to work I desire to do away from the city.

I called to see Rev. W. B. Johnson, D. D., pastor of a large Baptist church this morning. Said he, "Where's Bro. Hinman? I've read the Cynosure and know all about your work. I've got 'Knight Templarism Illustrated' and a number of your books up stairs now. I got them from Wayland. (He is Professor of Church History and Mathematics in Wayland.) I belong to most all the secret societies going, so I am on the other side. But I think your arguments are good, and I'll give my people a chance to hear you." He then gave me a letter of introduction to Judge R. D. Ruffin, a leader in his church, with a request that he arrange for me to address the Lyceum, which meets at three o'clock every Sabbath afternoon in his church.

A colored man whom I employed to do some work said he was in a hurry to get through as he was going to a "hop" that night. I asked if he did not think it a little tough to work hard all day and hop all night. He replied it was rather hard on a fellow. But it was for the benefit of the "Good Samaritans" (a colored secret order). I asked what they did with the money they received. He replied, "Put it in the treasury to help a fellow when he is sick or bury him when he dies." It's astonishing to see how some are led to believe they will not be buried without joining some of these hopping concerns. Said I; "Do they sell liquor at this hop?" "No," said he. "They don't allow a fellow to get drunk; its against the rules." "But," said I, "supposing a fellow should drink too much and get drunk, what would they do with him?" "Oh," said he, "we has a committee appointed to tend to dem fellows. Deyed put him out."

Talk with some of the friends connected with the "Good Samaritans" as I have done, and they would declare by their word and honor and all that's sacred, that the Good Samaritans were founded on the Bible: and I have no doubt they believe it. I have not the least doubt but this organization has relieved many suffering and in distress. But think of it, dear reader. An organization founded on the Bible raising money by "hops," and appointing a committee to cast out their drunken members! The church is founded on the Bible. Did you ever know a spiritual church that appointed a committee to cast out drunkards? The thing would be absurd on its face. Where the Spirit of Christ is he rules the entire life, and there is no time for promiscuous "hops," and no need for drunkard committees.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PHILADELPHIA AND WASHINGTON.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 3, 1890.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I reached Philadelphia Saturday evening. The city was in a ferment of excitement over the reception given Secretary Blaine at the Academy of Music in the afternoon. The Republicans are very anxious about Pennsylvania next Tuesday and they brought over the "Plumed Knight" to strengthen them. Sabbath morning and evening I preached in the North United Presbyterian church. They have a fine large lot on Master St., and a beautiful stone chapel in the rear. It is their purpose to build a church as soon as practicable. They have 140 members. Having been without a pastor for over a year they find it difficult to hold their own. A few weeks ago they made a call on Rev. Joseph Kyle of Springfield, Ohio. But his own congregation protested with an increase of $500 to his salary, and he stayed.

The evening audience was quite as large as the morning. Rev. Dr. Barr of the Christian St. U. P. church and Rev. Dr. Gamble of Belfast, Ireland, were present. Mr. Robt. T. Elliott, for many years treasurer of the National Reform Association, is an elder here. I will long remember the kind words spoken by Messrs. Stevens, Baker and others.

On Sabbath afternoon I preach in the First Reformed Presbyterian church, Rev. John Graham, pastor. This brother was formerly located in Rochester, N. Y. It was my privilege to assist him then at his communion on two occasions. He has now 250 members. They have a large and flourishing Sabbath-school. A liberal collection was lifted for National Reform at the close of the sermon.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 6.—I reached Washington Tuesday afternoon. That evening according to appointment I lectured in Howard University. A very pleasant evening we had of it.

The next morning I visited Columbian University, on 15th and H streets, N. W. It is just across the street diagonally from the Shoreham, Vice President Morton's house, over which the W. C. T. U. convention in Chicago one year ago disputed anent his license to sell liquor. I had a very pleasant interview with President J. C. Welling. He stated that all told they have 700 students; that they depend largely upon their fees for their support; and that the trustees had decreed that no lecturer should be admitted to address the students. He would see that any literature I might leave would reach the students. Judge Harlan of the U. S. Supreme Court is one of their law professors. He said lately that a uniform national divorce law was unconstitutional. The Constitution relegates that matter to the States.

On Wednesday afternoon I addressed the students, faculty and visitors of Wayland Seminary. They have 163 students. The president, Rev. G. M. P. King, D. D., has been here twenty-five years. The pastor from the New York Avenue M. E. Church was present, and also a minister from West Virginia, who said he had heard my address on Sabbath Reform before the Baltimore ministers' union.

On Wednesday night I attended a missionary meeting in McKindree M. E. Church. This was the farewell meeting of the bishops who have been here since last Saturday. Bishop Walden spoke first. He said: "While it is all important to cultivate the field in heathen lands, we should not neglect those countries where they have the form but not the power of Christianity. Traveling through Mexico and the South American republics, dominated by Romanism, I was profoundly impressed with the importance of giving them the living Gospel. And the tide of immigration coming into our country makes the work at home most important of all."

Bishop Newman followed. He said: "The outlook is hopeful. Christianity is becoming universal. The Mohammedan power is broken. The Eastern question means simply that the powers of Europe are waiting for the time to come when the Sultan will be dethroned. The Pope is nothing but a bishop. There is no court of the Vatican. It is a farce to send ambassadors there. There is a hesitancy on the part of European nations to go to war, and that hesitancy is born of Christianity. The women in the courts are the angels holding back their husbands from the field of carnage. This is woman's age, and it is an age of peace. When Francis Xavier went to Bombay he found 20,000 families who had the Gospel of Matthew and believed on Christ. When Elijah was discouraged, God said, 'I have reserved 7,000 men who have not bowed the knee to Baal.' Here were 20,000 families unknown to the missionary. A missionary in Pekin gave a Testament to a Chinaman from the interior. Years after the Chinaman came back. He said: 'I read that Testament and was converted. I read it to my wife and children and they were converted. I read it to my neighbors and they were converted. And now we want you to come and organize a church.' I have traveled in all lands and on all seas, and I find Christianity dominant everywhere. The light is breaking. The full noon will soon be upon us."

This evening I am to lecture in Morgan College, Baltimore. I met Bro. Stoddard yesterday. He is as bright and hopeful as a May morning.

J. M. FOSTER.

A SAD CASE OF BACKSLIDING INTO THE LODGE.

DEKALB, Iowa.

When the grange first organized in southwestern Iowa an M. E. Christian neighbor joined it. In a short time the lodge in our neighborhood went down, but it had given him a taste for secretism. He then joined the I. O. O. F. some twelve miles from his home. A few years passed in lodge progress, and he called on business. We talked mostly on the subject of religion. I inquired how he was prospering on that line, when he made the following honest confession: "My name is on the class book, but it ought not to be there! I am now an officer in the lodge and am required to be there every Saturday night. I get home late and rest till past time for meeting Sundays."

A few days later we met at a religious neighbor's house. There was a prayer meeting at once for his benefit, but the three links of Satan held him back from Christ, though the Spirit of God manifestly tried to lead him to the Saviour.

I went with him part of the way home and tried to persuade him to again take up the cross. He told me with tears in his eyes that when he had "quit praying" in his "home" that one morning his little child said to him, "Pa, are you not going to pray any more?" He said, "It nearly killed me. I never had words hurt me so much." He knew that God tried to use the child to lead him again into the fold. "A child shall lead them." But he would not, for he said, "I would rather give up the church than the lodge."

I knew but little about the lodge and did not give him any light on that subject, but with all my ignorance concluded it safe to stay out of the lodge, as it was not essential to salvation, and I had no desire to belong to any organization except the church. But when he decided the way he did I could not help but think that the Spirit of God had reproved him for the sin of lodgery. And although he did not make the right choice between the church and the lodge, he was too honest to try to hold to both and profess to be a Christian. He did not try to "serve two masters."

How much the light is needed on the secrecy question, that men may believe in Jesus Christ and the principles of his church, even to the saving of their souls! Lodge darkness will send more souls to hell than all the other influences. May Christians be up and doing everywhere, and encourage every good work and especially the Cynosure in maintaining the good fight of faith. How much we need on the whole armor of God so that we shall not have a man-fearing spirit. May God give us grace to stand and behold the salvation of God—that our last words may be as Paul's: "I have fought a good fight." CYRUS SMITH.

THEY MUST BE BROUGHT TO LIGHT.

YORK, Pa., Nov. 3, '90.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The expression "brought to light" is supposed by many anti-secret reformers to be of Masonic origin, but the fact is that it is Jesuitic, like many others. Many newspaper men use this expression daily; but they all bring as little to light as they can. They keep their readers hoodwinked and outwitted "for the good of the order."

The only citizens of the United States who are trying to bring the hoodwinked, the outwitted, and the rogues to light, are the genuine anti-secret crusaders, who use their tongues, pens and purses to expose and exterminate all secret organizations.

The call for subscribers and funds, which you have lately sent out, should be answered by all promptly. We are the people to arouse the nation. And we must do our work immediately. I am afraid many of our Pennsylvania friends are not doing all they might do to push our State work. The rum god, the sun god, the Black Pope, the White Pope, and the host of hoodwinking henchmen are all at work, early and late, bandaging the eyes, fuddling the brains, corrupting the young and misleading the unsuspecting of all classes. And thus we see that a great responsibility is resting upon every anti-secret girl, boy, woman and man now living in the light. And we, the seceding members of the various oath-bound orders, have perhaps the greatest burden to bear and the most important work to do. If any of us have not done all we might have done in the past, we can get out of our purgatory by going to work with a will now, to redeem ourselves and our great cause. One of the best ways to bring any one to light is to induce him to subscribe for the Cynosure for three months on trial. And the best way to bring all the rogues to light will be to push the anti-secret reform to the extreme limit in society, the state, and the religious world.

While I visited the Know Nothing and the secret Union League lodge-rooms, I lived in darkness, and was frequently deceived by the dark-lantern leaders. But while I live I intend to be a lighthouse for those still sailing upon the dark and dangerous sea of secrecy. Yours,

EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

THE OUTLOOK FROM STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 1, '90.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—My first month of school work for this year has just closed. The school has opened very pleasantly. Under the leadership of President Atwood we find a good many changes, but he is a very intelligent Christian man, and seems to be just the one for the place.

This university is doing a grand work. New comers are always happily disappointed by the progress and intelligence of the pupils. This year another building has been added so that its facilities for good are somewhat increased.

I was quite disappointed to find the way the mission school in which I worked had been carried on during the summer. The man in charge seemed to think that anything to keep them together was enough. Religious instruction seemed far from his thoughts. The Sabbath-school was turned into a practice hour on dumb-bells and the like, for the "concert" which lasted so late Saturday night, he said he did not suppose they would be awake the next day, and so did not come down. No prayer was offered during the summer. Once the police were brought in to silence him when he was forcibly settling some question of interest, and said if he did not keep better order they would close the school. I believe the young man meant well, but he needs to be born again before he can do very efficient mission work. One of the young ladies in my class said she used to have lots of fun dancing, and the superintendent played for them. When I got back I heard several ejaculate, "Bless God!" And it was indeed encouraging to see that they appreciated true Christian work. The two students who were with me last year have returned. They are faithful, earnest workers, and I enjoy being able to work with them. The school is slowly building up. I had ten in my Bible class last week, and I believe that there are blessings for us if we are faithful.

Last Saturday I went in company with several teachers across the river to a large sugar plantation of some eight hundred acres. The fields of cane look beautiful. They were just cutting it. We saw the sugar house where it is crushed and evaporated. Some of it was in process of preparation, but did not look very tempting until it was purified.

To-day is All-Saints day. It is indeed a holiday for the living. The tombs are cleaned and many bones burned the week previous to the event. The graves are then quite elaborately decorated with floral pieces of all descriptions, vases, pictures, banners, flags and paper contrivances of every sort. Every one seems to be there, and in all the throng I saw only one person who seemed sad. The streets leading to the cemeteries are lined with stands containing pop, cream, soup, candy, cakes, etc. To a stranger it is indeed a strange sight and not one to soon be forgotten.

There are many sights of pleasure and profit here. But many sad ones as well, for wickedness and vice of every kind seems to prevail. I am glad for the few righteous souls, and that the light which is some day to entirely banish the night is slowly spreading throughout this Southland. Very sincerely,

M. LOUISE STODDARD.

PITH AND POINT.

HARD TIMES IN DAKOTA.

I am a warm friend of our Christian Cynosure; I don't want to be without its weekly visits if I can help it. I have taken it for nearly twenty years, but unfortunately I am in drought-stricken Dakota. I have been here six years. Half my crops were struck with hail three years ago, and two years of drought have used me up financially. It makes it hard for me, as I am in my sixty-ninth year. I will renew as soon as I can. I don't want to be without the paper. I would canvass for the Cynosure, but money is so close that it seems impossible to get any. There are thousands of families leaving Dakota this fall. Over twenty families went out of the township where I live.—DAVID OWENS.

This good, old friend will have the Cynosure, thanks to the contributions for that purpose. There are some cases at the North where funds are needed to help subscriptions. But the great need is still at the South. We wish to begin sending to a large number of colored ministers January 1st. Who will help the Southern Fund?

HARD TIMES BUT GOOD COURAGE.

Our crops are almost an entire failure this year. I don't see how I can possibly do without the Cynosure, for I love its principles. When I get the papers read through I give them to my neighbors, or send them off to some one else. Sometimes I will give my neighbors a lecture on the secrecy question, and then we have it up and down for a while, but they cannot deny the truth. The People's party are running before a high gale at present, but I shall stick to the Prohibition party, by the grace of God, as long as it holds to its principles. Your brother in Christ and the old U. B. church of '41. —REV. M. C. PEARSON.

A GOOD WORKER IN OREGON.

As I have been a constant reader of your valuable paper for many years, I am fully satisfied that there is no public journal published in the world, that has laid a better foundation to perpetuate and build up true Christian religion, than the Cynosure. Of all the papers that come to my fireside, none are better read and relished, than the once-denied truths that appear in your noble paper. May the Lord prosper the cause and honor the efforts of the noble band of Christian workers. I have the honor of keeping the only public library that gives a full history of the works of darkness going on in the heathenish lodges, called "Free and Accepted Masons." The lodge has cost me many thousands of dollars, and yet I expect to come off more than well paid for my efforts, in spreading the light that comes through the Christian Cynosure. I will try to make a grand rally for new subscribers. Yours truly for the noble cause of freedom.—F. R. HILL, Wilbur, Oregon.

GOOD WORDS.

I cannot well do without your paper.—J. J. JONES, Friendsville, Tenn.

I will enclose $2.00 this time; may give more hereafter. My heart is in the work.—DAVID HORNING, Penfield, Pa.

I want to lift a little on Bro. Arnold's load, to get it off his shoulders. Please send him the enclosed $1.00; and may the Lord bless his own cause.—J. B. DODDS, Wyman, Iowa.

I most cheerfully pronounce the Christian Cynosure one of the very best and most ably conducted papers in the land, and heartily wish it could go into a million homes. Its style is elevating, its contributions are of general interest, and its different departments are well filled with appropriate articles. Long may it live and rapidly may its circulation increase.—REV. JOEL MARTIN.

LITERATURE.

The Century Magazine celebrates its twentieth anniversary with the November number,—a number which is intended to exemplify the best that an illustrated magazine of our day can do for its innumerable readers. The series on the Gold Hunters, is begun with John Bidwell's paper, fully and curiously illustrated, on "The First Emigrant Train to California." Mr. Bidwell went to California in 1841. He is now one of the most respected citizens of the State, and was the candidate of the Prohibition party this year for governor. Another important series of papers herein begun is Mr. Rockhill's illustrated account of his journey through an unknown part of Tibet,—the strange land of the Lamas. A notable and timely contribution to Dr. Shaw's series on municipal government is his interesting and thorough account of the government of London, with its warning for American municipalities. The first of two articles on the naval fights of the war of 1812 appears in this number. The frontispiece is an engraving of a photograph of Lincoln and his son "Tad," accompanied by an article by Col. John Hay on "Life in the White House in the Time of Lincoln." In the prison series is a paper descriptive of adventures "On the Andersonville Circuit." W. C. Brownell makes note of the work of two original French sculptors, Rodin and Dallou.

General Booth's "In Darkest England" was sold out in three hours. It contains, for one thing, an ingenious colored chart illustrating the social condition of London. In this chart the social structure of London is represented, its foundation stones labeled "drunkenness," "fornication," "theft," "adultery," "uncleanliness," "gambling," "lying," "unbelief," "deceit," "hypocrisy," "pride," "hatred," "murder," "avarice," etc. The pillars are inscribed to "prostitutes," "criminals," "drink," "destitution," "the poor," and "misery." Under the first head runs the legend: "In London there are over 30,000 prostitutes, in Great Britain 100,000, besides an army of probably 100,000 more poor women who secretly increase their earnings by their shame."

St. Nicholas begins its eighteenth year with the November number. The new volume will, it is announced, contain a number of serials by prominent writers for the young. Noah Brooks begins a story, "The Boy Settlers," the scene of which is the Territory of Kansas during the border troubles. The opening chapters are full of wholesome interest, and contain a vivid description of the scenes in early days of Kansas, which Senator Pomeroy some time since described in the Cynosure. John M. Ellicott, an Ensign in the Navy, describes an imaginery fight between "David and Goliath in Modern Warfare," and then explains the chief types of torpedo boats, including our brand-new and solitary representative, the Cushing.

A very clever and scholarly rascal has just died abroad—in Albania—in the person of one Simonides, a forger of Greek and Syrian manuscripts. One of his notable efforts was his submission to a jury of twelve Athenian scholars an alleged manuscript of Homer, written on lotus leaves, and purporting to antedate the Christian era. Just one man of the twelve noted it as irregular in such an antique that it should contain a literal transcription of the typographical errors in Wolff's edition of Homer, of which the forger had made it an all too faithful copy. The jury concluded that the fake was somewhat too previous. Simonides, by the way, is the name of a strong picturesque character in "Ben Hur."

In Vick's Magazine for November, an article on Apple Orchards occupies a prominent place. Weeping Trees about Boston is the subject of an interesting communication, and is profusely illustrated. Training American Grape Vines is treated on by the well-known vineyardist, T. V. Munson of Texas, and explains his method of pruning and training. Winter Fruits and Berries is a timely article by a writer. The Department of Our Young People has an admirable story; an article by Dr. Graff on Bees; besides Poetry. The number is full of interesting things for fruit and plant growers.

OBITUARY.

REV. L. I. CRAWFORD.

Rev. Luke Irwin Crawford was born in Wilkins township, Allegheny Co., Pa., Aug. 3, 1834, to Hugh Donaldson and Matilda (Reed) Crawford. He lived on his father's farm till 16 years old, when he began his studies; and taught school in 1851-4.

His beloved wife died Nov. 15, 1888. He died at his home surrounded by his family and three sisters, Monday, Oct. 27, 1890, after a very long and painful illness from heart disease, aged 56 years, 2 months and 24 days. He leaves a family of two sons, John A., Wm. B., and three daughters, M. Luella, Jennie M. and Anna M., to mourn the loss of a kind, Christian father.

E. Slemmons, of Mercer, also assisted in the services and acted as pall-bearers.

What is Catarrh?

Catarrh is an inflammation of the mucous membranes, and may affect the head, throat, stomach, bowels or bladder. But catarrh of the head is the most common, often coming on so gradually that it has a firm hold before the nature of the trouble is suspected. Catarrh is caused by a cold, or succession of colds, combined with impure blood. Its local symptoms are a sense of fullness and heat in the forehead, dryness in the nose and back part of the throat, and a disagreeable discharge from the nose. When the disease gains a firm hold on the system, it becomes chronic, and is then exceedingly dangerous and treacherous, liable to develop into consumption.

Fortunate is it that we have in Hood's Sarsaparilla the remedy for this ever increasing malady. It attacks at once the source of the disease by purifyimg and enriching the blood, which in passing through the delicate passages of the mucous membrane soothes and rebuilds the tissues, giving them tendency to health instead of disease, and ultimately curing the affection. At the same time Hood's Sarsaparilla builds up the whole system and makes one feel that he has taken a new lease of life.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1890.

THE PURDUE UNIVERSITY case is a practical demonstration of the college secret society character which no amount of friendly apology can explain away. We give it in this number and the next, largely from the official report of President E. E. White to the Governor of Indiana. Let it be read with the interest its importance demands.

The portrait of LEONARD BACON suggests the long and useful career of the leading theologian of the Congregational church during the present century. He was one of the founders, and for years was an editor of the Independent of New York. But he also filled a notable place as an American educator. During the last twelve years of his life he was professor in the Yale Theological Seminary at New Haven and was as eminent as an instructor as he had formerly been as pastor and editor.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

This society was the child of reform. It has just held a very successful anniversary at Northampton, Mass. Its history is remarkable. It was formed by Lewis Tappan and a handful of Abolitionists to begin the Mendi Mission in Africa. This was fifty years ago. A cargo of slaves was brought from the Mendi country in the slave ship Amistad, by two Spanish pirates, Montez and Ruiz. Under their leader Cinqui, they rose on their captors and killed all but the two Spaniards, whom they spared on their promise to take them back to Africa. But they brought them off the coast of Connecticut, and they were freed by our courts. Educated by the efforts of Lewis Tappan, they were sent back to the Mendi country as missionaries by the money of Abolitionists.

This Association last year received $408,000. It supports six chartered schools or colleges; 20 Normal, and 53 common schools, with 13,395 pupils, in the South. It has also 128 churches, 107 missionaries and 7,978 church-members among Negroes and mountain whites; besides missions among Chinese and Indians.

To one who, like the writer, attended the first small meetings of this Association, its growth to its present dimensions seems miraculous. And still, it is a small force among the ten millions among whom it is laboring to enlighten and elevate. But other denominations are engaged in the same work for the bottom races.

This Association has, by its executive committee, admitted the agents of the N. C. A. to speak against secret lodges in its schools and churches, and in its monthly organ, the American Missionary, has repeatedly spoken against the lodge. In this respect it is in advance of all other missionating bodies. But the lodges, like night vampires, are still sucking the life-blood out of many of its churches, and nothing but a rule of disfellowship firmly administered will save them.

GLADSTONE AND BIBLE COSMOGONY.

Of late scientists have renewed attacks on the first books of the Bible by "oppositions of science falsely so called," 1 Tim. 6: 20. It is a cheap way to gain notoriety. One past graduate of Yale, in a small book, begins by refuting fourteen theories of the origin of the book of Genesis, and then dogmatizes his own, as if he had stood by and seen the worlds created. The object of Satan in using these scientists is to deprive the Pentateuch of the authority of inspiration, and the Decalogue of the authority of law. For if Moses was not inspired to write the Pentateuch, but it was a picked-up patchwork by later writers, the story of Sinai, and that God there gave the Ten Commandments, by angels, Gal. 3: 19, all becomes myth. So these scientists are simply denying the declaration that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God," 2 Tim. 3: 16.

Mr. Gladstone has lately met these theorists in his usually masterful manner. We think even he concedes too much to the pretentious scientists by the phrases, "the creation story," and "the flood story." For near 1900 years the Bible has been taken by the Christian nations as a revelation from God, as it everywhere affirms itself to be: and the swearing in of an American President by oath upon the Bible is our national testimony to the inspiration of the book. England and the United States are avowedly based on that book as inspired by God. And if the Darwins and Huxleys were a thousand times more numerous than they are, the objectors would still be a lean and contemptible minority of disorganizers and anarchists. Put the question to the vast crowds who face the Capitol and throng Pennsylvania avenue when Garfield is sworn upon his mother's Bible, and how many of that vast assembled multitude would vote to have the Bible omitted from the solemnity as the inspired word of God?

But though Mr. Gladstone concedes too much to these objectors in seeming to descend to their own level in using their phraseology, his stately argument is triumphant and annihilating. He puts scientists against scientists, and history and discovery against their inferences and pretensions. He has grouped together the testimony of the "cuneiform inscriptions," from the works of Schrader, and the Babylonian creation story given by Mr. Smith in his "Assyrian Discoveries," and finds, "(1) creation by the gods, (2) chaos, (3) life and order, (4) life extended to beasts and reptiles, (5) domestic animals, thus giving a real though rude and imperfect resemblance to the Hebrew narrative."

These inscriptions, though imperfect, human and traditional, blow to the winds the doctrines of modern science that the world was developed, not created by divine power. An outline of these creations from chaos on, is given by these inscriptions; and, though imperfect and shadowy compared with the solemn, stately order of the inspired narrative in Genesis, Mr. Gladstone considers these inscriptions antedating all development theories,—"a new witness come into court," who proves, if not the material facts, yet confirms the testimony of Moses and the Prophets, who are the true witnesses of God, as they solemnly claim to be.

"The flood story" is treated in like manner. He gives the Babylonian narrative thus: "Hassidra was divinely warned to construct a ship and commit to it 'the seed of life, all of it,' as 'the sinner and his life were about to be destroyed by a flood.' Food, furniture, wealth, servants and animals were all to be embarked. . . . The vessel is arrested by the mountain of Nizir. A dove is sent forth and returns. A swallow is sent and does the like. A raven goes, feeds on corpses that are afloat, and returns not." Ninip and Hea suggest to Bel that there should be a flood no more to punish men. And "then Hassidra dwelt in a remote place by the mouth of the rivers."

These Babylonish inscriptions were obviously derived from the narrative in Genesis. Mr. Huxley treats both with scientific hauteur and contempt. He says, "It is difficult to persuade serious scientific inquirers to occupy themselves in any way with the Noachian Deluge."

Against this cool assumption Mr. Gladstone places Sir J. Dawson, Mr. Howarth, and the Duke of Argyll, all of whom "maintain the doctrine of the Deluge," and observes that these and other writers "are surely to be considered as serious scientific inquirers." He further quotes Lenormant's Origins of History, pp. 480–90, who, after quoting a copious collection of testimonies to the erudition of a general Deluge, observes:

"The long review which we have given warrants our affirming that the tale of the Deluge is a universal tradition among all the branches of the human family except the blacks. But a remembrance prevailing everywhere, so precise and so concordant, cannot be that of a myth arbitrarily invented." "No religious or cosmogonic myth presents such a character of universality. It must of necessity be a recollection of a great and terrible occurrence, which impressed the imagination of the ancestors of our race so powerfully as never to have been forgotten by their descendants."

We have said nothing of the authority of Mr. Gladstone himself, though it would take an hundred Huxleys to make one Gladstone.

After all, no human writing can for a moment compare with the Bible. The sublimity of the opening sentence, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth," soars above and beyond all human composition. And, though read from childhood to old age, the book of Genesis never tires by familiarity, but grows fresh by repetition; and, like the words of a loving father or mother, or the words of the angelic host spoken from the skies when Christ was born in Bethlehem, carries the proof of its truth with it both to the understanding and to the heart.

DR. NATHAN BROWN.

This eminent man, missionary, and reformer, was born in 1807, in Whitingham, Vermont, amid

> Hills of unfading green whose summits proud
> Whisper the things of earth unto the sky.

The masons' trades-union had been turned into an idolatrous religion, initiating all who would submit to their vile ceremonies, and who could pay the dues, in 1717, at Apple-tree Tavern, London, just ten years short of a century before. It had deceived, in many instances, the very elect.

Dr. Brown was 19 when Masons murdered Morgan, and three-fourths of all the Masonic lodges in the United States went down, and Vermont voted solid for the destruction of the lodges, which were all thrown open to public inspection, their vile sham secrets exposed, and laws enacted which are still in force, fining a Masonic or Odd-fellows oath or obligation $200! Dr. Brown's Vermont Telegraph helped enact those laws, in 1833, though he had gone to Burmah a year or two before. The writer, though born east of the Green Mountains, well remembers Mr. Brown's paper. Educated under Mark Hopkins at Williams College, he was cool, capable, and accurate; and one of the most conscientious of men; and writing among the freest-minded people on earth, we give several extracts from his writings, below. We beg, rather implore, our mission boards and ministers to consider these plain propositions; and cease to pother and pretend to doubt what their duty is concerning these dark lodges.

The following are extracts taken from his address, June 11, 1870, before our N. C. A. at Cincinnati, O.:

"The Gospel is at war with every system, clique, clan, caste or combination, which seeks to create distinctions in the human family."

"The spirit that binds men in secret oath-bound clans, is an anachronism. It belongs to the dark ages; it belongs to heathenism. It is no child of Christ, his Gospel or his church, and should forever be banished from among his saints."

"But it is said that we are fanatics, who expect to uproot this venerable institution; that it is spreading in the country, the church, and the government, with a strength that nothing can resist; that it is becoming the commanding influence in all our movements for reform; giving its 'grand' titles and methods of procedure to all our temperance societies, which, in turn, become feeders for the mother organization."

"Fifteen years ago, Mr. President, I came to this city, (Cincinnati) a sick, worn-out missionary, to find a warm shelter from the cold New England winter. I heard there was a good man here (Levi Coffin) who kept an underground railroad, and I made my way to his house. He and his excellent wife nursed and told me stories of the fugitives he was helping from bondage to freedom. The general opinion was that Friend Coffin was doing a small business,—engaged in an attempt to do what there was no hope of accomplishing."

"But, I am here again to-day, obedient to His call and that of others, and what do I see? I look across into Kentucky, and there are no slaves there! Those little, trickling rills of pity on the cheeks of Friends and other Christians, have swelled to a torrent, whose wave rolls freedom from Niagara to the gulf! Mr. President, there is nothing impossible, if only it is right!"

"From the religion of Masonry, the distinctive features of Christianity are shut out. There remains only what infidels call the religion of nature, and nothing more. The distinctive features of the Gospel are stigmatized, as 'sectarianism,' false piety; an 'imaginary worship.' The skepticism which prevails among the upper classes, in our country and England, is in perfect harmony with the teachings of Masonry."

These words of Dr. Brown were spoken, printed, and circulated twenty years ago. No one has attempted to reply to or refute them. The American Baptist Missionary Union, of which Dr. Northup of Morgan Park Theological Seminary is president, with unanimous enthusiasm sent him to found missions in Japan, two years after he spoke and published the above words; and this attested their truth! And yet our mission boards to this day send out missionaries who practice what Dr.

Brown with sun-light clearness shows to be "heathenism," "caste" and "infidelity." Paul declares that heathen or Gentile worship is paid to devils; and he commanded the churches which he founded to have no fellowship with the Eleusinian mysteries, which all the lodge authorities declare were Masonic.

Now we respectfully submit to the secretaries of our mission boards, that unless this mingling of Satan's worships with Christian ceases; unless the mission boards "take forth the precious from the vile," in the words of Dr. Lyman Beecher to the American Board in 1848, "the churches will wheel off from you by platoons!"

The worshipers of Diana are not and will not be worshipers of Christ. And a mission board which practices a silent neutrality between these two opposites occupies precisely the ground of the respectable Jews who attempted neutrality between Christ and his crucifiers, who held to salvation by descent from Abraham, and observance of human traditions.

We are sorry to learn through our Washington agent, Mr. W. B. Stoddard, that a late editorial has grieved Bro. Edwin Sellew of Philadelphia. Mr. Sellew is a Friend, who, it seems, has suffered for refusing, as Friends do, to take a judicial oath. In the editorial in question we spoke of infidels and atheists who object to our Presidents being sworn into office on the Bible, as "disorganizers." We never heard of a Friend Quaker objecting to that form of inauguration of our chief magistrate, and of course had no thought of the Friends, when writing that editorial, and should have used a different phraseology had they been in our minds at the time. Lord Starr in his "Institutes of the Laws of Scotland," observes, "Though Quakers refuse to give a formal oath, yet if they do that which is materially the same, it is materially an oath." Geo. Fox preached with great power in Scotland and there were many Quakers there.

And the United States have made the same provision. Thus in New York: "If any person shall declare that he has conscientious scruples against taking any oath, or swearing in any form, he shall be permitted to make his solemn declaration or affirmation."

There is no class of American citizens whose word is more relied on, in court or out, than the word or affirmation of Quakers. And they, in some points, as a people, have excelled other Christian denominations in what goes to sustain public order and Christian civilization.

MR. PORTER'S DEFENSE of college secret societies to which we have given considerable space in our last issues should be noticed respecting some erroneous statements. A reply to the general argument we prefer to leave to the final summing up of the whole case with which we hope to conclude the discussion by the last of December. It will be seen that he classes with the secret societies all those college organizations in which the co-operative, fraternal spirit is maintained whether they are secret societies or not. This is confusing, for it enables him to quote some honorable names who were identified with the anti-secret Delta Upsilon, and others who are opposed to secret societies, in the same line with secret society men. He also mentions a difficulty in the University of California in which the college societies were defended by the press of the State. This is quite natural since the California secular press is very generally controlled by the lodge, and it is notorious that an attack, real or supposed, on one secret society is resented by the whole brood. The same was the case in Indiana, when President E. E. White of Purdue University expelled the college societies. Mr. Porter is so erroneous in his statement of this case that a suspicion is cast over his whole article. President White was sustained by his faculty, his trustees, and the courts from first to last. It was not until the Freemasons in the Legislature attempted in their usual manner, in harmony with their nefarious lodge ethics, to force the secret societies into Purdue University by starving out the faculty, by cutting off the State appropriation, that President White resigned. The history of this action forms one of the most disgraceful pages on the records of Indiana. Mr. Porter's assertions respecting the "persecutions," the ability, the honorable character of these societies, are terms that are rather local than general. There are numerous witnesses of equal credibility whose testimony is of a directly opposite character.

—The Woman's Union for the Bible in Schools has secured able addresses on this important movement by Rev. Robert McIntyre in the Grace M. E. church, and by Hon. C. C. Bonney, Mary Allen West and Prof. Curtis in the First Congregational church. The movement is gaining in power with good men daily.

—The New England agent was last week attending the convention of Christian Workers, meeting in Hartford. He was announced to speak Saturday and Sabbath at Canterbury, N. H. At a parlor meeting in Boston Monday evening he explained the first Masonic degree. Another meeting is to be held in the same place, No. 218, Columbus Ave., in two weeks.

—At the New England office Bro. Stoddard has issued another tract containing the Masonic and Jesuit oaths side by side. This is a good tract for Boston, where the opponents of Romanism can see how beautiful their pet Masonic lodge looks in the contrast with its bloody and hideous oaths. A large number were lately distributed at the meeting of the New England Evangelical Alliance.

—We lately received a letter from a member of the senior class of the Theological Seminary connected with Knox College, Toronto, who was appointed to debate the question of secret societies. As the young gentleman was by conviction opposed to the orders, he felt that the call to speak was from God. He sent to the Cynosure office for documents, and a report of the debate is promised for our columns.

—One college president sends for twenty-five copies of a recent issue of the Cynosure containing an important article on the college secret societies for distribution among his friends. The paper is now read in over one hundred and twenty-five of our leading American colleges and exchanges with a number of college papers whose editors are noticing favorably the discussion of the college fraternities.

—The old Park Church, Boston, whose lecture room is engaged for the New England meeting, Dec. 16 next, has for its pastor Rev. Dr. David Gregg, who was called to Boston while preaching for one of the Covenanter churches of New York. Dr. Withrow, now of the Third Presbyterian church, Chicago, preceded him; and when the first convention was held in Worcester in 1871, W. H. H. Murray was drawing crowds to the old church.

—The United Presbyterian, our valued Pittsburgh exchange, has the honor of being defendant in a $50,000 libel suit. It is brought by a saloonkeeper of that city whose vile business, more vilely carried on than is the rule, was the subject of an honest criticism a short time since. If all our papers were outspoken enemies of baseness and crime, they would be in little danger of libel suits; because the authors of villainy would not venture into such publicity.

—The program of the annual convention of the Illinois Sabbath Association, meeting in the First Methodist church in this city, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, includes addresses from Rev. Galusha Anderson, Hon. C. C. Bonney, Dr. E. P. Goodwin, Pres. S. F. Scovel, Drs. Henson and Herrick Johnson, Pres. Roberts and others. Pres. Scovel of Wooster University, Ohio, addressed a large audience in Farwell Hall last Sabbath afternoon, on the Sabbath question.

—The article by Mr. Ronayne is the first he has for a long time written on the lodge. It will be read with undoubted interest, and old friends of the ex-Past Master of Keystone Lodge will be pleased to note that his fervent pen has lost none of its earnest vehemence against the crushing iniquity of the lodge. The proposition he maintains is a striking one, but we do not concede that the argument is all in its favor. However, without at present arguing this point, we shall print next week, God willing, a remarkable testimony to the fact of the enormity of Masonic oaths, from the writings of Mr. John Fellows, A. M., an English Masonic writer of some eminence. Mr. Ronayne's suggestion is a leading one. It will stir the thoughts of many of our readers. Let them write.

—Rev. Wm. W. Downs, of Boston, whose tribulations as pastor of the Bowdoin Square Baptist church a few years since will be remembered, has begun the publication of a paper, Downs' Weekly, which is advertised as a fearless, independent and progressive paper, "the firm friend of every good cause" and the "implacable foe of every bad cause;" of the perjurer, conspirator, etc. We have reason to know that much of Mr. Downs' former trials was the result of Masonic plotting. He was a Mason himself, but not well versed in the arts of the lodge. He made some discoveries at that time of which we sincerely hope he will now give his readers the benefit. For a paper maintained faithfully on the basis given us in the prospectus there is always room, and to such a paper we give a God speed.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—The late revered George B. Cheever, whose death at Englewood, N. J., was lately noticed, gave by his will to the American Board, $14,000; to the American Home Missionary Society, $3,000; to the American Missionary Association, $2,000; to the Seamen's Friend Association, $2,000; and to the Home for Friendless Boys, $1,000.

—Rev. L. G. Jordan, our colored Prohibition hero, passed through Chicago last week on his way from Pennsylvania to Askansas. He expected to meet the Baptist convention in session at Forest City in that State on Saturday, and address them respecting the relation of Christianity to the lodge. He does not intend remaining in the State long.

—Rev. Dr. T. H. Hanna of the First United Presbyterian church, Monmouth, was the representative of his General Assembly to the Associate Reformed Synod of the South, lately meeting at Knoxville, Tenn. His fraternal address was so able, eloquent, and full of the spirit of Christian brotherhood that the organ of the Synod prints it entire with hearty recommendation.

—Mrs. Eliza Harrison, widow of the late Henry Harrison, died suddenly in the Seventh Avenue U. P. Church, New York, during the communion services on the last Sabbath of October. She had been a partial paralytic for some time. Many of our N. C. A. friends will remember these excellent people, whose abundant hospitality opened their doors with the heartiest welcome to our workers who might be tarrying in New York.

—Rev. S. F. Porter, the N. C. A. College Agent, returned to this city from his summer work in North Dakota last week Monday. He is in good health and readily prepared for a third journey to the Southern Colleges. He starts this week for Kentucky. This brother, though of an age when most men would prefer to retire from active life, is of the old stock that never tires or rusts out. He is, for his circumstances, one of the most liberal friends of the National Association. He not only gives his time and expenses to the cause, but some $200 per year beside. He requests that nothing be said about this, but it is due to our friends that they should be encouraged by so good an example.

NEW ENGLAND NOTICE.

It has been decided to hold the next anuual meeting of the New England Christian Association Dec. 16 and 17 next, in the lower chapel of Park Street Congregationalist church, Boston. The official call by the president and secretary will appear soon. Meantime let every friend note the time, and prepare to attend and make this the largest, as it will be the most important, meeting held in New England in direct opposition to the Jesuit, the Endowment-house and the Masonic cabals, and the whole principle and system of Secret Lodges, and for Christ and his kingdom along the entire line of religious conflict.

Send in your names early for enrollment or for documents or information; and we will do our best to reduce expenses and make your burden light and your blessing great.

IOWA CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, is hereby called to meet in the Free Methodist church at Fairfield, Iowa, Tuesday, Dec. 2, at 2 P. M., to continue its sessions through the following day. Efforts will be made to secure some of the ablest speakers on the subject to address the convention. The committee hope to furnish free entertainment to all delegates. All churches and associations opposed to secret societies are urged to send delegates to this meeting.

THE HOME.

RETURN, O MY SOUL.

Cease, my soul, thy strayings!
  Have they brought thee peace?
Come, no more delayings,
  Cease thy wanderings, cease.
Thou hast found thy centre;
  There, my soul, abide;
Never more adventure
  Now to swerve aside.

Thou hast reached thy dwelling;
  Safe, sure anchorage
From the perilous swelling
  Of the tempest's rage.
Tranquil hours now greet thee,
  In thy calm abode;
Gracious looks now meet thee,
  From thy loving God.

See yon star, love-lighted,
  Sparkles from on high;
See yon hope, love-plighted,
  Cheers thy heaviest sky.
Watch, my soul, the glory
  Coming brightly up,
O'er yon forest hoary,
  O'er yon mountain-top.

'Tis the bridal morning;
  Rise, make no delay;
Put on thine adorning,
  Cast thy weeds away.
Pierce these mists that blind thee,
  Press to yonder prize,
Break the bonds that bind thee,
  Rise, my soul, arise!

—Horatius Bonar.

THE FESTIVAL HERESY.

The season of the year when amusements flourish is on us, and the people of God will be more or less drawn into the vortex of worldly pleasure. We have commended the little book on "Fun and Finance," by Rev. Newton Wray of Lenox, Mass., to the reading of all Christian people at this time; and below quote from the excellent introduction written by Dr. Gordon of Boston. The careful reader will mark how this eminent and pious pastor condemns the general principles which underlie the "Christmas" festivities, as well as the oyster supper and church fair. May his words of exhortation and wisdom be carefully pondered:

The nineteenth century is repeating the folly of the fourth century in its prodigious effort to win the world by conforming to the world. How a paganized Christianity came into the place of the pure, primitive Christianity which we find in the New Testament, one readily learns by a careful study of church history. The great Augustine writes that: "When peace was made [that is, between the church and the Roman emperors], the crowd of Gentiles who were anxious to embrace Christianity was deterred by this, that whereas they had been accustomed to pass the holidays in drunkenness and feasting before their idols, they could not easily consent to forego these most pernicious yet ancient pleasures. It seemed good then to our leaders to favor this part of their weakness, and for those festivals which they relinquished, to substitute others in honor of the holy martyrs, which they might celebrate with similar luxury, though not with the same impiety."

Here is the pernicious principle, and we know what came of it: how this little leaven of worldly conformity leavened the whole lump, till, instead of a Christianity warring with heathenism, there was a Christianity utterly heathenized by pagan rites and ceremonies.

It was in the time of peace that this process began. The martyr ages of the church have been ages of purity and godly simplicity. When, on the contrary, Christianity gets upon good terms with the world, the time of peril sets in. Such is the era in which we live. There is no persecution now, no obloquy attaching to the profession of Christ, no offence of the cross as ordinarily borne; hence the mingling of the church and the world. Fairs and festivals and feasts, amusements and amateur theatricals, and all kinds of literary and social entertainments have come in as did the heathen festivals in the beginning. When we see whereto all this is tending—the disgraceful secularizing and demoralizing of the church of Christ—it is time for somebody to call a halt.

SHOULD THE CHURCH FURNISH AMUSEMENT?

There is a great demand for something attractive in connection with the church and Sunday-school. The music must be charming, the preaching entertaining, and the exercises of the Sunday-school such as will draw and please the children. Men are not so unwise as to insist on such qualities in connection with other institutions established for the improvement and progress of society. Do parents send their children to school to be amused? Do they require factories to furnish attractive entertainments for young people before they will send their sons to learn a trade? Children go to school to learn, not to be amused. Young men enter a factory or a store to learn business and to work, not to be entertained. The remuneration and the prospect of promotion furnish sufficient attraction. The sooner parents learn that the Sunday-school and church are not places of entertainment, the better. The less ministers and teachers pander to the thirst for amusement, the better. They are called to teach, not to amuse. Let all men know that they may expect religious instruction and comfort and help in the house of God, and this will draw.—Christian Advocate.

CHURCH ENTERTAINMENTS.—Says the Nashville Christian Advocate: The Northern papers are waking up to the danger of church entertainments. They have allowed the evil to grow to gigantic proportions before they saw the danger. The New York Observer, timidly conservative as it is, says: "When the church fairs and church festivities come in at the front door, spirituality passes out at the rear portal. We believe that in a multitude of cases a church were better blotted out than kept alive by recourse to such unhallowed schemes. In the name of religion all manner of evil schemes have been promoted; so much so, that the dividing line between the world and the church has become almost invisible. Faith and courage will be needed to shake off the old habits of money-raising, and to return to David's methods and apostolic rules, and Macedonian customs, but the truest interests of the church demand such a return. Our churches need to be purged of every evil thing, and then shall our sanctuaries be the abode of our God, whose glory shall fill the house of the Lord and the hearts of his saints."

NOAH WEBSTER.

There was nothing very wonderful in the circumstances of Noah Webster when a boy, nor in his early life. He was the son of a farmer, was well educated, being ready to enter Yale at the age of sixteen. In his junior year he was interrupted by the excitement of the Revolution, and joined his father, who was already serving in the war. A few years later, however, he finished his course.

When he had been graduated, and had reached home after commencement, his father presented him with a small sum of money, about equal in value to four dollars, and told him that for the future he must take care of himself.

In those days the most common means of gaining a living by young men of fair education were school-teaching and the practice of law. Webster chose the first of these, while he should prepare himself for the second. In the moments of time he could snatch after his school duties were done, he studied alone, until a few years later he was admitted to the bar. Had he been idle, careless of time, or fond of self indulgence, this end would never have been reached.

While teaching, he also prepared several school-books—a reader, a grammar, and also a spelling-book which became very famous.

This spelling-book was bountifully illustrated by rude wood-cuts. These must have greatly charmed the boys and girls who read of "The Country Maid and her Milk Pail," and "The Boy who Stole Apples," and many a lad felt that the story grew too personal when he saw the account of the boy who went to the woods to look for birds' nests when he should have been at school.

This spelling-book reached such an immense sale that it alone supported his family during the many years in which he was engaged on his dictionary.

We cannot follow him through his long life, but in his seventy-ninth year he wrote a letter which gives us glimpses of his life and habits. Of these he says: "I have never been a hard student, unless a few years may be excepted, but I have been a steady, persevering student." It is not the sudden strokes of labor which come in fits and starts, it is not this which accomplishes great things, but the slow, steady work, day after day.

He tells us that he was in the habit of rising half an hour before the sun, and making use of all the daylight, so that he rarely used lamp-light at all. Apart from saving his eyes, this must have been a great means of preserving his health. With daylight his work ended, and his body and mind were alike ready for rest.

Again he says, "I was never, or rarely, in a hurry." Girls and boys, mark this well!—you who are hunting up hats and books, and hurrying to school at the last minute, leaving everything behind you in confusion. Is anything gained by it? Does it bring any ease or comfort to yourselves? Surely not. And the worst of it is that the habit of leaving everything to the last, and then rushing through in a hurry, will gain such a firm hold on you, as the years go by, that it will vex and worry half the sweetness out of your lives. Let us read and remember the words of Noah Webster, "I was never, or rarely, in a hurry."

Again he tells us how, in Amherst, he cultivated a little land, made hay, and worked in his garden. And until late in life, he was in the habit of rising in the morning and making his fires through the house. Such exercise as he gained by these simple duties must have been a great gain to him in health and strength as he advanced in years. Such was his simple life while he performed a work which has made him famous.

At the ripe age of eighty-four, Noah Webster's life closed, blessed by the peace and comfort of the Christian hope. Let us remember the life and lessons of this great man as we open so frequently the book which cost him such patient toil. —Young Folks' Friend.

HOW SHE MADE HIM DO IT.

Harry was standing in the road, on the way home from school. There had been a heavy shower an hour before, and there was a large puddle in the road. He had a switch, and was switching the water from side to side.

Nettie came along and looked very crossly at Harry.

"You stop that!" she said.

Harry did not like the way she spoke, nor the look on her face.

"Say 'please,' and I will," he said.

"I'm not going to say 'please.'"

"Then I shall do it as long as I like."

"I can't get by till you stop."

"Yes you can. I am not hindering you."

"You are. I shall get all splashed."

"Then stay where you are. You can't make me stop."

Now the truth was, that Harry did not care a bit about switching the water any longer. If Nettie had spoken pleasantly he would have stopped at once. But now he felt as if he would stay there all day just to spite her.

"I shall tell your mother, you mean boy, if you don't stop," went on Nettie.

Harry laughed louder as Nettie tried to run by. He gave a harder switch and laughed more loudly than ever as he saw Nettie's white apron spotted with mud. She scowled back at him as she went on.

Nettie had just turned a corner when Ruthie came up. Harry looked at her a little sourly, for he did not feel half so pleasantly as he had before Nettie came.

Do you wonder why? Was it because Nettie had been cross? Partly so; for no one can speak or look cross without leaving a shadow behind. But Harry felt he had been wrong, too, and that is worse than to suffer wrong from others.

"Stop a minute, and let me get by, Harry," said Ruthie.

"I don't have to stop," growled Harry.

"But I can't get home till you let me pass."

"I don't care. You can't make me stop."

"O yes I can," said Ruthie with a laugh.

"I should like to see you try," said Harry, holding his switch tighter than before, while he looked at Ruthie. "You're as big as I am, but who cares for that!"

"I can, though," said Ruthie.

How do you think she did it?

She came nearer, still smiling, and said:

"Harry, please let me pass. You wouldn't be ugly to me, I know."

He gave a little laugh as he stood back to let her pass, saying:

"Well, if that's the way you're going to make me, I guess I'll have to give up."

Try it, little children. You have all seen how one angry word or look will bring another, and how little good they do, and how much harm. Try how much power there is in a gentle word.—Our Little Ones.

TWO WAYS.

Oh, how does the rain come down?
With a rattle and riot and rush!
With flutter and sputter,
And gurgle and mutter,
And clatter and spatter and gush!
With a mad outbursting and roaring,
With fizzing and splashing and pouring!
And noise to deafen a town,
The turbulent rain comes down!
But after 'tis over an hour or more,
The world looks much as it did before;
And there's nothing to show for the fuss and roar
The rain made coming down.

But how does the snow come down?
With a touch like a soft wing's brush!
With glancing and gliding,
With stealing and sliding,
With whiteness and lightness and hush!
With airy floating and swimming,
With fairy boating and skimming!
And no one in all the town
Would know when the snow comes down
If he looked not out on the changed white day,
And the cushioned earth that seems to say,
How much can be done in a quiet way,
The way the snow comes down.

JUST A HINT TO BOYS.

I stood in a store, the other day, when a boy came in and applied for a situation.

"Can you write a good hand?" was asked.

"Yaas."

"Good at figures?"

"Yaas."

"Know the city well?"

"Yaas."

"That will do—I don't want you," said the merchant.

"But," I said when the boy had gone, "I know that lad to be an honest, industrious boy. Why don't you give him a chance?"

"Because he hasn't learned to say 'Yes, sir,' and 'No, sir.' If he answers me as he did when applying for a situation, how will he answer customers after being here a month?"

What could I say to that? He had fallen into a bad habit, young as he was, which turned him away from the first situation he had applied for. —M. Quad in Free Press.

A PARROT THAT SPOKE MANY LANGUAGES.

A parrot of much cultivation died a few days ago of old age at the home in Plainfield, N. J., of George Lissignolo. The bird was brought from Brazil, and was presented to Mr. Lissignolo fifteen years ago. At that time the knowing creature discoursed in Spanish, Portuguese and English. Afterwards it became proficient in the French and German languages. With a knowledge of so many languages the bird seemed to know in which one to speak respectfully and in which to do otherwise. In Spanish and Portuguese Polly's oaths were not objected to, and she seemed to know this. In English her strongest "swear words" were "shut up." A rainstorm seemed to be the parrot's chief delight. Once outside on the lawn with a drenching fall of rain upon her head, she would run through her vocabulary with lightning-like rapidity, generally beginning with a loud laugh so human in sound that no stranger ever doubted, till he had seen the bird, that it came from a human throat. The enunciation of the children's names was wonderfully clear, and many times were the little ones called from play by the parrot's close imitation of the mother's voice. In the presence of visitors Polly was generally sedate, seldom suffering any familiarities. Should the caller become at all boisterous, however, the parrot would probably quiet him by closely imitating his laugh and then groaning in anguish, the while exclaiming: "Poor, poor Polly!" as if, indeed, the presence of such a mortal was one of the saddest things imaginable!

TEMPERANCE.

"ONE HUNDRED MEN WANTED."

This inscription appears over the door of one of the lowest class saloons in this city, and those who see it, no doubt think that it is something out of the ordinary. Well, perhaps it is, but it is nothing more or less than can be seen around every saloon, but it may, perhaps, be a little plainer than usual to the eyes of the public. The requisition they make is small as compared with those of a higher caste.

What is wanted of these men? If we were to go inside of some of these gilded palaces, we, perhaps, would see a number of men standing around, ready to make their application—for what? For higher morals? To be taught the truths of the Bible? To learn of the Saviour of men? No; but to be taught the way to a drunkard's grave; the way to crime; the way to shame and dishonor.

A Christian seeing these sign-boards pointing direct to hell, cannot but shudder at the thought that so many true men are led into this machine which divests him of every grain of manliness, every spark of ambition; robs him of friends, and finally grinds out either a pauper or a criminal.

Christians, here is a work for you. Sins of omission are just as punishable as sins of commission; and if we stand idle with our arms folded and our hearts hardened, while our brothers are so rapidly and in such multitudes answering this call for men, without an effort on our part to change their course, we will be accountable to God for our neglect. Our hands and arms are given to us for a purpose nobler than that of lying idle; we are endowed with a knowledge of right and wrong; we are given a heart that should not be ashamed of Christ and his cause; we are given a right to vote, and we are given the privilege of voting as we think. Therefore, let us pray right, let us work right, and we will then vote right. W. S. O.

THOSE GOOD CITIZENS—THE LIQUOR SELLERS.

The Illinois Liquor Dealers' Association held its annual meeting at Joliet, Sept. 23d and 24th. The resolutions "were adopted with applause," and are sufficient, it seems to us, to induce every parent and every true patriot to vow eternal enmity to the liquor traffic, in whatever form. They "reaffirm those principles which are dear to the heart of every true American citizen"—meaning, we suppose, the "principle" of defying the law, as they do in Dubuque, and every other city in the land; of corrupting courts and debauching youths. They declare that the liquor-dealers are "engaged in a legitimate business, recognized by the constitutions of the State and the United States, paying an enormous revenue to the national and a large license to the local governments, providing employment for a great number of people," and therefore claim it is their "right to demand of our Legislators a proper protection of our rights as business men and citizens, instead of permitting themselves to be misled by fanatics, who never had at heart the best interests of our government, and who contribute little or nothing to its sustenance and support."

And they make that "demand" for "protection of our rights" in these very resolutions. What "right" think you, has been invaded by "our Legislators" so sadly "misled by fanatics?" The following resolution will answer that question:

> We declare that the so-called "Dramshop act," as now interpreted by our judiciary, is a stain upon the fair name and an insult to the intelligence of the people of the State of Illinois, making, as it does, a person commit an offense against the law when they have no intent to do so, and no knowledge that the party whom they sold is a minor, or a person in the habit of becoming intoxicated, and that the public sentiment of the community should demand an amendment of said act, making guilty only those persons who knowingly violated it.

So it is the "right" to corrupt minors in spite of the protest of parents, and to sell to drunken husbands in spite of the protest of wives, that these self-sacrificing patriots are "demanding." We have been thinking that it was necessary for the saloon to make full revelation of itself, of its utterly wicked, hypocritical and ruinous character, before the right-loving, temperance people could be roused and rallied to crush it out. Such "resolutions" as these are well calculated to hasten on the time. We are always ready to help to spread abroad such declarations of the liquor-dealers.—Christian Standard.

A FEARFUL BUSINESS.

Buchanan county, Iowa, enforced the prohibitory law, and had no saloons. But an "original package" store was opened under the decision of the Supreme Court, and was in operation during the continuance of the horse races at Independence, the county seat. The result is described in the Chicago Times, under the heading, "A Bonanza in Beer:"

"In the second story of a building on Main street the joint is located. The room is fully one hundred and fifty feet square, and each day of the races it was crowded. At the bar the bottles were purchased. 'You will find corkscrews and glasses in the back part of the room,' said the over-worked bartender. The men with bottles elbowed their way to the rear, where the tables were surrounded with bibulous hundreds. On each table were two corkscrews securely fastened with chains, while glasses were being rapidly filled and drunk. To the side were tubs of water in which to rinse the glasses. The supply of corkscrews fell short of the demand, and many a thirsty pilgrim wandered from table to table begging a crooked piece of hardware with which he could extract the stubborn cork and satisfy his cravings. It was a hard-looking crowd, the floor covered with beer, and the room filled with dozens who were loaded to the muzzle. Never were such disgusting scenes witnessed in the lowest dive of an open saloon on the face of the earth. The proprietor of the joint in twenty-four hours sold three car loads of bottled beer. A car contains three hundred cases, or seven thousand two hundred bottles, and three carloads comprise twenty-one thousand six hundred bottles. At twenty-five cents a bottle, his gross revenue was five thousand four hundred dollars. The beer cost him one thousand seven hundred and twenty-eight dollars, leaving three thousand six hundred and seventy-two dollars as the net profit for the business of twenty-hours, or one day. The races continued for five days, and at that rate he cleared eighteen thousand dollars on beer alone, not counting his profits on cigars and bottles of whisky sold."

At the funeral service of Gen. Clinton B. Fisk in Madison Ave. Methodist church on Friday, July 11th, several ministers occupied the pulpit, two of whom spoke at length and with much pathos of the many virtues of the deceased both in public and private life. His boyhood, his charity, his business capacity, his religious experience, his military career, his sympathy for the colored race, his labors for the Indians, were all dwelt upon at length; but of the crowning glory of his life, his service in the cause of Prohibition, not a word was said. The only thing that even related to it was the statement that in accepting nomination for office it was believed that he was not influenced by mercenary considerations.

The case is this: The most distinguished layman of the M. E. church, whose leadership in the Prohibition party as its last Presidential candidate was an incident second to none in his career, dies, and his life-work is reviewed by those holding high positions in the church. It is a representative act of its representative men; and yet they are so ashamed of righteousness, and so wedded to a guilty party, as to utterly ignore the connection of General Fisk with the Prohibition party in the funeral services. Even the daily press did better than this.—The Church Militant.

The city council of Plainfield, N. J., granted a seven-hundred-dollar license to a saloon under the postoffice, whereupon Postmaster-General Wanamaker cancelled the lease on the present post-office building, and leased a new one with a clause in the lease prohibiting a saloon in the building while the postoffice remained there.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Jesus' prayer on the cross. Vs. 33, 34. We come now to the last heart-rending scene in this awful tragedy. Prophecy was fulfilled and the holy, harmless Son of God numbered with the transgressors by being crucified between two thieves. And yet while suffering the most excruciating tortures, taunted and mocked with a cruelty that was not brutal but fiendish, he prays for his murderers. An angel might have come to earth and preached to men the duty of forgiving their enemies, but he would not have been able to give them any example of this forgiving love in his own person; or if he did, men would say, "it may be possible for angels but not for us," and have gone on in the old way exacting "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." "For they know not what they do." This may be said of all wilful and peristent rejectors of Christ. But there are different degrees of ignorance, as between the Roman soldiers who nailed him to the cross, and the chief priests who conspired his death. There is reason to think that the latter in their secret hearts believed he was the Messiah but deliberately crushed down their convictions, and shut their eyes and ears to the evidence of his miracles. This is what many do now. They are ignorant of all that their rejection of Christ involves, but they are wilfully ignorant, and must receive the greater condemnation. Pentecost has this very suggestive thought in reference to the soldiers who parted Christ's garments. They are like countless multitudes to-day who are willing to accept all the benefits of Christianity while perfectly indifferent to His claims from whose life and death all these benefits are derived.

2. The penitent thief. Vs. 35–43. As the terrible tragedy moves on to its consummation the colors grow more lurid. Hell itself must have surely inspired such malignant hatred on the part of the rulers that it could bring them in utter forgetfulness of their official dignity to lead on the rabble in thus deriding and mocking their helpless victim even after he was nailed to the cross. "He saved others, himself he cannot save." Had Christ saved himself there would have been no salvation for us. So in their measure it must be with all who follow him. If they are not crucified to the world they cannot save others. If they seek only those things which in the common human estimate make life, no virtue can go out from them to rescue the perishing sinners around them. The penitent thief would have had to die without any promise of Paradise, had Christ shrank from drinking the cup of death to its last bitter dregs and thus making a finished work of our salvation. It has been said that there is one instance of death-bed repentance given in the Bible that none need despair, and but one that none may presume. His prayer is one that suggests many points to consider. It was brief, earnest, pointed, definite. It was the cry of a deep and bitter sense of need; but it was no blind appeal to an unseen, unknown power, such as is often uttered by scoffers and unbelievers in the face of sudden death. It was an intelligent taking hold by faith of one strong to save. Such a prayer is always answered. "With me," etc. Heaven is where Christ is, and all we can imagine of glory and blessedness is included in the idea of his constant presence. This is really the answer to all inquiries whether we shall recognize our friends in heaven, or have this, that or the other thing which in this earthly state seems necessary to our enjoyment. We shall have Christ, and having him we shall be satisfied. We shall be made "full of joy with his countenance," and every need both of the redeemed soul and the risen body will be met in Jesus. His last exclamation shows that he voluntarily gave himself up to die; and at every step, from his first intimations to the disciples of the doom that awaited him, to his arrest and trial, we see him asserting his divine power to lay down his life or to take it again. An involuntary sacrifice would not have satisfied justice. The supernatural darkness, of which mention is made in pagan writers; the earthquake, the open tombs, above all the rent vail of the temple were fitting phenomenon to close such an awful scene, but we must think that to the weeping disciples the very events that raised such fear in the minds of the scoffing crowd must have had more of consolation than terror. So the signs which shall usher in the Lord's second coming, will strike terror to the hearts of unbelievers, but not to those who are looking for and expecting his appearing.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

MR. MOODY IN CHICAGO.—The Evangelist D. L. Moody will open a series of meetings in Chicago on November 23d, in connection with his Bible Institute work. His presence and instruction in the Institute will afford students the best possible opportunity to avail themselves of his counsel and teaching in the best methods of practical Gospel work. He will be followed by Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, who is to remain through January, and possibly longer.

Mr. Moody sends out a cordial invitation to all interested in Bible study and Christian work, who wish a new inspiration in the study of the Word of God, to attend the Institute for such a period as they find convenient. As far as possible they will be accommodated in the Institute buildings. Those who desire accommodations or further information should write at once to R. A. Torrey, Supt., 80 W. Pearson St., Chicago, or to Mrs. S. B. Capron, Supt. of the Ladies Department, 232 La Salle Avenue, Chicago.

—The Inter-Seminary Missionary Alliance was held at Allegheny, Pa., October 23d–26th. One hundred and sixty delegates from some forty theological seminaries, were the guests of the three Allegheny seminaries—Western, United Presbyterian and Reformed Presbyterian. The men and meetings were marked by intense and judicious earnestness. Dr. Wayland Hoyt, of Minneapolis, Dr. Hurlburt, of New York, and three city pastors, counseled and stimulated the delegates.

—The Protestant ministers of Chicago intend to take concerted action to oppose the opening of the Columbian Exposition on Sunday.

—Boston, since 1830, has increased in population about 400 per cent. During that time Congregationalism has increased 250 per cent, Baptists 475 per cent, and the Episcopalians 1,000 per cent.

—The Congregational church at Southport, Conn., has pledged $2,000 for a new mission at Ft. Wayne, Alaska, in response to an appeal by Dr. Jackson, United States commissioner of Indian affairs in that Territory.

—Steps have been taken by colored ministers and officers of the Southern Presbyterian church in Alabama to organize a colored Presbytery in that State. Similar measures are contemplated in Mississippi, Louisiana, Georgia, and the two Carolinas.

—The Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, organized less than twelve years ago, has since then collected and disbursed $500,000, and now holds property in the different fields of its operations valued at $180,200.

—A discussion of the relation of woman to the pulpit, which is of wide interest, lately occurred in the Cleveland Congregational Association, Ohio. It is regarded by some eminent religious papers as a sign of the times. At this Association Miss Juanita Breckenridge was present as an applicant for license to preach. She is a graduate of Wheaton College and a student in Oberlin Seminary. Her request was presented last spring, and referred to a committee of five. The majority, Dr. Brand of Oberlin, Dr. Sturtevant and Deacon Kendall, reported in favor of the application. The minority report, submitted by Dr. G. R. Leavitt and Deacon Horace Ford, expressed satisfaction in woman's progress, but thought it not to be God's design that she should exercise the function of the regular ministry in the church. The reports were discussed with animation and in an excellent spirit for two hours, and after prayer a vote was taken. Thirty-three members sustained the majority report, and fifteen voted against it. Of the thirty-three nineteen were laymen (seven of them women) and fourteen were ministers. The minority consisted of seven laymen and eight ministers.

—Colonel Elliott F. Shepard and Augustus D. Shepard have presented to the American Bible Society bonds, mortgages and certificates of stock of the par value of $52,893.64, which is intended to be the beginning of a memorial fund of $100,000 in honor of their father, the late Fitch Shepard. The income of this fund is eventually to be used to promote the charitable purposes of the American Bible Society.

—October and November were the months selected by the Methodist Episcopal church for voting upon the admission of women as delegates to the General Conference. Thus far in the East the voting has been against the admission of such delegates, and in the West in favor of it. Each church votes separately.

—The Volunteer Movement among missionary students is more stable and strong than ever. Over 5,000 students —200 of whom are now in the foreign field—have joined the band. Among themselves this year about $10,000 is raised to support their own missionaries. Through their efforts individual churches have added thousands of dollars to mission funds. To conserve this movement and make it work in harmony with and subordinate to regular Church Boards, a conference is to be held between its officers and delegates and the secretaries of all (it is hoped,) the Foreign Mission Boards in America.

—A Biblical Christian convention was held at Minneapolis, October 28 to 31. Among the speakers present, besides Christian workers in St. Paul and Minneapolis, were the following: Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D. D., Chicago; Rev. J. A. Brookes, D. D., St. Louis; Rev. J. D. Herr, D. D., Milwaukee; Rev. J. H. Sammis, Grand Haven, Mich.; Rev. Geo. C. Needham, Boston; Wm. E. Blackstone, Chicago.

—The first session of the fifth annual convention of Christian Workers in the United States and Canada opened in Hartford, Conn., Nov. 6, with a large attendance. Rev. R. A. Torrey, of Chicago, Chairman of the Convention, delivered an address. The convention will continue until the 12th, and will have in all seventeen sessions. Hundreds of delegates are present from all over the United States and Canada.

This institution includes Adelbert College, the Cleveland Medical College, the Cleveland College for Women, the Western Reserve and Green Spring Academies, a conservatory of music and a school of art. It has a faculty of about fifty professors and an enrollment of about 800 students.

—The plans for the new building for Capital University, Columbus, O., have been completed and accepted, and some of the work has already been contracted for. The building is to be an L in form, the greatest length being 75 feet, running east and west, and the shorter 65 feet, running north and south. At the conjuction of the two wings is a tower with an entrance into the hall. The interior is well arranged. On the lower floor will be a chapel large enough to accommodate two hundred, and also three recitation rooms. On the second floor will be the same number of class rooms directly over those on the first, while the space above the chapel will be divided into a library and a laboratory.

LODGE NOTES.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers at Pittsburg, voted against federation with other railway employes, but, in case of a strike, each division has been given authority to act as it may deem proper.

The unity of lodgery is seen remarkably in the life of John Van Valkenburg, who was originally an Odd-fellow and held high offices in that order. Then he joined the Knights of Pythias and became "Supreme Chancellor."

The engineers' lodge has a female attachment. It is called the Grand International Auxiliary to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. Mrs. Murdoch, of Chicago, is the "Worthy Grand President" who organized the auxiliary.

The corner-stone of the Odd-fellows' Temple and opera-house was laid at Alton, Ill. It is located but a rew hundred feet from where the first Illinois lodge, Western Star, No. 1, was instituted by Thomas Wildey on Aug. 11, 1836.

Elias C. Boudinot, of the Cherokee Nation, for many years the attorney of the Nation at Washington, was a 32-degree Mason. He was said to be one of the most cultivated of Indians. But the inherited savagery of his nature was plainly seen in his attraction to Masonry. He was evidently one of A. Pike's familiars.

The Grand Lodge of Knights of Pythias of Illinois met this year at Bloomington, and will meet the next five years in the Senate chamber at Springfield. A resolution to exclude liquor dealers from the order was referred to a committee to report upon next year. What business has a society that will put off such a resolution in the Capitol building of Illinois? What right has a secret lodge of any kind there, anyhow?

The Good Templars are to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the order in the District of Columbia. A feature of the celebration is to be the organization of a new lodge to be composed entirely of members of the Grand Army of the Republic. Why not have another all of Masons, another of Knights of Pythias, another of Knights of Labor. The material would soon be exhausted if this were attempted. "Birds of a feather," etc.

A meeting of the representatives of trades unions to organize a State Branch of the American Federation of Labor began in the House of Representatives at Harrisburg, Pa., Oct. 20. Between sixty and seventy delegates were in attendance. Among the resolutions adopted, was one favoring and demanding Sunday rest for bakers—and for nobody else! A resolution to uphold the Knights of Labor in the movement to organize a political labor party was laid upon the table.

P. J. Kane, part owner and agent of Kane's hall in this city, leased the third floor of the building to John Wilson lodge, No. 760, I. O. O. F. The lodge sublet the hall, on one occasion, to the Patriotic Order of Sons of America for the purposes of a ball. Kane and his tenants objected strongly to the use of the premises for any such purpose, and he endeavored to dispossess the lodge. But the courts do not sustain him. Next time Mr. Kane will understand that lodges and balls are almost synonomous terms.

The New York Tribune says: "The decision of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows, in session at Topeka, reversing the famous order of the Missouri Grand Lodge refusing admission to liquor-store keepers, has caused an agitation in the order. The resolution was introduced in the Missouri Grand Lodge during the session of 1889 and was passed by that body; but during the last session, held August 31, Mr. Rixey, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of the State of Missouri, decided that the resolution was in conflict with previous rulings of the Sovereign Grand Lodge, and therefore would not be enforced. It is the first time in the history of the order in Missouri that the grand master has found it necessary to rule against a decision by the Grand Lodge. The greatest excitement was caused, and those in favor of annulling the action of the Grand Lodge decided to bring it before the present meeting of the Sovereign Lodge at Topeka for a decision, which held that the qualifications of membership had been prescribed by the constitution of the Sovereign Grand Lodge, and that retroactive legislation was illegal and could not be enforced."

"In one store where I went to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla the clerk tried to induce me buy their own instead of Hood's; he told me their's would last longer; that I might take it on ten

When I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I was feeling real miserable with dyspepsia, and so weak that at times I could hardly

REMARKABLE OFFER!

Nearly everyone is familiar with the name, but it has been estimated that only one in every two hundred and eighty persons in the United States is fortunate enough to have access to the valuable information contained within the covers of the grandest work ever written by mortal man,

Webster's
UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words, we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent.

Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface.

In addition to the 100,000 words it contains a portrait of the author, together with his biography and a valuable table of 12,000 synonymous words.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and seventy-five cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

HOME AND HEALTH.

A LITTLE KEROSENE.—Kerosene becomes more deadly every year, and the fact that these accidents are utterly unnecessary render them the more lamentable. In the hope of preventing some of these accidents, we state a few facts which everybody ought to know: (1) It is not the kerosene that explodes, but an invisible gas rising from it. (2) If oil is poured into a lamp that needs filling, this gas rises out of the lamp or can, or both, and explodes, often with deadly force, if there be any fire within reach. (3) Pouring oil from a can upon a burning fire or into a lighted lamp ought to be followed by a terrible explosion. Sometimes it happens that no explosion occurs, but the risk is frightful. (4) The only safe rule is never to pour oil on a burning fire or into a lighted lamp. Now, you may give the girls the most positive orders with regard to the fires, but when no one is at hand in the early morning hours the temptation is strong to assist the smouldering blaze by the aid of a little kerosene. She had done it without injury formerly, why not again? So the nose of the can is tilted over the range or grate, there is a flash, a scream, and the poor girl will never have another chance to disobey orders. Perhaps it would be better, if the girl must be allowed access to the can at all—the suggestion is made timidly—to show her how she may aid the fire with comparative safety. All she has to do is to pour a spoonful or two of oil into a cup or something of the kind, and setting the can down at a safe distance, pour the oil from the cup upon the fire. It is not likely that she will suffer much injury from the comparatively mild explosion that may follow.—Parlor and Kitchen.

EFFECT OF BAD POSITIONS.

An erect bodily attitude is of vastly more importance to health than most people generally imagine. Crooked bodily positions, maintained for any length of time, are always injurious, whether in the sitting, or standing posture, whether sleeping or walking. To sit with the body leaning forward on the stomach or to one side, with the heels elevated on a level with the hands, is not only in bad taste, but exceedingly detrimental to health; it cramps the stomach, presses the vital organs, interrupts the free motion of the chest, and enfeebles the functions of the abdominal and thoracic organs, and in fact unbalances the whole muscular system. Many children become slightly hump-backed or quite round-shouldered by sleeping with the head raised on a high pillow. When any person finds it easier to sit or stand or walk or sleep in a crooked position than a straight one, he may be sure his muscular system is deranged, and the more careful he should be to preserve an upright position.

MILK AND LIME WATER.

Milk and lime water are frequently prescribed by physicians in cases of dyspepsia and weakness of the stomach. Many persons who think good bread and milk a great luxury, frequently hesitate to eat it for the reason that the milk will not digest readily; sourness of the stomach will often follow. But experience proves that lime water and milk are not only food and medicine at an early period of life, but also at a later, when, as in the case of infants, the functions of digestion and assimilation are feeble and easily perverted. A stomach taxed by gluttony, irritated by improper food, inflamed by alcohol, enfeebled by disease, or otherwise unfitted for its duties—as is shown by the various symptoms attendant upon indigestion, dyspepsia, diarrhœa, dysentery, and fever—will resume its work, and do it energetically, on an exclusive diet of bread and milk and lime water. A goblet of cow's milk may have four tablespoonfuls of lime water added to it with good effect.—Medical Classics.

Both air and water abound in microbes, or germs of disease, ready to infect the debilitated system. To impart that strength and vigor necessary to resist the effect of these pernicious atoms, no tonic blood-purifier equals Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

BRONCHITIS

Is an inflammation of the bronchial tubes—the air-passages leading into the lungs. Few other complaints are so prevalent, or call for more prompt and energetic action. As neglect or delay may result seriously, effective remedies should always be at hand. Apply at once a mustard poultice to the upper part of the chest, and, for internal treatment, take frequent doses of

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

C. O. Lepper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind., writes: "My little sister, four years of age, was so ill from bronchitis that we had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skilful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine, saying he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and I can truly say, with most happy results. After taking a few doses she seemed to breathe easier, and, within a week, was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until satisfied she was entirely well. This indisputable evidence of the great merit of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has given me unbounded confidence in the preparation, and I recommend it to my customers, knowing it cannot disappoint them."

"Ayer's Cherry Pectoral cured me of a bad cough and my partner of bronchitis. I know of numerous cases in which this preparation has proved very beneficial in families of so that the medicine is known among them as 'the consoler of the afflicted.'"—Jaime Rufus Vidal, San Cristobel, San Domingo.

"A short time ago, I was taken with a severe attack of bronchitis. The remedies ordinarily used in such cases failed to give me relief. Almost in despair of ever finding anything to cure me, I bought a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was helped from the first dose. I had not finished one bottle before the disease left me, and my throat and lungs were as sound as ever."—Geo. B. Hunter, Altoona, Pa.

Farm Notes.

GOOD PROFITS FROM A SMALL FARM.

As an illustration of what a man of brains and industry can do on a small farm the Cedar Rapids Gazette gives an instance as follows:

"Mr. H. E. Witwer tells of a farmer living about two and one-half miles from the city who has eighteen acres of land from which he makes sales this year in round numbers as follows: Potatoes, $800; grapes, $200; melons, $100; sweet corn, $50; tomatoes, $50; pork, $300; total, $1,500. In addition, of course, the man gets his living off the place."

FARM ITEMS.

In a large mow where the hay is well pressed, 400 cubic feet will make a ton. In small mows, or stacks, with moderate pressing, 512 cubic feet to the ton is a fair basis of estimate.

The yearly consumption of meat per capita in the United States is 175 pounds. That of Great Britain is a little over 100 pounds, while in many other civilized countries the average is not over fifty pounds.

Seed corn for next year's planting should be thoroughly dried and kept in a dry place till planting time. It should be gathered before the frosts are severe enough to injure the germ—the earlier the better.

Live stock journals of the far West claim that the numbers of cattle on the ranges have been falling off so largely in the last few years that the aggregate totals now are several million head less than a few years ago.

It does not pay to warm poultry houses by artificial means, except where the business of raising early broilers is carried on. Build warm houses, feed well, keep off the vermin, and fowls will get along well enough without artificial heat.

The Utica Herald says consumption of cereals by man and beast in the United States is three times as much in proportion to population as in Europe. And in this connection it may be stated that seven out of eight loaves of bread eaten in London are made from foreign wheat. While these figures show that our own is a most bountiful country in which to live, they strongly prove that free trade countries are compelled to economize in food, and also indicate that wage earners are poorly fed.

Victor, Iowa, Index: Mr. N. W. Gwin, a prosperous farmer living two miles west of town, raised five and one-fourth acres of winter wheat which all acknowledged to be extremely nice and promising when it was growing. Last week he threshed the wheat and found that he had 225 bushels. This makes a yield of nearly forty-three bushels to the acre. This is the largest yield that has been reported in this part of the country, and we doubt if it can be beaten in the State. In fact, it is large enough for any State. Who says that it does not pay to raise wheat in Iowa.

Racing With Wolves.

Many a thrilling tale has been told by travelers of a race with wolves across the frozen steppes of Russia. Sometimes only the picked bones of the hapless traveler are found to tell the tale. In our own country thousands are engaged in a life and death race against the wolf Consumption. The best weapons with which to fight the foe, is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This renowned remedy has cured myriads of cases when all other medicines and doctors had failed. It is the greatest blood-purifier and restorer of strength known to the world. For all forms of scrofulous affections (and consumption is one of them), it is unequaled as a remedy.

we have something attractive also.

To every old subscriber sending: (1) his renewal at regular rates, and (2) a new name with $3.00 for the two, we will send a copy of Ropp's Commercial Calculator, a book of great value for every farmer, mechanic or business man. This book is worth 50 cents, publisher's price. We will send it as above.

Or we will send to any old subscriber who renews and encloses for the Cynosure and the Calculator $1.70. New subscribers can have it for the same rate.

See page 7.

Some of our good friends to whom we have lately written for their renewal do not correctly interpret a clause in that request, wherein it is suggested that as their subscription has long since expired the Cynosure has been coming to them at the expense of somebody else. The meaning is simply this: Every issue of the paper costs somebody, say, $150, more or less. Now if any of our friends have been receiving and reading the paper for one, two, six or ten months and have not paid for it, the question is, have they not been receiving a benefit for which somebody else has paid? We take it that not one of these friends of our cause can fail to see that their delay is bringing an expense to the reform in some other direction. We presume, too, that most of them have a good reason for the delay, but we do most earnestly entreat them to put off the settlement no longer than necessary. The offer to give two years' credit for $3.00 is a very liberal one for some of our brethren. Let us put the Golden Rule down on this case.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The board of management for government exhibits at the World's Columbian Exposition has determined to project its plans upon a basis of $1,000,000 expenditure, exclusive of the building or buildings, the cost of which is limited by law to $400,000.

Secretary Noble has replied to Mayor Grant's last application for a recount of the population of the city of New York, and for the second time refuses to allow the recount.

Notice was given Monday that the provisions of the act of Congress, approved Aug. 30, for the inspection of salted pork and bacon and cattle for export would be put in force Nov. 10.

CHICAGO.

The necessary guarantee fund of $50,000 a year for three years having been subscribed by men of Chicago, Theodore Thomas will make this city his home and will establish a permanent orchestra.

THE ELECTIONS.

The next Congress will probably stand thus: Senate, 46 Republicans, 39 Democrats, 3 doubtful; House, 136 Republicans, 210 Democrats, 19 representatives of the farmers societies. Democratic majority over Republicans, 74; over all, 55.

The next Legislature in Illinois, according to the latest reliable returns, will be a tie between the Republicans and Democrats, with the Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association holding the balace of power. The footings give to the Republicans 101 votes on joint ballot, the Democrats 100, and the F. M. B. A.'s 3.

Sixty counties of Nebraska give a majority against prohibition of 43,000. Boyd, Democrat, is elected Governor by about 5,000.

The Australian system of voting seems to have stood the test well in New York, Wisconsin and Indiana. Massachusetts had given a good account of it some months ago.

It is announced that Humphrey has been re-elected Governor of Kansas by about 5,000, and it is also said that the Legislature is apparently "against Senator Ingalls by 15 votes at least, and possibly 24."

COUNTRY.

Eight thousand Indian families built houses last year. That means that 40,000 have left the tepee forever. The Jesuits obtained last year the lion's share —some $380,000 out of the $506,000 appropriated for the Indian contract schools—first come first served. The Presbyterians received $34,000, and the American Missionary Association $17,000.

Martha Pickens died at her home in Brown county, Ind., Thursday, at the age of 104 years. She had resided on one farm in the county for seventy years.

Every house in Winslow, Pike county, Ind., was burned Friday morning. There will be much suffering among the inhabitants.

A hall in Newark, N. J., was hired by people representing the International Workingmen's society. The proprietor did not know that the organization was composed of anarchists until bills were posted throughout the city announcing the celebration of the third anniversary of the hanging of the Chicago anarchists. Lucy Parsons, Herr Most and Hugh O. Pentecost were advertised as speakers. When the speakers appeared the proprietor refused to allow them to enter the hall. A big crowd had congregated in the street and Mrs. Parsons mounted the hall steps and began a harangue. She was arrested with a number of others.

In walking through a "stack yard" at Springview, Neb., Friday, a little girl lighted a match by stepping upon it. Over five hundred bushels of wheat, about seventy-five tons of hay and a thrashing machine were burned.

Two hundred men, with white caps over their heads, rode into the town of Freeman, Mo., Wednesday night, and, forcing their way into a whisky joint owned by W. Peyton, they proceeded to break the bottles, glasses, kegs, barrels and billiard tables to pieces. Peyton obeyed orders and lay on the floor a silent witness to the destruction of his property.

A Missouri Pacific passenger train was wrecked three miles east of Otterville, Mo., at 2:45 Friday morning, it is supposed, for the purpose of robbery. Spikes, bolts, and plates had been removed from the rail. The entire train except the Pullman sleeper was ditched, and the engineer and four postal clerks were injured.

A general fight is reported at Irvine, Estill county, Ky., in which two persons were killed and several wounded. John Wilson, superintendent of public schools, and D. R. Lilly, son of Judge Lilly, were killed, and Grant Lilly dangerously wounded. Pistols were the weapons used, and the trouble grew out of the election.

FOREIGN.

The powder-mills of the Chinese government at Tai-Ping-Fu exploded, killing 300 employes and demolishing all the buildings.

The London board of trade report for October shows a decrease in imports of £490,000 and an increase in exports of £590,000 as compared with the same month last year.

A heavy storm was prevailing Friday throughout Great Britain and Ireland, and much damage was done. The rain fell incessantly and in many sections the country was flooded. Many houses were unroofed by the gale. At Liverpool and vicinity the storm raged with terrific fury.

The queen regent of Spain has replied, through the premier, to the petition of Catholic bishops for her interference in behalf of the Pope. Her majesty, while professing deep devotion to his holiness and the church, replies that the Spanish government cannot justly interfere in the affairs of the kingdom of Italy.

It is reported that the Pope has sent a message to America, directing that bishops and pastors shall speak out openly against the Irish plan of campaign where ever aid is solicited for that movement.

An encounter has occurred between a detachment of Turkish troops and a band of armed Armenians near Erzengan, seventy-five miles southwest of Erzeroum, in Armenia. Seven of the soldiers were killed and fifteen were wounded.

Juan A. Mateos presented a motion in the Mexican chamber of deputies asking that all priests who are not Mexican citizens be expelled from the country as being pernicious to the welfare of Mexico. Debates have commenced on the motion, and great excitement prevails. Mateos is a republican and a Protestant.

I am happy to give this testimonial as to the excellency of "Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic." Suffering for a long period of nervous debility due to dyspepsia, I ascertain that since I made use of this remedy a radical change was operated on me; not only on the nerves, but even dyspepsia disappears promptly. Similar experiences have been made by many of my confreres with this remedy. I consider it entirely efficacious and proper to cure all nervous diseases and other cases depending from the same.

TO THE HISTORY OF PURDUE UNIVERSITY as now given in our columns, we hope to add at some time during the discussion of the college fraternities, other declarations of courts of high authority, which bear upon this important question. Next week we are able to report a discussion of much ability and interest, which lately took place in Knox College, Toronto, together with an important statement respecting the peculiar nature of the secret societies of Amherst College, which essentially modify the statements of ex-President Seelye; showing, moreover, that his general approval of college fraternities is used as a cloak for much that is infamous.

Our portrait this week is of an eminent professor, in the German Lutheran church, the Father of the Missouri Synod and founder and head, until his death in 1887, of Concordia Seminary at St. Louis. His followers claimed for him the distinguished honor of being the father of Lutheran orthodoxy in America. It is to his clear, logical and Scriptural discussion of the secret society system, that the Lutheran churches owe much of their freedom from the lodge. His review of this system, while careful in its condemnation, was fearless and knew nothing of any temporizing or concession of principle, because an order might chance to be popular or powerful.

The Sabbath Convention held in this city last week was remarkable for two things—the excellence of its addresses and the small attendance. Chicago has little enthusiasm yet for the sacred rest day. Possibly some social cataclysm will be needed to break up the granite crust of indifference to moral obligation, which seems to be settled upon the people. The several States forming the district were represented, and an alliance was organized to facilitate the work outside of single State lines. The address of Dr. Herrick Johnson had most local influence, as it took up the practical questions of closing the saloons under State law, and the World's Fair under a higher law of conscience. It was published in full in the daily press.

The National W. C. T. Union is meeting in Atlanta, Georgia. Miss Willard's annual address was given Saturday, in which she eulogized the Salvation Army whose two-fold work against intemperance and impurity, she eulogized as the greatest of modern times. President Harrison, Mr. Wanamaker and Congress are all honorably mentioned, because of the anti-lottery bill. Secretary Windom for banishing liquor from Castle Garden and Senator Blair for his championship of temperance, and other reforms. It was reported that twenty-three States have free kindergartens; twelve States have anti-tobacco laws, two of them, Connecticut and New York, punishing boys under 16 for smoking. The department of capital and labor finds a better condition among the working people in Vermont than elsewhere.

The new lottery law strikes out in all directions, and some people are being hit, to their amazement. Last week the postmaster at Leavenworth, Kansas, refused to receive for mailing copies of the Times of that city containing an account of a Romanist fair and raffle. Gen. Tyner, the Attorney-General for the Postoffice department, says: "The law plainly forbids the transmission through the mails of any newspaper containing an advertisement or notice of a lottery or any game of chance, no matter whether it is for personal profit or for the promotion of the cause of Christianity. All such things are forbidden, and the officers of the department have no option whatever. We have simply to carry out the will of Congress, and if any one is injured thereby Congress must bear the blame instead of the department."

The unwise friends of Bartellot and Jamieson, who were left by Stanley in charge of the now famous rear column during his last African expedition, are now regretting their attempts to dethrone Stanley and vindicate dead men who cannot speak for themselves. The horrible facts which their rash condemnation has brought to light had better have been buried with those concerned in them, as Stanley wished them to be. They simply prove that human nature is the same the world over, and that the white man race with all his boast of superiority is capable of equal depravity with a black cannibal. Indeed, the liquor trade in Africa and the opium traffic in China, have been a standing testimony of this fact for years. It only needed a few touches to the picture from these interior jungles to complete its horrors.

The Knights of Labor, so-called, are holding a long and excitable secret meeting in Denver. The public is little informed of the proceedings, but on Saturday there occurred the periodical row, which has for several years entertained the readers of the press. It was supposed that all disturbing elements were cast out last year at Minneapolis, and under a new constitution Powderly was understood to be established in power for at least two years. But last Saturday there was almost a riot among the delegates. The excitement was so high that there was no recess at noon and a heated discussion was kept up till 7 o'clock in the evening. The reporters were unable to learn more of the trouble than that it was a resolution reflecting seriously on Powderly. The latter is trying to redeem his repeated failures by turning the order into a school of political economy with the tariff for a topic, but the labor leaders of this city declare that the scheme is old and out of date and is only a ruse to keep together the remnants of the order. Since the manager of the New York Central road clinched his victory over the order by providing that no member of it should be employed thereafter on the road, the Powderly lodge has been practically dead. It is a pity to see the W. C. T. Union under Miss Willard's lead confounding its noble work with that of this secret society by sending and receiving "fraternal delegates." Taking the whole history of the order into account it seems like a prostitution of a worthy cause.

The threatened financial panic in America and Europe last week, passed over like a threatening cloud without any serious disaster. In London the enormous sum of £10,000,000 was raised by the Bank of England and other capitalists to save the great banking firm of Baring Bros. The original cause of the embarrassment is said to be Russia's withdrawal of several millions of deposits on learning of the firm's dealings in Argentine and Uruguay bonds. A singular reason is given by some for the New York flurry. It is said that the Louisiana Lottery Company, learning that Postmaster-General Wanamaker wished to borrow heavily, withdrew its funds from the New York banks, and caused a stringency which extended much beyond Mr. Wanamaker. It being the settled policy of that company to ruin whoever came in its way, the Postmaster General is game for its hounds, because of the bill he urged upon Congress.

"QUACK DOCTORS" OF DIVINITY.

BY REV. WALLACE J. GLADWIN OF BOMBAY.

Wonder-mongers and Prophecy-manglers.—Gen. Grant to fight the Romanists.—The Prophet Jeremiah a Grand Freemason in Ireland.—Worship of Moses.—All this and much more by a popular American D. D.

On my way over the Atlantic I found time to "read up" the doctrine that the British nation are the "Ten Lost Tribes of Israel." I had known something of this teaching for years; but now I gave it a more careful study.

Some who apparently aspire to be "Sons of the Prophets," claim to have discovered that Jeremiah, the prophet, took a daughter of the "seed royal" of Israel, brought her over to Ireland, and married her to an Irish chief. From this union and lineage sprang Queen Victoria, and hence the British succession to the throne of David! That puts the papal "succession" out of sight. The Pope should abdicate. But, because he will blindly refuse to do so, and go on building up his hierarchy, the Romish power in America should get a whipping at the hands of Gen. Grant! (The D. D. wrote his book about 1878, before Grant's death.) Of course Jeremiah was a "Grand Patriarch" of the Freemasons, and cable-towed its mystic mummeries all the way through the Mediterranean Sea, and up the Atlantic to Old Hibernia!!

By two solid and solemn counts of the prophetic numbers of Scripture, our learned doctor figures out that a great change of the Dispensation was to take place in 1880 or 1882, great wars, distresses, etc. The "Ancient of Days" in Dan. 7, he declares is MOSES.

"His throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him; thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: the judgment was set and the books were opened."

That is not enough; the "One like unto the Son of Man" our doctor-prophet tells us is ELIJAH. Of him Scripture says:

"There was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

The doctor does not print those quotations, they might "spoil his preach." I give them to show how God's Word is often "adapted" to suit Scripture speculators.

The book containing the above and much more human wisdom (?) was not written by some old crone in the backwoods, but by one of the popular ministers of the New World. Notwithstanding the failure of the prophecies respecting 1882, and Gen. Grant, the cool perversions of Scripture as above given, the ridiculous bosh about Jeremiah being a Freemason, etc., etc., still the book is sold on both sides of the ocean, and is read as good Gospel by many pious people.

Another leading author upon the same doctrine, whose writings I have, makes direct misapplications of Scripture. Probably not one out of five hundred of his readers takes the trouble to search out the texts he refers to. Thus people swallow the theories of these adventurers in the shut-your-eyes-and-open-your-mouth style, which gives quacks their golden opportunity everywhere. When we see the marvellous gullibility of many Protestants, can we wonder at the childish credulity of Romanists?

WARNING: God has two great purposes in his people here on earth: First, growth in grace; and second, winning others to Christ. Now, the enemy of souls will do anything and everything to switch us off upon some side track. How watchful he is to introduce any error in head, heart or hand; anything to divert or occupy us; anything to diminish our power and effectiveness, in these two great points of God's kingdom: Holiness and soul-winning. Let us not be "ignorant of his devices." Watch these items:

"Careful to maintain good works;"

"Avoid foolish questions"—Titus 3.

DEBTS AND ELECTIONS IN KANSAS.

BY REV. T. C. MOFFATT.

The Kansas elections furnish a good many surprises this fall. The Republicans elect but two Congressmen, the People's party getting five. These five are mostly of Greenback or Union Labor antecedents. The Republicans elect the State ticket except the Attorney General, who is a fusion candidate between the Democrats and the People's party, or Farmers' Alliance. Gov. Humphrey has taken a firm stand in favor of the prohibitory law and against re-submission, and his election, together with that of a whisky Attorney General, will place the State much in the position of the man who was "in favor of the law but agin its enforcement."

It is to be feared, also, that many of the men who have been elected to the office of county attorney on the Alliance ticket, will not be of much use in the enforcement of the prohibitory law or anything else. One of them told the people during his canvass, that "if we only had the right kind of laws it wouldn't make any difference whether we raised any crops or not!" We shall not lose our prohibitory law while Gov. Humphrey is in the chair, but there is no hope of making it "stronger," as was hinted at in the Republican platform.

The great and only intentional signification of the result in Kansas, is debt and discontent. Men have been trying to do business with a capital of debt. The finances of the people are rotten with false capital. Only failure can result from such a condition of things. It is so from the necessity of the case. The farmer cannot raise two crops, one for himself and one for the loan companies back East; the merchant cannot make two profits, one for himself and another for his creditors; the banker cannot collect two sets of interest, one for himself and one for Eastern capitalists. This is just what Kansas people have been trying to do. The necessary result is hard times. It follows just as certainly as that one from one leaves nothing.

But people will not see it in that light. It is the party in power, or the men who represent us in Congress, or the Legislature, or the railroads, or the monopolies, or the national banks, or the tariff, or the prohibition law or something else that is to blame. And so they vote as they have voted. It is like a flock of sheep plunging through a hole in the fence which one of their number has discovered, not because they know what is on the other side, but just because there is a hole.

Let us be grateful that in the stampede, the interests of temperance and morality have not been entirely trampled to pieces. And may the future bring more of wisdom.

THE HORRORS OF MASONIC OATHS.

Confirming the statements of Mr. Ronayne in in the Cynosure of last week, the following from English Masonic authors of standing will be read with profound interest; and especial and candid attention should be given to their hints as to the real nature of a system which at the beginning could provide such imprecations for perpetual use in the lodge. The work first quoted is entitled "The Mysteries of Freemasonry; or an exposition of the religious dogmas and customs of the Ancient Egyptians; showing from the origin, nature and object of the rites and ceremonies of remote antiquity, their identity with the order of modern Masonry." By John Fellows, A. M., 1877.

[From Fellows' Mysteries of Masonry, Introductory chapter.]

"The most material and best founded objection that has been brought against Masonry, is the oaths which it imposes upon the brethren. They are shocking to the taste of the present age: their continuance was an enormous blunder in the revivers of the order in 1717. They were then no longer necessary. Masonry contains nothing which at time rendered its members amenable to the laws of England.

"The false construction put upon these oaths has implicated the order in the foulest deeds; and perhaps caused the Masonic obligations to be considered paramount to legal oaths administered in courts of law, and thus perverted the course of justice. The only means, therefore, of avoiding this evil, and of wiping away the stain at present attached to the society, is a total abandonment of the oaths.

"However desirable this may be to many of the brethren, it is resisted by others on the absurd and superstitious notion that no alteration can take place in 'the ancient landmarks' of the institution; which, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, must remain eternally the same: when, notwithstanding, within about fifty years, the old inclosures have been broken down, and the boundaries of the order extended so as to include an immense territory beyond the ancient limits.

"After this unqualified reprobation of the oaths, I confidently assert that nothing is taught or practiced in the lodges contrary to the strictest morals. The exposition of the ritual by those even who are inimical to the order, proves the fact. And, as has been often urged, if there were no other testimony, the characters of many of those who are known to the members is a sufficient guarantee that nothing improper would be tolerated.

"If it be said that a partial feeling is created among the brethren that operates injuriously to the public good, it may be answered that the same objection may be urged against all associations of individuals, whatever may be their views and intentions.

"This partiality, by the way, has been the cause of relieving many in distress, and even saving the lives of valuable citizens. A case of this kind happened in the American revolutionary war, which is often alluded to by Masonic writers. Col. McKenstry was taken prisoner by the Indians, who were preparing to put him to a cruel death. In this emergency he gave the Masonic sign of distress, which induced a brother Mason, a British officer, to interfere and save his life.

"While this transaction reflects honor upon the officer as a Mason, it at the same time leaves an indelible stain upon his character as a man, which equally attaches to his king and government. What! employ savages as auxiliaries in war, and then stand by and look coolly on while they amuse themselves in tomahawking and scalping their prisoners, unless the latter can give the talismanic signal, and pronounce the Shibboleth of Masonry? But as kings are considered by their subjects not to be moral agents, but looked upon as minors or idiots who can do no wrong, the prime minister at the time, Lord North, and his principal adviser, Lord Sackville, must bear the bulk of the odium.

"This rule of Masons to grant aid to each other under certain circumstances, was probably derived from the laws of Egypt, by which 'he who had neglected or refused to save a man's life when attacked, if it were in his power to assist him, was punished as rigorously as the assassin; but if the unfortunate person could not be succored, the offender was at least to be impeached, and penalties were decreed for any neglect of this kind. Thus the subjects were a guard and protection to one another; and the whole body of the community united against the designs of the bad.' (Rollin's Anc. History.)

"Some apology for the awful oaths administered in Masonic lodges is perhaps due on the score of precedent; which has in all times greatly influenced the customs and government of the world, and sometimes sanctified principles the most absurd and pernicious.

"The mysteries were protected by the most severe oaths in Greece and Rome, and, no doubt, were equally so in Egypt, the place of their birth. And, moreover, in the two former countries, if not in the latter, revealing the secrets of these mysteries was punished with death by the laws.

"For this there was a substantial reason: the greater mysteries taught the doctrine of one Supreme God, and that polytheism was an error; admitting, at the same time, that the sun, moon and stars were minor divinities under the superintendence of the one Supreme. The belief, however, in hero-gods was so engrafted on the minds of the ignorant multitude, that it was feared the open promulgation of a doctrine in opposition to that faith would lead to disturbances in the state that might produce great evil. This mystery, consequently, was confided only to a chosen few of the most intelligent, under the sanction of an oath and the penalties of the law.

"When Freemasonry was first established in England, soon after the edict of Canute, in the beginning of the eleventh century, (as is presumed,) prohibiting in toto the Druidical worship, the strongest oaths were required to bind the initiated to secrecy; for had the real intent of its founders been known, it would doubtless have cost them their lives.

"That Canute was superstitious, and of course vindictive, is evident from his having made a pilgrimage to Rome, through excessive religious zeal, in 1030; and therefore would, no doubt, have punished the Druids for an infraction of his edict with merciless cruelty.

"By the incorporation of the Danes with the nation, (says Lingard, in his history of England,) the rites of paganism had again made their appearance in the island. Canute forbade the worship of the heathen gods, of the sun or moon, of fire or water, of stones or fountains, and of forests or trees. . . . . .

"Farthermore it may be remarked, that the customs of the times in which I am endeavoring to show that Masonry was established, sanctioned the most horrible oaths.

" 'The multiplicity of oaths in the judicial proceeding of the middle ages (says Dr. Henry, in his History of Great Britain, v. 3, p. 425) had the same effect that it will always have, of diminishing men's veneration for them, and giving occasion for frequent perjury. The legislators of those times employed several devices to prevent this, by awakening the consciences, and keeping alive the religious fears of mankind. With this view, their oaths were couched in the most awful forms of words that could be invented; and these forms were frequently changed, that they might not lose their effect by becoming too familiar.' "

[From Greenleef's Brief Inquiry into the Origin and Principles of Masonry.]

"At the very threshold of our mysteries, an oath of secrecy, extremely minute in all its details, and tremendous in its sanctions, has from time immemorial been exacted of every candidate. It is not to be supposed that such an oath had no foundation at first. It would argue a profligacy incredible, to invent one so sacred and inviolable merely for the sake of swearing it. Nor does such a solemnity comport with the design or practices of any association of architects whatever. For what is there or what could there ever have been, in the art of building, or in the whole circle of science merely, that could require or even warrant so appalling an obligation? Neither does it agree with the present state of the institution; for Masonry harbors no treasons nor blasphemies. Its designs at the present day are not only innocent, but laudable. It requires us to fear God and promote the happiness of man.

The inventors of this oath, then, must have most unpardonably trifled with the awful solemnity of such an engagement, if, at the time of its institution, there did not exist a cause, proportionate, at least in some degree, to the precautions used against its violation. What this cause was, we can determine only by probable conjecture. But we may presume that it must have originated in some great personal danger, if not death, apprehended to members of the institution from the populace, if their secrets were laid open to the world. Every Mason, by reflecting on these hints, will satisfy his own mind that at the first constitution of our fraternity, its great object was NOT solely the advancement of the arts, still less of architecture alone."

IT WILL END IN THE RIGHT.

Never despair! O my comrades in sorrow,
I know that our mourning is ended not. Yet,
Shall the vanquished to-day be the victors to-morrow,
Our star shall shine on in the tyrant's sunset.
Hold on! though they spurn thee, for whom thou art living
A life only cheered by the lamp of its love:
Hold on! Freedom's hope to the bounden ones giving;
Green spots in the waste wait the worn spirit dove.
Hold on,—still hold on,—in the world's despite,
Nurse the faith in thy heart, keep the lamps of truth bright,
And, my life for thine! it shall end in the right.

What, though the martyrs and prophets have perished!
The angel of life rolls the stone from their graves:
Immortal the faith and the freedom they cherished,
Their lone triumph-cry stirs the spirits of slaves!
They are gone,—but a glory is left in our life,
Like the day-god's last kiss on the darkness of even—
Gone down on the desolate seas of their strife,
To climb as star beacons up liberty's heaven.
Hold on,—still hold on,—in the world's despite,
Nurse the faith in thy heart, keep the lamp of truth bright,
And, my life for thine! it shall end in the right.

Think of the wrongs that have ground us for ages,
Think of the wrongs we have still to endure!
Think of our blood, red on history's pages;
Then work, that our reck'ning be speedy and sure.
Slaves cry to their gods! but be our God revealed
In our lives, in our works, in our warfare for man;
And bearing—or borne upon—victory's shield,
Let us fight battle-harnessed, and fall in the van.
Hold on,—still hold on, -in the world's despite,
Nurse the faith in thy heart, keep the lamp of truth bright,
And, my life for thine! it shall end in the right.

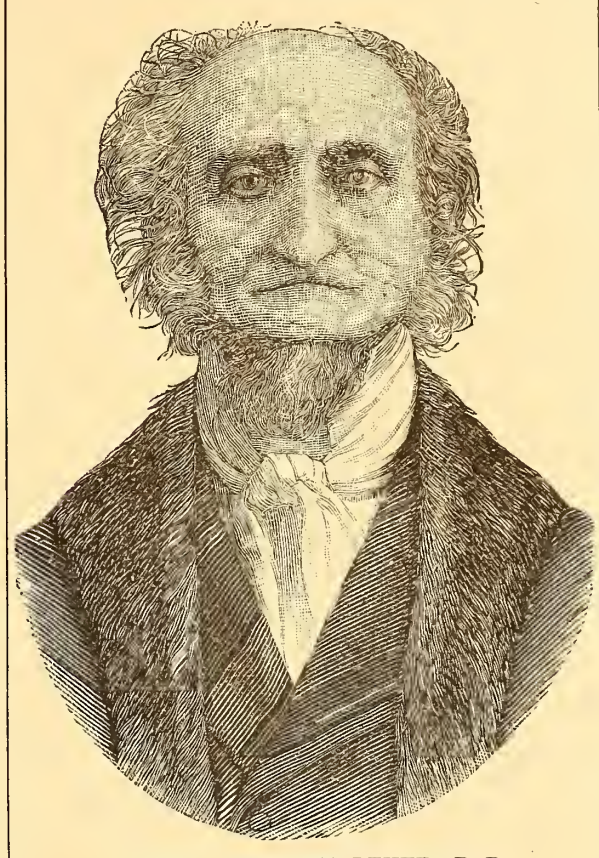
THE CELEBRATED CASE OF PURDUE UNIVERSITY.

[The report of President E. E. White continues after quoting the letter which was in large part printed last week.]



This letter had the desired effect. Students, who otherwise might have been misled, came back to the University at the opening of the term with home instructions to comply with its regulations, and the "combination" assumed small proportions. The leaders were, however, busy for several days prior to the opening, being in frequent communication, by telephone and otherwise, with outside parties in the city. The members of the Faculty were apprised of what was going on, but decided to take no action until these leaders had assembled with the other students at the opening of the term, and had plainly manifested their insubordinate purposes by some overt act in the University buildings. This occurred the first day, as was anticipated, and four young men were asked to appear before the Faculty. They did so, and were separately questioned respecting the conspiracy, the letters written to students, the meetings held, etc. They refused to answer many of the questions asked, and several of the answers given by one of them were in conflict with facts known to us. Two of the students were expelled and two indefinitely suspended "for conspiring and combining with students and other persons to refuse compliance with, and overthrow a regulation of the University and to resist the authority of the Faculty, and for other disorderly conduct tending to disturb the peace and good order of the University and otherwise injure the institution," and were so notified in writing. They subsequently applied to the President for admission and tendered the payment of fees, and thus the matter ended.

THE PURDUE FACULTY IN COURT.

In a few weeks one of the suspended students brought action against the Faculty in the Circuit Court, alleging, in brief, (1) that he had been refused admission to the University solely because of his refusal to sign an anti-fraternity pledge, and (2) that he had been suspended indefinitely from the University "without any cause whatever." The answer filed by the Faculty denies both of these averments, and states the cause for which the relator was suspended.

It seems proper to add here that one of the students disciplined had signed the promotion pledge, another (the relator above referred to) had not refused to sign it, and two had refused to sign it, but for this no discipline was required. A refusal or failure to comply with the conditions of promotion and admission to a higher class would, of itself, bar such promotion and admission.

At or near the opening of the present term, Thomas P. Hawley, who applied for and received an honorable dismission from the University in April last, applied to the President for permission to enter and take Junior studies. This application was rejected by the Faculty for the reason that he was not prepared to pursue Junior studies, and subsequently Mr. Hawley applied for permission to enter and take an elective or irregular course, including agriculture, drawing, and Latin, all studies in the Freshman courses. A regulation of the University forbids the taking of such an irregular course in the Freshman or Sophomore year, but in view of the fact that Mr. Hawley had nearly completed the Sophomore course, the regulation was waived by the Faculty and he was permitted to take the selected studies on condition that he would subscribe to the matriculation pledge, then enlarged to include five regulations (see p. 75–6), in such modified form as might be prescribed by the President in view of Mr. Hawley's known connection with a college secret society. The President informed Mr. Hawley of the revision of the regulations and their requirements, and of the action of the Faculty on his application to take the studies selected by him. It was suggested that the obstacle in the way of his matriculation, arising from his connection with the Sigma Chi fraternity, could be obviated by his securing a dismission from the fraternity, or by his subscribing to the matriculation pledge, so modified as to avoid the necessity of procuring such a dismission, as had been done by several members of Greek societies, who at different times had applied for admission to the University. The President then read to said Hawley, for his approval, the following statement:

"I hereby state on my honor that I was not connected, as a member or otherwise, with any so-called Greek or other college secret society when, in April last, I applied for and received an honorable dismissal from Purdue University, and that when I subsequently joined the Sigma Chi fraternity, I did not expect or intend to return to Purdue."

To this statement he assented and said he could subscribe to it. The President then read to him the following modification of the required matriculation pledge:

"I hereby promise that I will discontinue my active connection with the [Lafayette] chapter of the Sigma Chi fraternity during my connection with Purdue University, and I hereby subscribe to and promise compliance with all the regulations of the Institution which relate to the duties and obligations of students."

Mr. Hawley was assured that under the circumstances this obligation would be accepted by the Faculty in lieu of the recently adopted form of pledge, which embraced several regulations, including the anti-fraternity rule.

Mr. Hawley declared his unwillingness to sign it, and upon being asked by the President what modification of the matriculation pledge would be satisfactory to him, he replied that he was not willing to sign any pledge, and wished to know whether he could be admitted. He said that he would "abide" by all the other regulations. The next morning he called at the President's room and was informed that he could not be admitted without subscribing to a matriculation pledge as required by the new regulations, but, in view of his connection with a Greek fraternity, the College Faculty was willing to modify the pledge with respect to the fraternity regulation. Whereupon Mr. Hawley tendered the payment of fees, and was informed that fees were not received before matriculation.

Samuel T. Stallard, Esq., guardian of young Hawley, subsequently applied to the Circuit Court for a writ of mandate against the Faculty, averring in his complaint that the said Hawley was refused admission to the University for the sole and only reason of his refusal to sign a pledge to the effect that he would disconnect himself "as an active member of the Sigma Chi fraternity." [Article IV., Section 1 of the constitution of the Sigma Chi fraternity provides: "The active members of this fraternity shall consist of the students of the respective colleges in which Chapters may be established;" and since Mr. Hawley is not a student in any college, it is not seen how he can be an "active member" of the Chapter in Lafayette. Has the Sigma Chi Chapter in Lafayette any "active members"? If so, in what colleges are they students?] The Faculty's answer contains a full recital of the facts (substantially as above recited), and, since an issue of fact would not squarely involve the validity of the fraternity rule, we set up this rule in a third and separate paragraph for the purpose of raising such an issue. The issue thus tendered was, however, not accepted by the plaintiff's counsel, and this compelled the defendants' counsel to force the issue by a motion to strike out a portion of the complaint, which motion was of the nature of a special demurrer. The court entertained the motion, and the underlying question in the case —the validity of the fraternity rule—was ably and exhaustively discussed by counsel; and on Saturday, Dec. 3, Judge Vinton ruled on the motion, and in an able written opinion, decided that the rule of the University in question is reasonable and valid.

OPINION OF JUDGE D. P. VINTON, CIRCUIT COURT.

What I hold in this case may be stated thus:

1. That the Board of Trustees are clothed with the power to make all rules, by-laws, and regulations, required or proper, to conduct and manage Purdue University.

2. If the Board have the power it is presumed (the contrary not being averred) that the Faculty are acting by their authority.

3. In addition to the powers exercised by the Faculty under the authority of the Board, they, the Faculty, have certain inherent and necessary powers as teachers. They stand in many respects in loco parentis.

4. The making of the rule in question, forbidding a student to hold active connection with a secret Greek college fraternity, is within the general powers of the Board and Faculty, is not in violation of the Constitution of Indiana, nor of any act of Congress in relation to Agricultural colleges, nor of any legislative enactment, and, unless unreasonable, is valid.

5. Courts have the power to review the action of the Board and Faculty, in certain cases, but can only do so when the power conferred on them is abused.

6. An unreasonable by-law is invalid; but before a court can declare a by-law void for unreasonableness, such unreasonableness must be demonstrably shown. It must be plainly and palpably unreasonable.

7. In prosecutions to enforce or apply by-laws, courts will give them a reasonable construction with a view to sustaining them.

8. The rule or by-law in question, viewed by the light of the circumstances and the law applicable in such cases, cannot be declared void for unreasonableness.

WISDOM AND EXPEDIENCY OF THE PURDUE RULE.

It is not feared that Judge Vinton's decision will be reversed by the Supreme Court of the State, and hence the validity of the Purdue regulation prohibiting connection with college secret societies, may be considered as judicially settled. The only question which now rests on the Trustees and Faculty is the expediency of the rule. Is it reasonable in the popular as well as in the legal sense?

It has hitherto been our policy to defend the rule solely on the ground that the Greek fraternities, chiefly representing the classical colleges of the State (as they in fact do), would be injurious to, if not subversive of Purdue University as an agricultural and mechanical college, and thus defeat the noble purpose of the United States and of the State of Indiana, in establishing, endowing, and supporting the institution.

[Thus far the report of President White. The subsequent events are not of course included in that document, but are well known in the history of Indiana legislation. The secret societies, in the institution and without, felt bitterly their defeat. Realizing that nothing could be hoped for in the courts, they turned to the lodge members in the legislature to prevent the usual appropriation of State funds, without which the University could not proceed. The business was purposely delayed in the legislature, and held as a threat over the head of Pres. White to force him to resign; and he was at length reluctantly compelled to do so, since his presence in the institution would have crippled its funds and cut off in more or less degree the salaries of the faculty. A victory gained by such dishonorable means will be found at last to have been at the expense of the lodge victors rather than of President White.]

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

THE SUPREME COURT GIVES A GREAT DECISION.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 12, 1890.

When I wrote last week that saloon-keepers "have no rights that society should recognize," I only expressed my own opinion, and had not the slightest idea that ere a week was passed that opinion would be upheld by a decision of the United States Supreme Court; and yet such is the fact.

This decision, which was based upon an opinion written by Justice Field, is the weightiest single blow ever struck for the cause of temperance, and that it will lead to renewed efforts throughout the land to stop this cursed liquor traffic cannot for a moment be doubted, and that it will be of the greatest benefit to the citizens of those States which already have laws which are more or less loosely administered, for the supervision or regulation of the traffic, is equally patent.

The case upon which this decision was made, was appealed from the United States Circuit Court of California, which had, under a writ of habeas corpus, ordered the release of a San Francisco saloon-keeper whose license had been refused by the authorities, and who had been arrested under a city ordinance for selling liquor without a license, on the ground that the ordinance upon which he was arrested made his business depend upon the arbitrary will of others, and in that respect denied to him the equal protection of the laws.

Here is the view which our highest legal tribunal takes of this claim:

"It is undoubtedly true that it is the right of every citizen to pursue any lawful business, subject only to such restrictions as are imposed upon all persons of the same age, sex or condition. But the possession and enjoyment of this right, and indeed of all rights, are subject to such restrictions as may be deemed by the governing authority of the country essential to the safety, health, peace, good order and morals of the community."

One of the arguments made in this case is that as the liquors are used as a beverage, and the injury following them if taken in excess is voluntarily inflicted and is confined to the party offending, then their sale should be without restriction, the point being made that what a man shall drink, equally with what he shall eat, is not properly matter for legislation. To this the opinion of the Court replies in plain and unmistakable language as follows:

"There is in this position an assumption of fact which does not exist, that when the liquors are taken in excess the injuries are confined to the parties offending. The injury, it is true, first falls upon him in his health, which the habit undermines; in his morals, which it weakens, and in the self-abasement which it creates. But, as it leads to neglect of business and waste of property and general demoralization, it affects those who are immediately connected with and dependent upon him.

"By the general concurrence of opinion of every civilized and Christian community, there are few sources of crime and misery to society equal to the dram-shop where intoxicating liquors in small quantities to be drunk at the time, are sold indiscriminately to all parties applying. The statistics of every State show a greater amount of crime attributable to this than to any other source. The sale of such liquors in this way has therefore been, at all times, considered a proper subject of legislative regulation. For that matter, their sale by the glass may be absolutely prohibited. It is a question of public expediency and public morality and not of federal law.

"There is no inherent right of a citizen to sell intoxicating liquors by retail; it is not a privilege of a citizen of a State, or of a citizen of the United States. In the prohibition or the regulation of the traffic, discretion may be vested in officers to decide to whom to grant and to whom to refuse liquor licenses. The officers may not always exercise the power conferred upon them with wisdom or justice to the parties affected. But that is a matter which does not affect the authority of the State, or one which can be brought under the cognizance of the courts of the United States."

The opinion concludes by reversing the order of the lower court under which the saloon-keeper was released, and the case is remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the opinion of the Court.

This decision settles for all time any doubts that may have existed of the constitutionality of prohibition legislation, and places the liquor business in the category of evils to be regulated by law, just where it belongs, and best of all it places on record an opinion which is, in itself alone, an unanswerable argument in favor of the legal prohibition of rum-selling. It also disposes of the "personal liberty" plea which has so long served as a rallying cry for the liquor dealers. Who will say, in the face of this decision of the United States Supreme Court, that saloon-keepers have any rights that should be recognized or respected by society? *

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Women and the General Conference—The Boston Political Class—The aldermen of the Hub awake to a threatened danger—Americans in Europe—The experience of a young Wellesley woman—A remarkable coincidence.

There a good many people to-day—certainly a good many women—who are not so much interested in the question whether the Republican or Democratic parties are to rule, as they are in the question whether or no female delegates shall be admitted to the Methodist General Conference. The whole Methodist church is now voting upon it as a body, but so far as returns have come in the churches in the Southern and Middle States, true to their old-time conservatism, have generally voted in the negative, the women being fully as unanimous as the men. New England may give a different showing as she is far more radical, yet even here the female voters in the Methodist denomination seem as yet to be curiously apathetic on the subject. Women are always ready—New England women at least—to vote when a distinctively moral issue is presented. They make a mistake, however, in not stopping to think that such issues do not always lie on the outside, but are often concealed in embryo waiting for future events to develop them. When women were first given the privilege of voting for school committee, few, if any, saw the importance which the school question was going to assume; and many a good Methodist woman who is indifferent to the subject of representation at the General Conference may yet live to see questions come up on which she will be glad that women can have a casting vote.

That a grave ecclesiastical body can be shaken as by an earthquake over the matter of admitting female delegates, I consider as one of the greatest—greatest because unconscious—compliments that my sex could possibly receive. It certainly proves that woman is no longer a nonentity, even if Methodist Conferences and Supreme Courts concur in Gen. Butler's famous decision that she is not a "person." And no one can read such sharp criticisms on American womanhood as Mrs. Ward's "The Decolette in Modern Life," or Oscar Fay Adams' "The Mannerless Sex," in the North American Review, without realizing that she has reached a plane where instead of being flattered into the belief that she is an angel, she must hear harsh truths and be judged from the standpoint of a human being. Are we "thoughtless," "narrow," "selfish," "cruel?" I asked myself after looking over Mr. Adams' articles with its severe strictures. And then, remembering that the fashion notes say that the bodies of slaughtered birds are to be worn more than ever on hats and bonnets the coming season, I laid my hand on my mouth. It is certain that the custom is universally condemned by the best class of women, and yet the milliner's windows still continue to show these barbarous monstrosities of which a New Zealand belle ought to be ashamed. It is surely high time that this revolting and cruel fashion, which originated with the demi monde of Paris, should be forever relegated to the place where it started.

A very common-sense as well as graceful charity has just been started in Boston for providing the Italian women of the city with facilities for lace-making, and the first exhibition of their handiwork is now in the Mechanic's Fair. Similar projects have been started before now—one in New York—but came to grief owing to the fact that the class of people who can afford hand-made lace are the kind who have an un-American prejudice against buying it at home. They prefer to spend their money in Europe. Apropos to this comes a story which I have just heard—a paragraph from the note book of a Wellesley young woman who has just returned from a year or two of travel abroad—that seems good enough to print. She found everywhere on the continent, but more particularly in England, an impression that all Americans were mere mammon worshipers, looking at everything from the point of its money value and never asking but two questions: "Is it the style?" and, "How much did it cost?" At Venice she visited St. Mark's Cathedral, in company with a young Englishman who had studied architecture under Ruskin. Her companion looked up at the wonderful dome which seemed almost alive and throbbing with its dusky frescoes into which all that was religious in Venetian art poured its soul in the days when art was nothing if it was not religious, and calmly remarked, "This must have cost a great deal." The Wellesley maiden stood aghast for a moment, when it flashed upon her mind that this disciple of Ruskin had taken her for a specimen of the noveau riches, and was simply talking down to what he thought her level.

Heaven help those who, as Dr. Paley says, "are brought up with this world set before them and nothing else."

Our earth is a small place after all, and the discoveries of modern science are all the time practically reducing its area. This must be the reason why great minds, and minds that only think they are great, so often run in the same channel. The Buddhist mystic and theosophist, Eliot Cones, predicts that another Napoleon is to arise, who will do what the first one only attempted to do: "revive the titles, pomps and glories of the Roman empire;" and in a note to the French actress, Mlle Rhea, who is now in Boston, acting in her great role of the Empress Josephine, he writes: "Mystics know why there is a revival of public interest in everything pertaining to the history of Napoleon and the matchless Josephine. The Napoleonic Dynasty will soon become a great factor in the evolution of European history." As Mr. Cones does not of course believe either in the Bible or Christianity, it is remarkable, to say the least, that across the water, Rev. M. Baxter, the well known Second Adventist preacher, is prophesying identically the same thing. This latter Napoleon, according to him, will unite all Europe in one nation and be the predicted Man of Sin. Rome will ally herself with Red-Republicanism, and bring on era of universal war typified by the Red Horse of Revelations. While we may not give much credence to those latter-day prophets, every thoughtful mind must feel as Miss Tobey beautifully expressed it in her last annual address at Worcester, that "we stand in the shadows of the world's Saturday night solemnly closing about us." Rome will ally herself with anything on which she can ride into power, as shown by the manner in which she has contrived to slip her halter over the necks of the Knights of Labor. No wonder the Nun of Kenmare, who is keener sighted than Miss Willard in these matters, says emphatically, "Self-respecting Americans ought to walk out of this order." Elizabeth E. Flagg.

Reform News.

GRANGE-POISONED IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Canterbury, N. H., Nov. 12, 1890.

Rocks and hills here are white with the first installment of winter. Four services have been attended with considerable interest, and friends anticipate good results. Reforms have their advocates here, and the grange seems the only apple of discord among the people. Denominational distinctions are scarcely perceptible. In the absence of the Congregational pastor a most excellent sermon was preached by a Baptist brother in the morning, in the pulpit which I occupied by request in the evening.

I visited the birthplace of our good brother, Wm. Morrell of Minnesota, and met his father, David, hale and hearty in his ninety-third year, and living in the house where he was born. A niece of Deacon Moses Pettengill, who, with her husband, retains the principles of that saint of God, gave me a hearty welcome, and spoke of a visit from Bro. E. D. Bailey as among pleasant memories.

Bro. S. C. Kimball is well known in the villages and rural districts as a pious and successful evangelist, and his Christian Witness is welcomed in many homes where a more expensive paper would be a burden not so readily assumed.

For thirteen years the industrious citizens of Canterbury sustained a prosperous "Farmers' Club," in which all joined to promote the individual and general welfare of the community. No tax was imposed to maintain foreign bodies, either State or National, and no charter was required to meet in school-houses or halls built with their own money, and any orderly, well-disposed person could enjoy all the rights and benefits of the co-operative union. But a change came. As in Eden, so into this quiet, harmonious community the "Tempter" came, and in his path sprang into life a Upas-plant bearing fruits of dissension. A desire for wisdom and an ambition to become as gods, personating Ceres, Flora and Pomona, lured some into the cunning device of the lodge. Confessing by the act either their own guilt or distrust of their neighbors, a part of the citizens "hid themselves" under the natural shield of crime, an obligation of secrecy, and formed a "grange." Forsaking the "old paths," they accepted a charter with permission to meet in houses or halls of their own erecting, and to manufacture "masters and goddesses," paying a tax to the State and National granges for privileges under O. H. Kelley's Masonic patent. Of course the thoughtful Christian paused to inquire if the Master went that way, and whether or not to follow his foot-prints would lead to the tyled recesses of a secret conclave. The most critical examination by the spiritually minded failed to disclose any evidence that the dear Lord had climbed the stile blindfolded, walked the plank across the drain, stumbled over blocks in a "clearing," or that he had trodden the canvas in folds or ridges to imitate a newly-plowed field; nor could they understand how those who went this rough and rugged way were "walking with God as did Enoch of old." In the absence of a "thus saith the Lord" they waited to see the fruits.

There was soon a perceptible lack of interest in the general weal of the community, and the social means of grace. The grange meetings received more thought and were more faithfully sustained than the prayer meetings. Frank, ingenuous, open-hearted conference among neighbors gave place to a guarded circumspection of words whenever the delicate subject was approached. The "initiated" stood aside after church services and spoke in suppressed voices. Sacred(?) secrets were protected by deception, and inexperienced young men and women were associated with persons of questionable morals in night meetings to which their parents could have access only by pledging their sacred honor to obey the edicts of the National, State and local granges, and conceal all that transpired in the lodges. The unequal yoke and foresworn covenant, upon which were suspended the promises of wisdom and "all precious substance," was an offence rather than an inducement to "cast in their lot and have one purse" with the ungodly and profane. Nor could the added inducement of fair maidens bedecked with garlands of herbs and withes of hay, personating voluptuous goddesses of antiquity, overcome their aversion. They preferred to exercise the right of personal liberty and private judgment to purchasing the "pleasures of sin for a season" at so great a sacrifice of conscience and conviction, and so there "was a division among the people." The open club was broken up, and its good effect upon the social, educational and financial interests of the general community largely neutralized, and the sad effects of discord among brethren everywhere apparent.

There are, however, tokens of good. Some, once zealous for their lodge, have become indifferent, and seldom or never attend the secret sessions. The more thoughtful weary of taxation and the dumb show of initiation, and the younger, less thoughtful, "light-weight" members keep up the meetings confessedly "for fun."

Dear brethren and sisters in Christ, "I beseech you in Christ's stead," "Come out from among them." "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them," lest you "become partakers of other men's sins," in a "covenant with death and an agreement with hell." J. P. Stoddard.

PREPARING FOR THE IOWA STATE MEETING.

Dear Cynosure:—On my second trip through Iowa, I stopped at De Witt, and spent some time in canvassing. I had planned to lecture at De Witt, but circumstances prevented, and I went on to Cedar Rapids and Marion, and from thence north to Manchester. I secured some subscriptions and donations and also arranged for a future lecture in the German Baptist church north of Cedar Rapids.

I worked on towards the southwest part of Iowa, calling in Monroe county and stopping over Sabbath in Ringgold county, where I spoke three times and took some subscriptions. I then came to Clarinda and visited Rev. Mr. Kee's congregation, spending the Sabbath with the Covenanters, and giving a brief address on the secret orders at the close of the Sabbath services. I expect to stop a little while in this region and then return in time to be at the annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Association to be held at Fairfield, Jefferson county, the 2nd and 3d of December. Able speakers will, it is expected, address that convention; and many, doubtless are praying and planning to make it a success. Remember, Fairfield is not very far from Birmingham, and come expecting the meeting to be all that it can possibly be with the Divine blessing upon faithful human effort. Hoping to greet many of you at the conventiou, I am yours for Christ against the lodge, C. F. Hawley.

THE RIVER MISSION OVERFLOWS.

Gallipolis, Ohio, Nov. 10, 1890.

Editor Cynosure:—Enclosed I send you $7 for which you may send the Cynosure to the seven colored preachers whose names you will find on the enclosed sheet. I expect soon to be at Huntington, W. Va. We held Gospel meetings in the boat at 3 p. m. and 7 p. m. yesterday. Over 500 people were present, and many went away who could not get seats. We will put in one hundred more seats as soon as we get the money. We had a very large meeting of colored people at Middleport, Ohio, also at Point Pleasant.

Rev. James Brown (colored) says: "Masonry is just ruining our churches, and I might as well move away as to say anything in public against the lodge; but the way I manage is to take your little book, 'Stories of the Gods,' and work privately with each member. In this way I can convince them of the anti-Christian character of the lodge, without stirring up their enmity." I have just sent him, free of charge, a small supply of the books.

We shall push the battle as hard as we are able. Temperance meeting to-night. Your brother in Christ, I. R. B. Arnold.

A CRISIS IN SABBATH REFORM.

To the Friends of the Lord's Day and the Rest Day:—As your scout, just returned from my third transcontinental tour, I bring you words of encouragement. Helena is awaking for the first time to the enforcement of its Sabbath law. Los Angeles has wrung from its City Council a vote to submit Sunday closing of saloons to popular vote. Denver is rejoicing over the banishment of "the Wild West" from its Sabbath by such a closing accomplished. Sabbath reform literature was never so liberally circulated as in recent months.

But the perils of the Sabbath are even greater thau the encouragements. The railroads are no longer reducing Sunday work, but increasing it —the postoffices also, in some places. On the Sabbath preceding the recent election, two great political meetings were held in New York theatres by the Tammany party, and their "reform" opponents, it is said, kept their type-writers and clerks at Sunday work in their headquarters. On the same day the Irish refugees had a public reception in the same city; and the Brooklyn Base Ball Club dishonored its championship of the National League, which plays no Sunday games, by receiving the champion's flag in a Brooklyn theatre before a crowd of Sabbath-breakers.

The World's Fair Commissioners, instead of deciding at once that the Columbian Exposition is to be American and uot Continental in its Sabbath, is not even "receiving" the hundreds of petitions sent in by true Americans, but its Secretary is privately filing them away with the purpose of postponing decision to the last moment, when, as some of these directors say, there will probably be a "compromise to avoid a fuss by closing all but the art gallery."

In view of these facts it should be considered a Christian and patriotic duty for all who can do so to throng to the Annual Meeting of the American Sabbath Union in Philadelphia, December 9th and 10th. Distant cities where the many are debarred from attendance by distance, should, by a collection at a union public meeting, or a private subscription, send at least one delegate to reinforce the meeting aud bring back its wisdom.

Although not at present an officer of the Union, but an independent lecturer working for its auxiliaries in the various districts, States and cities, I am greatly interested as the founder of the Union that it should not be confounded by any mistakes, but rather perfected. Yours for Sabbath reform, Wilbur F. Crafts,

SABBATH DISCUSSION IN PHILADELPHIA.

Philadelphia, Pa.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—On Thursday and Friday a convention of the Young People of Philadelphia Presbytery was held in the Eighth United Presbyterian church, of which Rev. W. W. Barr, D. D., is pastor. A large number of delegates from different places were present and a large audience turned out each session. Rev. M. G. Kyle of the Frankfort U. P. church made an able address, as also Rev. Heiger. A place was given us for National Reform on the second afternoon, and a vote of thanks tendered for the address. Lunch was served in the evening by the ladies of the church. The question box, conducted by the pastor, was interesting. One of the questions pertained to the use of the street cars on Sabbath. There is a great deal of inconsistency in the churches about Sabbath-keeping. Some who would scorn to take and read the Sunday newspaper, hold stock and act as chief executive officers in Sabbath-breaking railroads. Thousands of professing Christians read the Sunday paper who would scorn to act as type-setter or news-boy on Sabbath. I have found a minister who deprived one of his members of his privileges, because he sold milk on Sabbath, and that minister was one of his customers and continued to take the milk on Sabbath.

On Sabbath morning and night I preached in the Fourth U. P. church. Rev. Dr. Farrar, now of the Reformed church, Brooklyn, N. Y., was their former pastor. This is a congregation of 700 members. They filled the pews at both services. At 3:30 p. m., I preached for Rev. Dr. Barr of the Eighth U. P. church, on Sabbath Observance.

MONITIONS OF THE HOUR.

AVALON, Mo.

The Prohibition party is hourly becoming more and more honeycombed and paralyzed by lodgery. In fact, the lodge has determined to rule or ruin its machinery. The Voice is yielding more and more space to lodge mention and laudation. W. Jennings Demorest and other leading men in the movement are said to be high Freemasons, and to attack lodgery is to nip their liberal cash contributions. These millionaire Masonic Prohibitionists know but too well how to manipulate the temperance agitation for the final benefit of the worshipful fraternities. Some hundred of leading Prohibitionists and W. C. T. U. workers have been receiving installments of American literature for the last four years, and many are beginning to see men, as trees, walking. But it is a pity that the splendid temperance movement is to be palsied and hampered by the lodge barnacles. The labor and sacrifice of real reformers against the saloon must be neutralized and turned aside by the sworn minions of oath-bound lodgery.

The lodge is now throttling the labor forces as rapidly as possible. The temperance element of the nation is largely in the rural districts, and the lodge is swearing in the farmers and workingmen, and directing attention from the saloon and prohibition into other channels. Men who are not posted will doubt this, but our best informed anti-secretists see but too plainly the trend of political affairs.

The little secret orders are to the larger criminal organizations what wine and champagne are to gin, beer and forty-rod whisky. The professed anti-secret people who fondle the minor cliques, rings and cabals are just about as consistent as the temperance orators who are "as good a temperance man as you are"—but, as Dr. Howard Crosby, would cure drunkenness with the "milder, harmless" drinks. Frances E. Willard, en-route to the Minneapolis Convention, said: "I do not like secret societies, and have no use for them." And in her annual address at the National Convention in Nashville, she declared: "I have always been opposed to secret societies, and never more so than to-day." Then she begins another article on the subject, with the positive statement: "My whole record is against secretism." Yet the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, with its forty departments of Christian endeavor, and such a leader, has not the courage to attack even the major orders, but winks at and fondles the juvenile orders, that teach the American youth to wear the mask of deception and studied hypocrisy, and instills in their minds the obnoxious principles of duplicity and double-dealing. The college orders are no better, the declaration of any apologist to the contrary notwithstanding. True Americans and real patriots should keep their sons and daughters out of lodge schools and lodge temperance deception. It is entirely too late in the nineteenth century for posing as apologist for oath-bound secret rings, large or small.

The lodge with its mixed society, questionable associations, low-twelve suppers, banquets, libations, late hours and dissipations, generally is a standing stepping-stone and active feeder for the saloon, gambling hell and brothel. The open ball-room and theatre are not so corrupt and demoralizing as these gregarious lodge orgies, dances and debaucheries. Ministers and blackguards, class-leaders and scoffers, temperance orators and whisky drinkers, Good Templars and beer-sellers, ladies and the demi-monde, what a spectacle for gods and men! The riff-raff of all humanity, the scum and wrecks of society morally, socially and physically, militate to the encampments, conclaves and lodge assemblies, and the newspapers publish, and every observing person knows that the saloons, theatres, dance-houses, and other places of questionable resort reap a rich harvest at these lodge gatherings. All lodgery tends to vice and moral dissipation, some in one direction, some in another, and not a few in every possible direction of selfishness and passion.

The lodge is pre-eminently the National Sabbath-breaker, with its Sunday excursions, parades, picnics, funeral shows, lodges of instruction, ad infinitum. From Maine to California the press teems with the wholesale and continuous Sabbath desecrations of these anti-Christian, un-American orders. Until they are outlawed the hallowed day of Christian Sabbath is an utter impossibility. To them Sunday is an indispensable holiday for gala display. These pagan societies have as little use for the true Sabbath as they have for the blessed Christ himself. Yet Wilbur F. Crafts can cross the continent five times amid this mad carnival of lodgery, and not a word or a line of warning and condemnation. Col. Elliott F. Shepard, Hon. G. P. Lord, Rev. J. H. Knowles, and their co-workers are not ignorant of the wide-spread lodge Sabbath-breaking. Men who read the Cynosure, Free Press, and other literature in this line, know these things. Why don't they cut a clean swath for the Christian Sabbath?

ROCKS AHEAD: REFORMERS, LOOK OUT!

CRANDON, Wis., Nov. 3, 1890.

BELOVED CO-WORKERS:—The saloon must go. But how, and when, are dangerous questions; over which, upon which, concerning which, and in relation to which, we may contend, split up or divide. Hence, instead of uniting our wisdom, giving as one our money, praying and voting together to oust and forever exterminate this world-wide curse from every part of our great nation, we are in danger, as National Prohibitionists, National Reformers, and other reformed parties in the field, of these miserable rocks. Having been in this reform field since the first gun was fired in Maine, I have learned to whip the devil around the rocks, the same as around the stump! His stronghold is to divide God's workers. As I am talking to a class who understand my shorthand, I will close by making one simple statement. Let all be sure and "remember it." If all of these parties nominate their Presidents in the next two years, all the enemies of the saloon must do one thing! "Vote for that man and that party" who have done and said the most against this rum fiend; and who are hated the most by the strong drink powers. If any should refuse to do so, let them remember the writing "on the wall." Ruined by Satanic rocks. Yours on the front line,

RUFUS SMITH.

RETARDING GOD'S WORK.

ARCADE, N. Y.

The true Christian who has been born of the Spirit, should have unwavering faith in the rightful Commander of the forces, as being a perfectly unerring strategist. There should be no doubt whatever in the minds of the members of the rank and file of such army, but that certain and complete victory would be attained over any and all opposing forces, if all subordinates would be faithful and true in obedience—implicit obedience, to the mandates of the Supreme and only rightful Leader and Ruler.

Will the reader please reflect and answer. Assuming that you accept the above as truth, answer to yourself and to your God; are you acting in the line of obedience to the Supreme in the matter of recognizing and fellowshiping your fellow soldiers in manner as directed through Paul in Romans 15: 7, "Receive ye one another as Christ also received us, to the glory of God?" Leaving out, for the present, the numerous cognate requirements of the supreme law, please, for the present, hold yourself to answering, definitely, the above question.

If you truthfully answer in the affirmative you, of course, are not, of yourself alone, or in connection with others, few or many, excluding from your full co-operative fellowship, as in open work for the Master and his cause, any one who is in co-operative fellowship with Christ. You are not a loyal member of any organized body, be it a so-called sect, denomination, church, or distinguished by any other name, that excludes from its co-operative fellowship and labors any one whom Christ receives as a co-operative laborer and to his fellowship as such companion.

If you are a member of such a body, you rebel against Christ's authority and government, and you are called upon by God, in his Word, to repent and do works meet for repentance. You are as guilty of hindering the work of the Lord, as if you prevented the overthrow of the abomination of Freemasonry and other stupendous crimes, as though you alone were preventing the church from being visibly united in its membership, as Christ prayed, "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

R. W. LYMAN.

PITH AND POINT.

THE LORD IS OUR HELPER.

I could not think of doing without the paper, for it is the best means of strength I get, outside of the Bible, to help me hold my ground against the power of darkness from within and without. I am alone in this place, in church and out, standing firm against the lodge. The Lord is helping me to trust him fully.—MRS. LOVANTIA GREENE, Willett, N. Y.

GOD WILL BLESS A GOOD ENDEAVOR.

I had expected to send a few more names with mine, but so far they have not come around. I am lame and cannot get around to see the people, but have lent my paper to others to read, and talked to them. It seems strange that it should be so hard to get people to take hold of so valuable a paper as the Cynosure. I will still try. Maybe I will be able to get a few names, hoping that God will soon open the understanding of the people to know what is for their good. My prayer is for God's blessing on you.—G. LAUTZ, Goshen, Ind.

A CRISIS AND ITS CAUSE.

It seems to me that the most serious crisis is upon us in view of the diversified opposition we meet in the desire to promote righteousness and peace in the earth on the part of professed Christians. You know not how glad I would be to get a lot of faithful subscribers. I believe that the Cynosure is one of the best reform periodicals in the United States. But the love of money is the principle that interferes and corrupts much good.—JOSEPH KUMLER, Jacksonburg, O.

A GOOD TESTIMONY FROM A COLORED PASTOR.

I am glad to say that the Cynosure has been the means of my renouncing all secret societies. I was a member of three, but have left them all. I say to the friends that sent the Cynosure that it has been like bread cast upon the water, for it has gathered me in with the truth. May the Lord bless the great work of the Cynosure.—REV. H. H. HENDERSON, Molino, Fla.

GOODWIN AND SEELYE.

Just now I was reading from Dr. Goodwin's college society reminiscences and thought a quarter section from that would be a good antidote against Bro. Seelye's apology. The "great men" argument does not always stand. "Have any of the rulers believed on him?" The people here are apparently quite approachable on the subject. I gave one of the little books, "Accredited Masonic Salvation," to a bright young man recently who had a decided mind against the lodge, but did not know that they professed religion.—REV. A. J. CHITTENDEN, Woodbine, Ky.

A GOOD FRIEND WHOSE EFFORTS DESERVE SUCCESS.

The hard times here make it almost impossible to get new subscribers. We distribute our papers here after we read them, and several would gladly take it if they could. I will send you a few names to whom you may send some documents, hoping that some of them may be induced to subscribe. This secret alliance movement will not have a very favorable influence for anti-secrecy. There is just enough secrecy about it to make people who are not wide awake on the subject think there is no harm in it. Will do the best I can, and may yet succeed in getting some subscribers.—J. MCCLEERY.

A PASTOR'S ESTIMATE.

I am very much pleased with the Cynosure, and would be sorry indeed to miss it, as I file every number away for future reference. It makes a good library of information. Thanking you for the benefit I have received through its columns, and praying God's blessing on your efforts in one of the greatest moral reforms of the day, I remain yours in this war against sin.—REV. G. W. GRIFFITH.

GOOD WORDS.

Our family could not think of doing without the Cynosure.—REV. R. G. CAMPBELL, Dewitt, Iowa.

I am heartily in sympathy with the principles of the Cynosure. I hope the editor will set aside his "mush and milk" for supper and get one square meal once more.—S. C. KRETSINGER, Leaf River, Ill.

I want your paper. I must fight the devil.—REV. J. M. SNODGRASS, Dunlap, Kan.

Your paper is very welcome to our home, and trust I may be of some service to you and the cause.—J. H. C., Indianapolis, Ind.

A boy in one of the St. Louis German schools, while engaged in defining words, a few days since, made a mistake. He said: "A demagogue is a vessel that holds beer, wine, gin, whisky, or any kind of intoxicating liquor."

Henry Humphrey, a middle-aged graduate of Columbia College Law School, died from an epileptic fit caused by excessive drinking at the American House, New York. Ten years ago he inherited a fortune of $100,000, and he had scarcely drawn a sober breath since. He had squandered most of his fortune.

A GREAT AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

THE SUCCESS OF "THE CENTURY" AND ITS PLANS FOR 1891.

The Century magazine is now so well known that to tell of its past success seems almost an old story. The N. Y. Tribune has said that it and its companion, St. Nicholas for Young Folks, issued by the same house, "are read by every one person in thirty of the country's population,"—and large editions of both are sent beyond the seas. It is an interesting fact that a few years ago it was found that seven thousand copies of the Century went to Scotland,—quite a respectable edition in itself. The question in England is no longer "Who reads an American book?" but "Who does not see the American magazines?"

A few years ago the Century about doubled its circulation with the famous War Papers, by General Grant and others, adding many more readers later with the Lincoln History and Kennan's thrilling articles on the Siberian Exile System. One great feature of 1891 is to be

"THE GOLD HUNTERS OF CALIFORNIA," describing that remarkable movement to the gold fields in '49, in a series of richly illustrated articles written by survivors, including the narratives of men who went to California by the different routes, accounts of the gold discoveries, life in the mines, the work of the vigilance committees (by the chairman of the committees) etc., etc. General Fremont's last writing was done for this series. In November appears the opening article, "The First Emigrant train to California,"—crossing the Rockies in 1841,—by General Bidwell, a pioneer of pioneers. Thousands of American families who had some relative or friend among "the Argonauts of '49'" will be interested in these papers.

MANY OTHER GOOD THINGS ARE COMING,—the narrative of an American's travels through that unknown land Tibet (for 700 miles over ground never before trod by a white man); the experiences of escaping War-Prisoners; American Newspapers described by well-known journalists; accounts of the great Indian Fighters, Custer and others; personal anecdotes of Lincoln, by his private Secretaries; "The Faith Doctor," a novel by Edward Eggleston, with a wonderfully rich program of novelettes and stories by most of the leading writers, etc., etc.

It is also announced that the Century has purchased the right to print, before its appearance in France or any other country, extracts from advance sheets of the famous Talleyrand Memoirs, which have been secretly preserved for half a century—to be first given to the world through the pages of an American magazine. Europe is eagerly awaiting the publication of this personal history of Talleyrand—greatest of intriguers and diplomats.

The November Century begins the volume, and new subscribers should commence with that issue. The subscription price ($4.00) may be remitted directly to the publishers, The Century Co., 33 East 17th St., New York, or single copies may be purchased of any newsdealer. The publishers offer to send a free sample copy—a recent back number—to any one desiring it.

That Litte Tickling.

You have been cautioned many times to do something to get rid of that little tickling in your throat, which makes you cough once in a while and keeps you constantly clearing your throat. Your reply, "O, that's nothing," "It will get well of itself," etc., will not cure it, nor will the disease stand still; it will grow worse or better. This trouble arises from catarrh, and, as catarrh is a constitutional disease, the ordinary cough medicines all fail to hit the spot. What you need is a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla. Many people who have taken this medicine for scrofula, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, and other troubles, have been surprised that it should cure this troublesome cough. But to know the actual cause of the cough is to solve the mystery.

Probably nearly all cases of consumption could be traced back to the neglect of some such slight affection as this. The best authority on consumption, says that this disease can be controlled in its early stages, and the effect of Hood's Sarsaparilla in purifying the blood, building up the general health, and expelling the scrofula taint which is the cause of catarrh and consumption, has restored to perfect health many persons on whom this dreadful disease seemed to have a firm hold.

SHOULD THE BIBLE BE IN THE SCHOOLS?

Dr. Howard Crosby says: "No. Any form of religious teaching must have a sectarian character as against other forms. And, to that degree, such teaching in our public schools would be a violation of our national principle of religious liberty."

Now we wish to show that Dr. Crosby's assumption, that there can be no religion in a family, school, or State but sectarian religion, is a fearful and fatal mistake. He will, of course, agree with us that crime is not and must not be called "religion." Men threw children to Moloch, and women drown infants in the Ganges. But murder is not religion. Neither is the Mormon crime religion.

But when Christ said, Mark 12: 30, 31, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind," and "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," and when he said in Matt. 22: 40, "On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets," he taught the whole system of the Christian religion condensed. And those Scriptures could be read, with the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, with cognate passages, simply and absolutely without sectarianism. Dr. Crosby says a sincere Jew might demand the reading of the Talmud as properly as we the above Scriptures. Dr. Crosby is mistaken if he thinks an honest Hebrew would object to them. Joseph Stoltz, the Rabbi of a leading synagogue in Chicago, said the other day: "We honor Jesus. He taught supreme love to God exactly as Moses did." Moses and Christ taught the love of God and our neighbor in the same words; and Jews in Cincinnati sent their children to the public schools. To say that the supremacy of God and the equality of our neighbor cannot be read from the Bible without sectarianism is an absurdity contrary to reason, history, and the Bible itself. And yet it is the only semblance of argument which the rejectors of the Bible rely on.

Nor can even the Sadducees and atheists who deny there is any God, angels, spirits, or a future life for men—even they cannot consistently object to reading the Bible, or selections such as are read in Canada. They never object to the heathen classics which contains stories of > "God's partial, changeful, passionate, unjust, > Whose attributes are rage, revenge and lust."

Why should they object to the Bible?

In 1776 the American Declaration of Independence was an appeal to God and contains four recognitions of him. In 1787, nine years later, an ordinance was adopted for the government of the States northwest of the Ohio river, underlying, in the words of Webster, "all local laws and all local constitutions." Congress, while adopting it, was sitting side by side with the convention which framed the U. S. Constitution and manifestly had the cordial and reverent assent of both bodies. This great and irrepealable ordinance of '87, declares "religion, morality and knowledge" necessary to government. And Christ in two brief propositions teaches what religion was meant. Putting the Bible out of national schools, where children learn to read and write a vote, is putting religion out of the nation, by putting the supremacy of God out of the nation's manufactories of mind and thus robbing millions of poor children, who have no other means of getting just ideas of God and religion but the schools, of the knowledge most important to them, and to us.

This is not all, nor the worst. The men who are putting the Bible out of our schools avow, now, that they mean to put the schools out of existence and govern us by priests.

—It is stated that Secretary Dickinson, of the World's Fair Commission, has been deluged with letters and protests against the Sunday opening of the Fair. Every State in the Union is represented by these communications. It is believed that the opposition to Sunday opening will be the most formidable demonstration of its kind ever made in this country.

WAS IT SATAN OR SAMUEL?

The question has been often and earnestly discussed, whether Satan or Samuel appeared and answered Saul at Endor.

The Wesleyan Advocate strongly argues that Samuel was permitted to appear; that the witch was astonished and disappointed that her familiar spirit did not come at call; that Satan would not have spoken as the ghost did, telling Saul the truth, etc., etc.

That Satan personated Samuel is argued,

1. Because he came at the call of a witch or spirit medium, which Samuel was not likely to do.
2. That Satan counterfeits angels, and Samuel was now one.
3. That Satan is wont to taunt and torment those whom he has seduced.
4. That Balaam, who was a trance-preacher, medium, and diviner, spoke truth concerning Israel and predicted Christ; and God could as easily make this woman's familiar tell truth.
5. That Satan quoted Scripture to Christ.
6. And the very fact that Christian scholars are doubtful whether it was Samuel or Satan, marks this case as belonging to the class of modern spiritualism which Satan has so managed for forty years, that Christians are still divided in opinion whether the responses come from devils or not.
7. If Samuel came to Saul, why would he not come to us? And why not other good spirits as well?
8. Samuel was now "equal to the angels," as Christ told the Pharisees of the holy dead. And the angels are "sent forth to minister to the heirs of salvation," but not to give responses to spirit-consulters; nor is God wont to torment wicked apostates like Saul, while Satan is.

But whether the spectre was that of Samuel or Satan, the devil was the procuring cause of this case of spiritism, and the fall and despair and death of Saul. The manifest supernatural responses given, and the gloom that hangs over the whole transaction, with the fruitless disputes to which it has given, and still gives rise, all show its identity with modern spiritism; and that the present wide revival of the consultation of familiar spirits is to be referred to the activity of the devil in the last days, as "he knoweth he hath but a short time." Rev. 12: 12.

A TIME FOR COMMENT.

For two or three years the churches of the Evangelical Association have been distracted and riven by a quarrel that, so far as ordinary readers were informed, seemed to be of a personal nature. The church has two bishops, Bowman and Esher, who reside in this city. Bishop Esher has borne much of the obliquy arising from the controversy, the opposing leader being a former bishop, R. Dubs. This latter gentleman has well-developed fighting qualities, evidently, and has been able to make many believe his cause to be just. The Messenger of Cleveland is the English organ of the church, and its collegiate institution is Northwestern College at Naperville, near this city, over which the venerable and widely esteemed Dr. A. A. Smith was former president.

The traditions and standards of this church were against the lodge, although the question of opposing this organized rebellion against the Lord Jesus Christ has not been frequently raised in the Messenger. The objection made by Dubs to the Bishops relates, as we understand, to matters of administration; but in his ambition to divide and maintain his following he has clean gone over to the enemy of the church, and is bargaining with the devil for the support of the secret lodges.

Speaking lately in Albany, Oregon, his Masonic friends rallied to him, and he assured his audience that his "brother Knights" (Templars) had promised to stand by him. The Messenger writer reporting this, says, "We make no comment."

But comment ought to be made. If Dubs is a Freemason and Knight Templar, as his words indicate, his iniquity should be fearlessly exposed. The blasphemy and denial of Christ practiced in the lodge, and the use of heathen religious rites in strange worship, condemned in the strongest language by the Word of God, ought to place such a man under ban without delay. If this be the case, and it has been allowed by the churches of the Evangelical Association, they may truly regard the severe trials that have beset them as in the nature of a judgment, for not having exercised a godly discipline and taken forth the "precious from the vile" (Jer. 15: 19). Let the Bishops and the Messenger proclaim the Word of God against the secret abominations which may be found in their temples of worship, such as Ezekiel saw in the holy places of Jerusalem, and separate this modern worship of Tammuz (which is of the same nature, but with other names) from their communion, and we are confident they would find the Lord fulfilling his promise to receive and to bless with all the precious gifts of adoption. (2 Cor. 6: 14–18.)

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE WITH QUAKERS.

The first Friends' meeting I ever attended was in eastern New York in 1825.

Ten years later Joseph John Gurney's book on "The History, Authority and use of the Sabbath," was used as a text-book in Andover Theological Seminary. And no one of all the books written and read since, has impressed me like that little book. It ought to be republished at the present revival of the Sabbath discussion. In the words of Moses Stuart, who wrote a brief introduction, it shows that "The Sabbath is of perpetual obligation, and has been so from the beginning of the world."

This Joseph John Gurney was of a London banking house, an eminent Quaker preacher, and a recognized leader in the denomination. His brother, Samuel Gurney, whose guest I was in 1843, was a member of the Gurney banking house in London; and Elizabeth Fry, whom we Americans all visited, was sister of the Gurneys. She was known on both sides of the Atlantic, as the founder of prison reform. The first time she visited Newgate, she allowed the keepers to persuade her to lay by her watch and purse, lest she should be robbed by the inmates. She never laid them aside again. Old convicts and criminals who had been forsaken and forgotten by the outside world, amazed at the sight of the noble woman, melted by her care for them, and her Scripture readings and remarks, as well as convicted and enlightened by the Word of God, made the dark corridors of the old prison a Bochim for weeping aloud. Mr. Samuel Gurney was president of the first Atlantic Cable Company. Joseph Sturge, who was president of the World's Anti-Slavery Convention (the second one held), which had called us to London, was an eminent Friend. He took a furnished house, and made us all invited guests. In all the Quaker families who entertained us, and they were many, they invited us to vocal prayer, as well as silent; and the sweet and hallowed memories of those hours will attend us to the close of life.

My first lecture as an Abolitionist was given at Haddonfield, New Jersey, six miles out from Philadelphia. The house was assailed by a mob. One window of the house was dashed in and a storm of missiles thrown through the opening. By a window on the opposite side of the building, which was a large school house, the mob gathered, but some of the roughs objected to breaking this window, as a young Quaker mother sat by it with her infant on her arm. Others said, "——— the woman! Let her drive!" All this time, that young mother sat unmoved, in momentary danger, and the only visible effect on her was, that her face, like Stephen's in the council, glowed like that of an angel. Restrained from dashing the window in upon the babe, the mob attempted to raise the window and partially succeeded, when the young mother put her hand on the sash and held it down till the meeting ended. I was at the house of Lucretia Mott, when their daughter was married to Edward Davis. Sarah and Angelina Grimke were there from South Carolina, calm, clear, and transparent as inhabitants of a higher sphere. I spoke in Friends meeting houses in the States of Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana to New Garden, near Richmond, Indiana, where I stopped with the sainted Levi Coffin. And I slept with Salmon P. Chase, Senator Thomas Morris, the eloquent Thomas E. Thomas, with seventy other men, in Joseph Dugdale's stable loft at Green Plains, O., while the women of the convention occupied the houses of the Friends.

Will Edwin Sellew read these brief references to our intercourse with Friends Quakers, and see whether he thinks it possible for the Cynosure to say anything but good of them? J. B.

The American Sabbath Union earnestly repeats its requests for petitions from all classes of citizens to the World's Columbian Commission for closing the Exposition and omitting all work in it and for it on the Sabbath. It is neither too soon nor too late to press this vital question upon the Commissioners. Every petition ought to be in Chicago ready for their next meeting, whether action should be taken then or deferred. If postponed, let the petitions still come on. We have already received nearly four hundred petitions, representing many hundred of thousands of citizens, either over their own signature or by the organized bodies with which they are connected. The churches and religious bodies have spoken out decisively. Business men of the highest standing in Hartford, Lowell, Lynn, Binghamton, Philadelphia, New York and other cities are coming nobly to the rescue. Now let the stream of influence flow on, widening and deepening, towards the great city of the West. We shall be happy to receive and present all memorials and petitions that are sent us, and to advocate them by our representatives before the Commission. Address Rev. J. H. Knowles, D. D., General Secretary, the American Sabbath Union, 23 Park Row, New York.

Let every church, every society, every citizen that believes the Columbian Exposition should obey the laws of God and of our country, endorse the following or some other protest or petition, and send by mail to "Columbian Commision, Chicago, Ill.":

To the Columbian Commission:

The undersigned societies, churches, and citizens earnestly petition you to decide at once that the Columbian Exposition shall NOT, by Sunday opening of any department, increase the toil and traffic and turmoil of Chicago's Sunday, which its churches and workingmen alike are seeking to reform; shall not break the Sunday laws of Illinois and disregard the Sunday laws of the States, which both Commission and Exposition are expected to represent; shall not trample on the rights of conscience and the liberty to rest of the exhibitors and the army of employees whose powers will be taxed to the utmost in transporting and feeding visitors, and working the Exposition on other days; shall not, under the shallow plea of gratifying workingmen for a Sunday or two, help to destroy their Rest Day altogether; shall not proclaim to the world that since the Centennial our country has surrendered the American Sabbath, the most distinctive of American institutions, and enthroned in its place the Continental Sunday, "the holiday of despotism;" shall not endanger its own success in the country at large by outraging the Christian sentiments of the best citizens to gratify the miserly greed for gold and the prodigal greed for amusement and the infidel hatred of Christianity that together make most of the clamor for Sunday opening.

—The New England secretary has issued a second card invitation for a parlor meeting at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. David Powers, 218 Columbus Ave., Boston, on Monday evening the 17th inst. The subject for the evening was "The Lodge vs. the Home."

—A letter from Syracuse University, New York, says that the copy of the Cynosure in the reading-room of the institution "excites great interest." "No paper is read more." The librarian is a fraternity man, we learn, but puts public duty before personal relations or prejudices.

—The Washington Star says that the Masonic Grand Master of the District of Columbia made an official visit to one of the lodges the other night for a banquet, etc. Bishop John P. Newman of the M. E. church, who had much to do with General Grant, made an address on the occasion. What were the oaths he took in Masonry?

—A conference on the Past, Present, and Future of Israel will be held in the First M. E. Church, Clark and Washington streets, this city, Monday and Tuesday, Nov. 24 and 25. Among the speakers announced are Rev. Drs. Goodwin, J. M. Caldwell, Rabbis Joseph Stoltz and E. G. Hirsch and Professors H. M. Scott and D. C. Marquiss. Admittance will be free, and Israelites and Christians are cordially invited. Mr. W. E. Blackstone, an earnest missionary evangelist, is the promoter of the meeting. The announcement has aroused the Jews of the city to much hostile criticism.

—The Cynosure readers will not, we hope, suspect their paper of advocating the Christmas Romish-pagan festival, because of an advertisement of presents that may be used during the holidays. Let it suffice to say that it came to us under a contract, and, though it does not advocate Christmas, yet advertises it, we offered a considerable sum to be relieved of it. We are assured that the contents of the box are worth its cost, but that of course will not include sterling silver spoons, which would themselves be worth more. Solid spoons are simply not hollow.

PESONAL NOTES.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton College was for the second time chosen president of the State Sabbath Association of Illinois at its convention last week.

—Rev. H. W. Johnston of Freetown, Sierre Leone, writes Oct. 3 to the Wesleyan Methodist, of the baptism of six converts, and renewed activity in the work of reaching the natives with the Gospel.

—Rev. S. F. Porter reached Louisville safely last week to find darkness and storm over the city. He expects to visit the vicinity of Nicholasville in Kentucky, where he taught school in 1832, forty-eight years ago.

—A letter from Mrs. Hand of Dalton, Ga., informs us of the death of her husband, A. C. Hand, a warm-hearted worker for the N. C. A. and Christian reform. He was, with Mrs. Hand, a member of the corporate body and generously sustained its work.

—Rev. Thomas M. Chalmers, United Presbyterian pastor at North Hamden, has been compelled, because of ill health, to retire from active pastoral work during the winter season. Bro. Chalmers is a very earnest supporter of our work, and we much regret his disability.

—President H. W. Rogers, who has just assumed the charge of Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill., is a young man of 36, quite in contrast with the years of Dr. Cummings, his predecessor. He is put down in the Ann Arbor fraternity records as a member of two college secret societies.

—Bro. L. E. Lincoln, of Boston, is one of the faithful among men in maintaining his testimony against the lodge iniquity. He does not make public addresses on the subject, and so makes use of the press in issuing a modest one-page tract, in which he defends his position with great clearness and force.

—Rev. B. R. Jones of Michigan, appointed by the late General Conference as editor of the Free Methodist, entered upon his duties last week and gives his salutation in a courageous and hopeful spirit. May his labors for the churches of Jesus Christ be as useful in this position as those of his excellent predecessor, Superintendent Roberts.

—Rev. David Metheny, M. D., Senior Missionary of the Foreign Mission of the Reformed Presbyterian church, who addressed the April Conference on secret societies in Syria, was expecting to sail on Saturday, with his wife and family, in the steamer Aurania, for Liverpool, en route for his field in Cilicia. The headquarters of the Mission are at Mersine, Asia Minor. Dr. Metheny's health is much improved.

—Rev. Dr. James M. Sherwood, a well-known writer on theological subjects, received a stroke of paralysis while preaching to the congregation of Trinity Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, New York, on Friday night, Oct. 17, and died on the following Wednesday. He has been editor of the National Preacher, the Biblical Repository, the New York Evangelist and the Eclectic Magazine. In partnership with the Messrs. Scribner he started Hours at Home. At the time of his death he was editor of the Homiletic Review and also conducted the Missionary Review of the World. Dr. Sherwood is the author of two works, "The History of the Cross" and the Life of "John Brainerd."

—Henry M. Stanley, after giving his opening address in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, last week, left on Thursday for New Haven to deliver there the first of the long series of lectures for which he is booked under Maj. Pond's engagement. Monday evening of this week he will start off for Springfield, Mass., on the special car "Henry M. Stanley," in which he will travel across the continent and back, and North and South, and cover many more miles of territory than he did in "Darkest Africa." After starting off Monday he will have to deliver a lecture pretty nearly every night, except Sundays, until April 6, when the closing lecture of the tour will be delivered in New York.

A FAIR AND URGENT PROPOSAL FOR NEW ENGLAND.

Boston, Nov. 8th, 1890.

Mrs. Stoddard and myself have been laboring in New England ten months. Since July 1st our reliance for support has been upon offerings on the field, except subscriptions taken for the Cynosure, which the N. C. A. has generously given to the New England work. We have learned that not only is the opposition from 684 lodges in Boston hard to overcome; but that it costs money to live at the "Hub".

A few have given liberally and beyond what can justly be expected of them in the future, while many friends have not been heard from who might contribute more or less to the work, as the Lord has prospered them. More system and a more general co-operation in support of the work will be indispensable if it is to be continued. Mrs. Stoddard and myself were perfectly agreed to enter the work for one year, taking whatever came in answer to prayer and by the free-will offerings of friends, and we feel cheerful in giving our labor and over two hundred dollars to the cause. But friends will not ask this for another year, of any one who may be chosen to take the place, at the annual meeting. You are reasonable and conscientious men and women, and require simply to understand what the work needs, and the response will be in proportion to your ability and real heart interest in the cause.

My judgment is that there should be expended in New England, for the next year at least, fifty dollars per month in the publication and distribution of tracts. An agent cannot be expected to live in Boston, the natural center for New England, and respectably represent the cause at conventions, camp meetings, etc., for less than $1,200. Arrangements should be made to employ occasional workers for special occasions, and for expenses of the annual meeting, which would require perhaps an additional $400, making a total of $2,000 for the year.

This ought not to alarm any one, but rather to inspire every friend to pray and give with generous hand and joyful heart, that a sum no greater is asked. Really, $2,000 is a mere trifle for six wealthy States, if only the friends are in earnest. You have already anticipated the personal, practical question, viz., what will you, and you, and you give in weekly, monthly, or quarterly offerings towards making up this sum?

The practical way to answer this inquiry is, to write Miss E. E. Flagg at Wellesley, Mass., Cor. Sec'y N. E. C. A., stating what, by God's help, you will do. Will you be one of five hundred, or of one hundred, or of twenty, who will give as the Lord has given to you, to make up this sum for the New England work, from January 1st, 1891, to January 1st, 1892, and write before Dec. 15th next to your secretary, at Wellesley? If you will do this at once, plans for a year's campaign can be made at the annual meeting so as to economize means, and assure larger results. If you love the cause you can certainly write a postal card to your secretary, if you can do no more.

May your thoughts be established and your ways be directed and your souls be enlarged and enriched with the blessing in store for the cheerful giver. Your co-worker and fellow laborer in the precious faith of the Gospel of Jesus,

J. P. Stoddard.

It has been decided to hold the next anuual meeting of the New England Christian Association Dec. 16 and 17 next, in the lower chapel of Park Street Congregationalist church, Boston.

IOWA CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, is hereby called to meet in the Free Methodist church at Fairfield, Iowa, Tuesday, Dec. 2, at 2 P. M., to continue its sessions through the following day. Efforts will be made to secure some of the ablest speakers on the subject to address the convention. The committee hope to furnish free entertainment to all delegates. All churches and associations opposed to secret societies are urged to send delegates to this meeting.

THE HOME.

TWO OR THREE.

There were only two or three of us,
Who came to the place of prayer,
Came in the teeth of a driving storm,
But for that we did not care,
Since after our hymns of praise had risen,
And our earnest prayers were said,
The Master himself was present there,
And gave us the living bread.

We knew his look in our leader's face,
So rapt, and glad and free;
We felt his touch when our heads were bowed;
We heard his "Come to Me!"
Nobody saw him lift the latch,
And none unbarred the door;
But "Peace" was his token to every heart,
And how could we ask for more?

Each of us felt the load of sin
From the weary shoulder fall;
Each of us dropped the load of care,
And the grief that was like a pall;
And over our spirits a blessed calm
Swept in from the jasper sea,
And strength was ours from toil and strife
In the days that were thence to be.

It was only a handful gathered in
To the little place of prayer;
Outside were struggle and pain and sin,
But the Lord himself was there;
He came to redeem the pledge he gave—
Wherever his loved ones be,
To stand himself in the midst of them,
Though they count but two or three.

And forth we fared in the bitter rain,
And our hearts had grown so warm,
It seemed like the pelting of summer flowers,
And not like the crash of a storm.
"'Twas a time of the dearest privilege
Of the Lord's right hand," we said,
As we thought how Jesus himself had come
To feed us with living bread.

—Margaret E. Sangster.

MAKE THE SUNDAY A LORD'S DAY.

AN APPEAL TO CHRISTIANS.

All great ideas are like souls—they need embodiment. The spiritual equality of man finds expression in the church where "rich and poor meet together," acknowledging that "the Lord is the Maker of them all." Underneath the old Sabbath institution was the idea of God's claim on man first because he had created, and second because he had redeemed, him. These two ideas were underneath the Hebrew Sabbath. If the Hebrew Sabbath were, as many believe, only the incorporation into Hebrew life of an ante-Hebrew institution common to the race, the same ideas must have been in that pre-Judaic institution. The same ideas are underneath the Christian's Lord's Day. It is associated with the life and health of the church. It is conceivable that a church could exist without a set and fixed Lord's Day, but not in robust health. Voltaire was awake when he said, "If you want to weaken the church, destroy the Sabbath."

In our day the idea of freedom, as of all ideas the noblest and the most American, higher than the idea of law and order, has gradually imported into the Lord's Day idea a feeling as if it were a restraint upon legitimate enjoyments and legitimate employments. Even Christian people do not think intelligently enough, or feel profoundly enough, to recognize the tender and considerate humanity which is in Sabbath rest for all, even apart from the worship which belongs to a Lord's Day. If it is to be a day for the home and the church, if it is to be preserved at all, Christians must preserve it. Other men will use it for dissipation. The Shylocks of society will steal it away from poor, ignorant men, if the voice of the Christian church gives any uncertain sound on its universality. The grip of Mammon on the throat of our modern civilization will strangle it, if the Christian church is recreant to its trust.

The "dangerous classes" are not the abject poor, or even the vicious whom we can shut up in State prisons. The dangerous classes are those who do not recognize those great universal rights and necessities which belong to men as men. The men out of whose souls all spiritual vision has gone, and with it all true human feeling, all consideration for others, who live only "to enjoy themselves," and to make money at the cost of the soul life of the ignorant, the necessitous, and poor—these are, more than all others, the dangerous classes. To them the Sabbath is a nuisance—an interruption. They do not recognize that, on grounds of simple humanity, the legislature is called upon to give us a labor-free day. That is all any legislature can do. The Christian church must then do its utmost and best to make the rest day a Lord's Day.

If Christians would think a little more profoundly and broadly, they would never use the day for simple pleasure, even innocent and legitimate pleasure, but keep it for church and home. They would not, with the Sunday newspaper, import as much of outside worldliness into it as possible. The Sunday newspaper exists simply for making money. It has no other reason for its existence than the desire of men to add dollar to dollar. It is one of the latest forms of Mammon's attack upon the restfulness of Sunday. If the members of our Christian congregations would religiously let it alone, it would be better for them in every way. "The most irreligious and demoralizing influence," said a country minister to me last summer, "that has ever come into this town, is the Sunday newspaper." Of course, anybody who so asserts is immediately put down as a bigot. Are there no Mammonist bigots? Mammonistic bigotry is more heartless than any form of religious bigotry. The religious bigot does want to raise men—the Mammonistic bigot wants only to fill his own pocket. Personally, I do not admire bigotry of any kind; but, of all bigotry, that which tramples on all old-time reverences, for the sake of making money, is the cruelest and worst. Christianity has done nothing for us worth doing if it has not made us thoughtful, humane, considerate of others, and especially of those whose time is not at their own free disposal. We must not so use our rightful liberty as to enslave others. There are many things we have the right to do, but so to use our rights as to trample on the rights of others can hardly be justifiable in the light of that revelation which requires us to love our neighbor as ourself.

If ever there was a time in which Sabbath rest was needed, it is in these days of hungry avarice and keen competition. If ever there was a race which needed one day in seven totally changed from business and secularity, it is this ardent, nervous American race of ours. When secular men are petitioning governments for a compulsory rest day, ought not Christians to be more deeply and more unselfishly interested in making the rest day a Lord's Day? When our great Teacher said to his disciples, "Ye are the light OF THE WORLD, ye are the salt OF THE EARTH," did he or did he not suggest that they were to be leaders in thought and in action in regard to great questions affecting the race of men? From thoughtlessness and unwillingness to deny themselves comparatively trifling indulgences, such as the Sunday ride for pleasure, and the Sunday newspaper, Christian people not only lose influence, but actually promote inhumanity, Sunday dissipation and Mammonism.

The question at issue cannot be narrowed to this, What wrong can it do me? That is but a selfish question. Jesus Christ came to teach us of our relation to himself and to others. How can I most truly make the rest day for man a Lord's Day? Experience says by devoting it to the home and the church, and for such uses as will bring brightness and cheer to the sick and sorrowing. Sunday ought to bring inspiration and elevation into our life. It ought to be filled with all for which creation and redemption stand. If Christian disciples do not preserve this sacred trust to the world, it will be lost, and with it will go much else—more than is seen at present.—By Rev. Reuben Thomas, D. D., in the Interior.

THE SABBATH-SCHOOL.

There is a spot surpassing sweet,
By Sovereign kindness given,
Where old and young together meet,
And sit them down at Jesus' feet,
And learn the way to heaven.

The little prattler stops his play
On Saturday at even,
And on the peaceful Sabbath-day
He comes with joy to learn the way
That leads to bliss and heaven.

The stalwart youth, his toils forgot
One peaceful day of seven,
Retires to this delightful spot
To banish earth and spend a thought
Upon the things of heaven.

The man of toil, with care oppressed,
Who all the week has striven,
Comes, with a calm and cheerful breast,
To think of joys and dream of rest
The weary find in heaven.

The hoary veteran, on the brink
Of life's concluding even,
Retires from busy life to think
Within this spot, the brightest link
Between the earth and heaven.

Ho! ye who in Siloam's pool
Have washed and been forgiven,
Come ye, till every seat is full,
And grace shall make the Sabbath-school
The very gate to heaven.

LITTLE SCOTCH GRANITE.

Burt and Johnny Lee were delighted when their Scotch cousin came to live with them. He was little, but bright and full of fun. He could tell curious things about his home in Scotland and his voyage across the ocean. He was as far advanced in his studies as they were, and the first day he went to school they thought him very good. He wasted no time in play when he should have been studying, and he advanced finely. At night, before close of the school, teacher called the roll, and the boys began to answer, "Ten." When Willie understood that he was to say ten, if he had not whispered during the day, he replied, "I have whispered."

"More than once?" asked the teacher.

"Yes, sir," answered Willie.

"As many as ten times?"

"Maybe I have," faltered Willie.

"Then I shall mark you zero," said the teacher, sternly; "and that is a great disgrace."

"Why, I did not see you whisper once," said Johnny that night after school.

"Well, I did," said Willie; "I saw others doing it, and so I asked to borrow a book; then I lent a slate pencil, and asked a boy for a knife, and did several things. I supposed it was allowed."

"Oh, we all do it," said Burt, reddening. "There isn't any sense in the old rule; and nobody could keep it; nobody does."

"I will, or else I will say I have not," said Willie. "Do you suppose I would tell ten lies in one heap?"

"Oh, we don't call them lies," muttered Johnnie. "There wouldn't be a credit among us at night, if we were so strict."

"What of that, if you told the truth," laughed Willie, bravely.

In a short time, the boys all saw how it was with him. He studied hard, played with all his might in playtime; but, according to his account, he lost more credits than any of the rest. After some weeks, the boys answered "nine," "eight," oftener than they used to. Yet the school-room seemed to have grown quieter. Sometimes when Willie Grant's mark was even lower than usual, the teacher would smile peculiarly, but said no more of disgrace. Willie never preached to them or told tales; but somehow it made the boys ashamed of themselves just the seeing that this sturdy, blue-eyed boy must tell the truth. It was putting the clean cloth by the half soiled one, you see, and they felt like cheats and story-tellers. They talked him all over, and loved him, if they did nick-name him "Scotch Granite," he was so firm about a promise.

Well, at the close of the term, Willie's name was very low down on the credit list. When it was read he had hard work not to cry; for he was very sensitive, and he had tried hard to be perfect. But the very last thing that day was a speech by the teacher, who told of once seeing a man muffled up in a cloak. He was passing him without a look, when he was told the man was General ——, the great hero.

"The signs of his rank were hidden, but the hero was there just the same," said the teacher. "And now, boys, you will see what I mean when I give the medal to the most faithful boy—the one really the most conscientiously perfect in his deportment among you. Who shall have it?"

"Little Granite!" shouted the forty boys at once; for the child whose name was so "low" on the credit list had made truth noble in their eyes. —The British Evangelist.

TEMPERANCE.

NEW ENGLAND TESTIMONIES.

A correspondent in the Transcript who signs himself "Layman," complains bitterly that so large a portion of the ministers, in the Methodist church especially, are identified with the Prohibitionists, and not only lecture, but advance third party views from the pulpit; and states that it is becoming a barrier to their usefulness in their legitimate work. It seemed to me that this charge was the most honoring to the New England ministry that could be made, and it gives me fresh encouragement to believe that the day will soon come when they will take an equally firm stand against the lodge. A Gospel that has no reform in it is a poor article to convert men. He who preaches Christ so that tried and tempted souls know where to go for help, is the successful preacher. I was much impressed at our New Hampshire Convention by the testimony of a brother who for fifty years had used tobacco, and yet been cured of the habit completely by the power of Christ. A similar testimony is given in the Notes and Queries column of the Transcript, in reply to an inquiry for something which would take away an appetite for the weed. The writer, who was so addicted to it as to smoke twelve strong cigars in one day, tried to leave it off several times, but ineffectually. He says, however, that one evening about seventeen years ago he was in Dr. Gordon's vestry at a prayer meeting, and a reformed man in a seat near him rose to tell his experience. During his remarks he said, "Jim asked me if I thought a man could smoke or chew tobacco and be a Christian, and I told him I did not know, but I could not believe that Jesus Christ would have any filthy Christians near him." "From that moment," he adds, "all desire for smoking left me and has never returned." Christ, and he alone, is strong enough to deliver men from the grasp of rum, tobacco and the lodge. Hallelujah to his name forever! E. E. FLAGG.

LIQUOR DRINKING.

Hon. Chauncey M. Depew will scarcely be accused of fanaticism on the question of liquor drinking. Here is his experience as stated in a speech of his before a company of railroad men:

"Twenty-five years ago I knew every man, woman, and child in Peekskill. And it has been a study to me to mark boys who started in every grade of life with myself, to see what has become of them. I was up last fall, and began to count them over, and it was an instructive exhibit. Some of them became clerks, merchants, manufacturers, lawyers and doctors. It is remarkable that everyone of those that drank are dead; not one living of my age. Barring a few who were taken off by sickness; every one who proved a wreck and wrecked his family, did it from rum and no other cause. Of those who were Christians, who were steady, industrious, hard-working men, who were frugal and thrifty, every single one of them, without an exception, owns the house in which he lives, and has something laid by, the interest on which, with his house, would carry him through many a rainy day. When a man becomes debased with gambling, rum, or drink, he doesn't care; all his finer feelings are crowded out. The poor women at home are the ones who suffer—suffer in their tenderest emotions; suffer in their affections for those whom they love better than life."—Educator.

MURDERED BY HER BROTHER.

MITCHELL, Ind., Nov. 11.—Miss Mary Eubanks, daughter of M. Eubanks, a tailor, died this morning from the effect of blows on the head inflicted by her brother, Bee Eubanks. On Sunday evening the woman was sent out by her father and brother from lack of money to trade a bottle for whisky. Being unable to do so she remarked that she was afraid to go home lest she should be killed. She did go home, and soon after the sound of blows was heard and she was heard to cry out, "You're killing me! You're killing me!" Yesterday morning when one of her brothers called a physician, saying that his sister had taken an overdose of morphine and whisky, the physician found her lying on the floor in convulsions. She never regained consciousness, but lingered until this morning, when she died. An examination showed a fracture of the skull and several contusions of the brain, with bruises over the body. The inquest developed the fact that Bee Eubanks had beaten his sister to death with a whisky jug. Bee Eubanks has been sent to Bedford jail, but the father has not yet been arrested.

THANKSGIVING PIES.

"They all put brandy into them," said one.

"They all don't. My mother has never put a drop of brandy into her mince-pies since the day Bob said he could taste the brandy and it tasted good. Mother said then it was wrong, and she never would be guilty of it again. And if mother says a thing is wrong, you may be sure it is wrong; for what mother knows, she knows."

"How about mince-pies? Are you sure she knows how to make pies good?" and a laugh went up from a group of girls gathering around a register of the recitation-room, eating their lunch.

But some of them winced a little, when back were tossed these words: "If she doesn't, she knows how to make a boy good; and isn't a boy worth more than a mince-pie?"

SURROUNDED BY SALOONS.

Governor Taylor has received from the people of Cumberland Gap, Tenn., a map showing the location of sixteen saloons within about one mile of that town, two of them being in Kentucky and fourteen in Virginia; also locating the spots adjacent thereto where fifteen men have been shot within the last few months. None of the saloons are on this side of the line, but five of the murders have occurred in Tennessee. The people of that section have decided to present the facts to the governors of Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia and ask their help in suppressing the lawlessness there.

The African Lakes Company absolutely refuses to have anything to do with the sale of intoxicants to the natives. The British South African Company is co-operating with the Lakes Company in this, and the English seeing the injurious effects of the rum trade are restricting it in their colonies.

The Pope has been ordered to drink beer instead of wine, and a quantity of bottles have been ordered from Vienna. It seems that the Pope's beer is to be prepared differently from the ordinary German beer. The Austrians are reported to be in high glee at the honor of thus providing for the Pope's table.

Mme. Blavatsky, the high priestess of theosophy, consumes sixty cigarettes every day. In her smoking tray she has a jar of gum arabic, with which she pastes the regular sheets of rice paper together, thus making the theosophical cigarette twice as long as the ordinary article. She uses the choicest brands of Turkish tobacco, and rolls them all herself.

It is said there has never been a fight or a quarrel, and that there are no punishments in the Soldiers' Home at Chelsea, Mass. The reason given for this is that no liquors are allowed on the premises, and if a man gets drunk when off on leave for a day he does not easily get permission to go again. If he gets drunk for a third time he is discharged from the Home.

THE HOME.

TWO OR THREE.

There were only two or three of us,
Who came to the place of prayer,
Came in the teeth of a driving storm,
But for that we did not care,
Since after our hymns of praise had risen,
And our earnest prayers were said,
The Master himself was present there,
And gave us the living bread.

We knew his look in our leader's face,
So rapt, and glad and free;
We felt his touch when our heads were bowed;
We heard his "Come to Me!"
Nobody saw him lift the latch,
And none unbarred the door;
But "Peace" was his token to every heart,
And how could we ask for more?

Each of us felt the load of sin
From the weary shoulder fall;
Each of us dropped the load of care,
And the grief that was like a pall;
And over our spirits a blessed calm
Swept in from the jasper sea,
And strength was ours from toil and strife
In the days that were thence to be.

It was only a handful gathered in
To the little place of prayer;
Outside were struggle and pain and sin,
But the Lord himself was there;
He came to redeem the pledge he gave—
Wherever his loved ones be,
To stand himself in the midst of them,
Though they count but two or three.

And forth we fared in the bitter rain,
And our hearts had grown so warm,
It seemed like the pelting of summer flowers,
And not like the crash of a storm.
"'Twas a time of the dearest privilege
Of the Lord's right hand," we said,
As we thought how Jesus himself had come
To feed us with living bread.
